

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

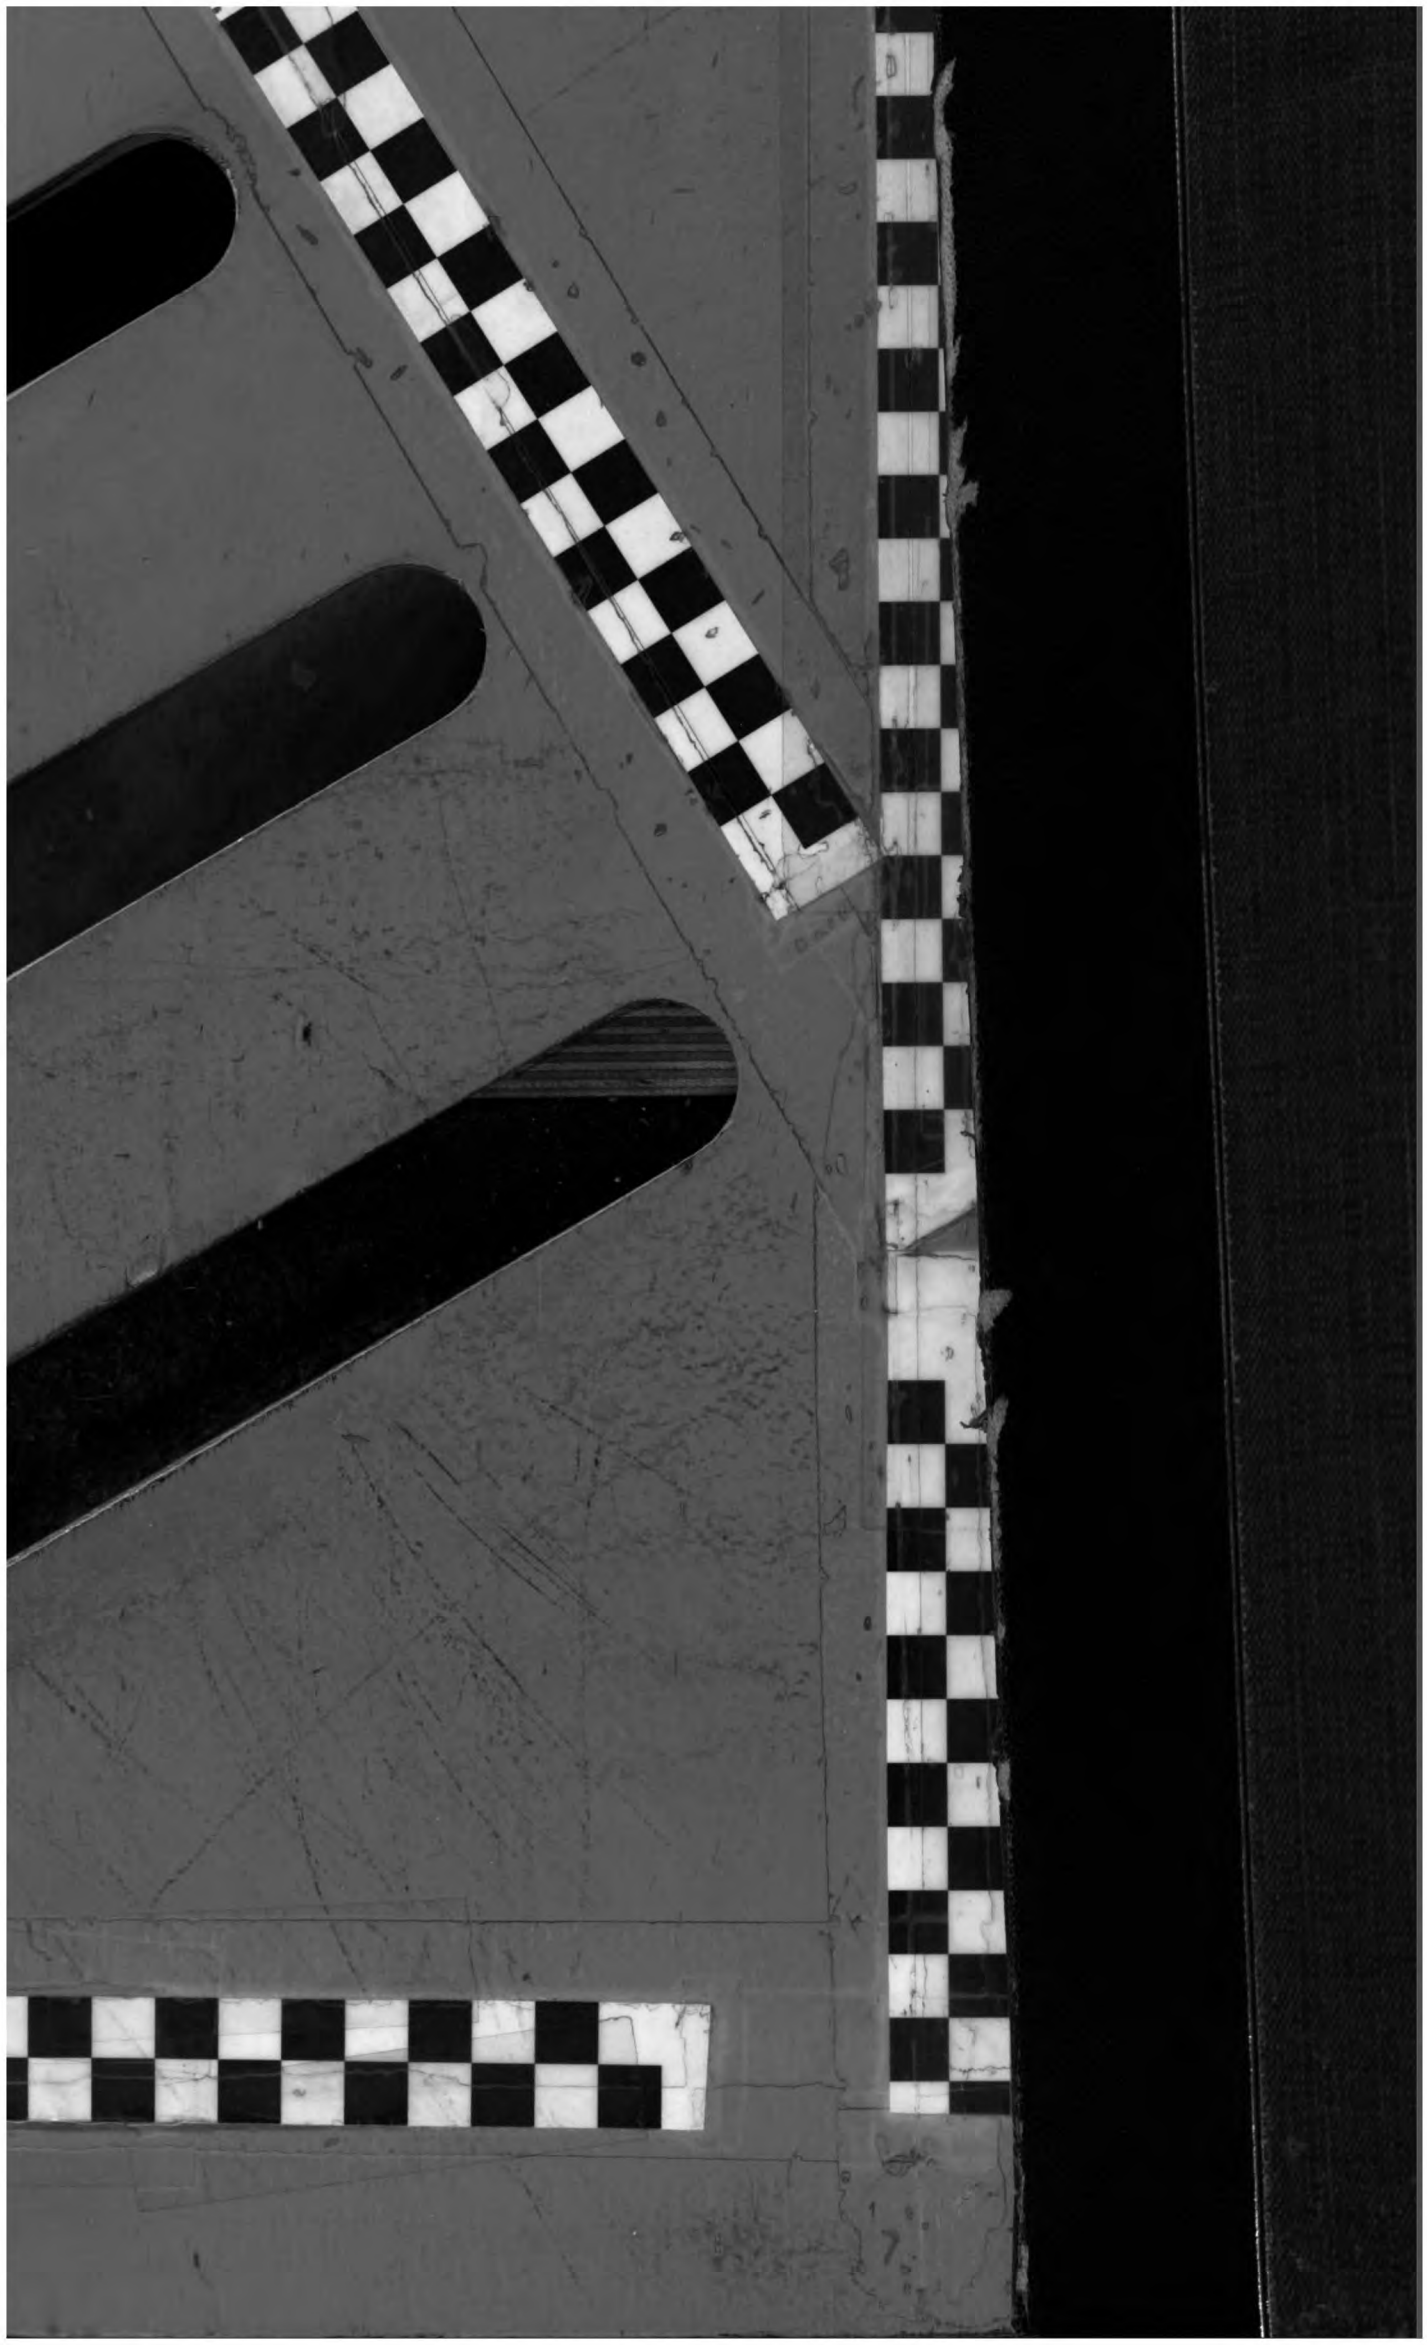
Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

+ Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.

+ Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.

+ Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.

+ Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.



Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1880.

Politically and socially, we seem to be entering upon a fresh era both of trial and of development. The latter, indeed, presupposes the former. No unfolding of the principles of human action, more emphatically of such as are sound and, therefore, reasonable, can take place until the impediments which have previously obstructed it have been surmounted, or, at any rate, pushed aside. Conflict is, in every age, the pioneer of right. It clears away, imperfectly at first, the difficulties which either prevent or unduly retard the progress of truth, both in theory and in practice. We are now engaged in solving problems with a view to immediate practical results, the remoter consequences of which, upon what is called civilisation, few persons have seriously considered. Both in Parliament and out of it decisions enwrapping a germinant potency are being arrived at, not blindly it is true, but with scant foresight of what, in natural and inevitable sequence, they will ultimately grow to.

Take, for instance, the Bradlaugh case in the House of Commons. Drop the Hon. Member's name; forget the antecedents and the associations which it carries with it; forgive the mistakes which have been made by the Representative Branch of the Legislature in its attempts to deal with it; and accept, as far as may be necessary, the superior wisdom of many who have been wise after the event; Say, if you will, that the House of Commons has got itself into an undignified as well as a perplexing position, and that the way out of it suggested by the Government—although, perhaps, the only outlet from it which now presents itself—is neither satisfactory nor permanently adequate. We will not discuss these points. To our mind, the main question at issue is one of almost inconceivable importance. In essence, it is this—whether at all, or, if at all, how far, political authority should lay its hand of repression upon speculative opinion, or upon the free expression thereof. It is an old topic, a worn-out controversy, but under several guises, and we may say disguises, this is the question which has been hotly debated in the House of Commons of late. The issue is, happily, predestined. It may not take its perfect shape this Session, or next. It may exhibit, for some time to come, scars of the conflict through which it has passed. But, spite of all controvening circumstances, the principle of uniform and universal tolerance in reference to speculative conclusions, is making visible headway, and promises, like an incoming tide, notwithstanding all temporary fluctuations, to reach the measure of its capacity, not in this country only, but in all the civilised States of the World.

There is another matter which is now attracting notice in the Lower House—one of extreme difficulty and delicacy, as well as one of fundamental moment. It has sprung up in connection with the Irish Relief Bill introduced by Mr. W. E. Forster. It touches the rights of property, the inviolability of contracts, and the equal obligation of all subjects of the Realm to share impartially and proportionably the public burdens of the State. Mr. W. E. Forster has proposed that in certain specified districts of Ireland, in which more than ordinary distress prevails, and for a certain specified time, the County Court Judge of the District shall be empowered, in such cases as he may deem necessary, to allot compensation to tenants who may have been evicted by their landlords for non-payment of rent. This is an extension of the provisions of the Land Act, carried by Mr. Gladstone in 1870, to cases not then in contemplation by the Government, or the Legislature. "Necessity," it has been said, "knows no law," and absolute necessity is presupposed as the condition for such an indulgence to tenants as the temporary suspension of the present law dealing with compensation for eviction. Well, undoubtedly, the preservation of life must be regarded as a permanent consideration. If it cannot be secured by any other means than that proposed, such means will have to be sanctioned, and rightly sanctioned. But is it so? Are there not two sides to a question of this order? Are there not other creditors in Ireland besides those who let land? Might not the burden occasioned by necessity be more fairly adjusted by distributing the weight of it more impartially? We confess we are not yet in a position to give any categorical reply to such queries. They belong to that larger question of Land Tenure with which the present Government is pledged to deal hereafter. We note only how it has been forced to the surface, and, perhaps, it may be fairly contended that it is inexpedient, if it be not immediately necessary, to introduce any branch of the larger subject into a measure professedly intended to cope only with passing, even though with very pressing, difficulties. But, be this as it may, it is clear from what has already occurred that we are advancing towards the practical settlement of principles on which the well-being, not of agriculturists merely, but of all other classes of the community, will mainly depend.

Ten years ago, it will be remembered, society was rent in twain by a passionate discussion of the question of religious teaching in rate-aided Schools. Practically, the matter has all but settled itself. We are reminded of it now by the centenary of the founding of the Sunday School system by Mr. Raikes, of Gloucester. The celebrations which have taken place during the week look to the past, and they compel observant and reflecting men to forecast the future. The Sunday School system, whilst, as a grain of mustard seed, the least of all seeds, is now as a tree in the branches of which the birds take shelter. It sprang up with almost unexampled rapidity. Within less than half a century it prevailed over the whole kingdom. It is, as has been well said, a voluntary system of lay religious teaching. It is very imperfect, no doubt, but it has proved marvellously potential. One of the fruits of it has been the National System of Elementary Education. But the week-day school has not superseded the proper use of the Sunday School. We may almost affirm that it has suggested it. The secular part of teaching is now done effectually by Board Schools and Denominational Schools—the former supported in part by rates, and the latter in part by grants from the Exchequer. But religious teaching is the appropriate work in Sunday Schools, and it may now be more efficiently given than ever it was before. Until lately, it was subsidiary only; now it has become of main importance, it cannot well be dispensed with, and its outlook reaches forward into the far future. It was fitting that the modest founding of the system a hundred years ago should receive a hearty commemoration; and such, we think we may say, it has had. Into what it may hereafter develop we refrain from speculating. Its bicentenary will, doubtless, witness important modifications both in the structure and in the uses of Sunday Schools. They cannot, however, but be beneficial; and if, during the coming century, they achieve results at all proportionate to those which they have effected in that which is gone by, the name of Raikes will evoke blessings as fervent as any which philanthropy has earned for itself in other walks of life.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

What a delightful thing it is not to be compelled—in this place at least—to write about politics! What an infinitely more delightful thing it would be to have no politics at all. At all events, under the last-named blissful dispensation, one could go out to dinner in peace. As things move, at present party politics altogether poison prandial enjoyment. I tried to be as Conservative as I could last Saturday; and I found myself sitting between a stout old gentleman who looked a Tory to his very eyebrows, but who turned out to be a vehement advocate of the Extension of the County Franchise, Church Disestablishment, and the Hare and Rabbits Bill; while my next neighbour on the other side was a charming young lady who was a thoroughgoing Bradlaughite, and, moreover, passionately protested against the erection of the Prince Imperial monument in the Abbey. On the following Monday, at an Advanced Liberal dinner party, I thought that, politically, I was quite safe; but, alas! the gentleman on my left was a Protectionist, a Game Preserver, and an Anti-Educationalist; and the lady on my right was a Jingo.

On the whole, I scarcely think that I can recall a time when political exacerbation in polite society had reached so intense a degree as it has done to-day. You are not allowed to be neutral. You are forced to take sides. It has come to the complexion of "Under which King, Bezonian? Speak, or die." "And what do you call yourself, Sir?" asked the other day an austere dame as she surveyed me through her gold-rimmed double eye-glasses. I answered humbly that I was content to be called a Miserable Wretch. But the austere dame was not satisfied. She wanted a more definite expression of opinion, touching, we will say, the Berlin Conference, the expulsion of the Jesuits from France, or the Albanian League.

No political issues are, it is to be hoped, involved in an avowal of sorrow that the French Carthusians are, as well as the Jesuits, threatened with expulsion from France. Who that has visited the "Escorial of Dauphiné," and has been a guest of the good Fathers of La Grande Chartreuse by Grenoble, will refrain from mildly lamenting the hard fate which may soon drive the not only harmless, but useful followers of San Bruno from their historic domicile? What does the Protestant Gray say of them in his "Letters:"—"There are certain scenes that would awe an atheist into belief without the help of other arguments. I am well persuaded that San Bruno was a man of no common genius to choose such a place for his retirement."

And then, think of that inestimable liqueur, that unsurpassed cordial, Chartreuse! Forty years ago the Monks of St. Bruno, who had been ruined root and branch at the First Revolution, were miserably poor. Even so late as 1858 the Editor of Murray considered the "Elixir des Chartreux" to be so great a rarity in London as to warrant his mentioning in a foot-note to his account of the monastery a single shop in Piccadilly where the cordial could be obtained. At present the worthy Fathers are deriving a very handsome revenue from the liqueur which they manufacture. They might come to England and set up their oratory and their distillery in our midst, you may say. But I have heard that perfection in the concoction of Chartreuse—the green variety, at least—is attained by the admixture of a certain secret ingredient, a herb which is only known to grow on the mountains which dominate Grenoble.

Advocates of the cause of total abstinence will be highly interested, and as highly edified, by the perusal of a bright little volume called "Illustrious Abstainers," written by Mr. Frederick Sherlock. The book (Hodder and Stoughton) is now in its third thousand. It is refreshing to find enumerated among the Illustrious abstainers such famous personages as Sir Garnet Wolseley, President Hayes, Sir Henry Thompson, Dr. Benjamin Richardson, Sir Henry Havelock, Elihu Burritt, and John Howard. In two or three instances, Mr. Frederick Sherlock proves too much. Was John Milton a total abstainer? In the matter of strong drink he was certainly temperate; but he was addicted to the pleasures of the table; and a short time before his death he explicitly told the last Mrs. Milton that he intended to make his will in her favour because she cooked such very nice dinners for him.

Dr. Johnson is also claimed as a total abstainer. This is altogether a mistake. The Doctor seldom drank wine; but when he did he drank it greedily. He was a punch-drinker, too, upon occasion. What reader of Boswell or Macaulay does not remember the Doctor's jovial inquiry, "Who's for poonch?" Finally, Mr. Sherlock seems to think that Benjamin Franklin was throughout his life a total abstainer because that eminent natural philosopher and teacher of "mean morals" used, when he was a journeyman printer in England, to drink water-gruel instead of beer, in order to save a little money out of his wages. When he grew rich, he became remarkably fond of good living; and some interesting information on this head will be found in the current number of the Edinburgh Review. All the three "Illustrious Abstainers," not very felicitously cited by Mr. Sherlock, were, occasionally, heavy feeders; and among the total abstainers—I do not say the abstinent persons—whom I have known, I have found many who, while they drank nothing stronger than water, were addicted to the selfish, sensual, and heart-hardening vice of gluttony.

In re "the Sweet, Shady side of Pall-mall," I am enabled, for the further information of "Upper Gloucester-place," and through the kindness of my correspondent "E. W.," Worcester, to state that a book which should certainly be in print, entitled "Two Centuries of Song," compiled by the late Walter Thornbury (London: Sampson Low, Son, and Marston), contains two pieces by Captain Morris, one of them being the sweet, shady side of Pall-mall lyric.

It is well known that American schoolboys and schoolgirls are, as a rule, treated with extreme tenderness by their teachers, and that corporal punishment of any kind is almost non-existent in the schools of the United States. From time to time, however, one does hear of some freak of correctional eccentricity on the part of an American schoolmistress. Mr. Wendell Phillips once related a story of a Spartan-like "school-marm" who used to administer the bastinado à la Turque on the soles of her pupils' feet; another was wont to hold refractory boys in an inverted position and pour cold water down the legs of their pantaloons; and one positively cruel instructress of youth was prosecuted, to my own knowledge, in a town in one of the Eastern States, for forcing a talkative girl to chew bitter aloes.

But for an eccentric, bizarre, and (as a magistrate has lately decided) illegal punishment, commend me to the case of an assistant teacher at a Board School in Bermondsey, who was summoned to Southwark Police Court for assaulting a very little girl by strapping up her mouth with adhesive plaster. The offence of the tiny culprit was analogous to that committed by her small fellow-sufferer on the other side of the Atlantic. The defence was that it was only a small strip of plaster which was placed on the child's lips; that she was not hurt, and played about afterwards as if nothing had happened; but her father stated before the magistrate that the child came home crying, and was very sick. It is not at all unlikely that a nervous child might have been frightened into a fit by such a strange infliction. I dare say that the school teacher meant no harm; and the magistrate seems to have thought as much when he bound her over to keep the peace for twelve months instead of fining her for her thoughtless and manifestly illegal conduct. For you will remember that the Bill of Rights deprecates not only cruel but "unusual" punishments.

Mem.: The adhesive plaster case, its illegality excepted, was but a bagatelle. It is, nevertheless, undeniable that during the last week or ten days the newspapers have teemed with reports of the most revolting acts of barbarity committed on small children. Not all these cases were scholastic ones; some of the instances of cruelty were of a domestic nature; but it is additionally unpleasant to notice that in almost every case of child-torturing the torturer was—in sex, at least—a woman. It would seem that the evil spirits of Elizabeth Brownrigge and Esther Hibner are not yet laid; indeed, to judge from the sickening details of the atrocities wreaked on the puny inmates of more than one so-called "orphanage," Brownriggism would appear to have been revived—and with a vengeance.

Whether corporal punishment will ever altogether be abandoned in schools, and whether parents will ever be persuaded that about the worst way in which they can correct their children is to beat them, I am sure that I don't know. I do know that I (with inestimably kind help, many years ago) brought up a little boy from the age of eighteen months to the age of seventeen without ever spoiling or ever laying a finger upon him; but some guardians of youth may not have had such good fortune as I experienced. But I also know that I should be ashamed now, when my grown-up little boy comes to dinner, to sit opposite to him if I had to remember that, when he was a weak young child and I a hale strong man, I had abused my strength by beating him. It is impossible to predict what may be the eventual solution of a most perplexing social dilemma: the more perplexing when it is remembered that many good and wise people are in favour of the bodily chastisement of children. Yet thus much might be done, perhaps, to simplify the problem. No one, surely, will maintain that it can be justifiable to hit a child on the head—before, perhaps, the very sutures of its skull are completely joined; and blows on the head are one of the commonest forms of school barbarity. I would make such blows an aggravated assault, and punish it accordingly.

"Atlas" of the World has pained and shocked me by an announcement that the pressure on his space is so great, and so continually increasing, that he is regretfully compelled to restrict his French Editor to the propounding of his French Puzzles once a fortnight instead of once a week. Hélas! "Atlas" avails himself of the opportunity to thank his distinguished French colleague for the untiring zeal with which he has discharged his duties. "Of his brilliance and learning," adds "Atlas," enthusiastically, "there is no occasion to speak: they are self evident." Yes; they are self evident. Yet it was scarcely kind, my "Atlas," thus rudely to cut down our hebdomadal pabulum of brilliancy and learning to a a fortnightly one. The Terrible Man was to me meat and drink—board, lodging, and washing. He was my stay, my holdfast, "my hope, my joy, my Geneviève." Stop, stop! I must not "gush." I am speaking of the truncated French editor, and not of Miss Geneviève Ward in "Forget-me-Not." I can assure the erudite gentleman that I am one of his humblest and sincerest admirers; although I was about to ask him what astounding misapprehension of the idomatic capacity of the English language gave him lately the hardihood to ask his disciples to translate "donneur d'eau bénite" into English. He himself translates this phrase as "a giver of blank promises" which is not idiomatic English at all. "Man in the Moon" or "Clerk of the Cheque" would have done quite as well.

"C. E. T.," writing from Stratford-upon-Avon, observes that he is sorry to see that I have joined the "parrot cry" against Lord Elgin, as a "ruthless devastator," and that his Lordship is the rather entitled to universal gratitude, seeing that he was the means of rescuing the bas-reliefs of the Parthenon from contingent destruction. Canova declared that Lord Elgin deserved to have an altar erected to him as a saviour of the arts. But Parliament hesitated for a long time before granting the funds to purchase the spoils which, by virtue of a Turkish firman, Lord Elgin had collected at Athens. The fact is that, between 1802 and 1816, in which last-named year the booty torn from the Acropolis reached this country, very few people dreamed that Greece would ever be free from Ottoman rule; and as for the Turks of that epoch, I only wonder that they did not make the British Ambassador at the Sublime Porte a present of the Temple of Theseus and the Choragic monument of Lysicrates, as well of as much of the Parthenon bas-reliefs as he could carry off.

Mem.: It is strange that a plea for desecration should come from Stratford-upon-Avon. Is there not a Tomb in the collegiate church there of which the occupant invokes a Curse on him who moves his bones? The Acropolis of Athens is, so to speak, the Sepulchre of Phidias, and the stones of the Parthenon are his bones.

The controversy respecting artists' colours and artists' colourmen, of which brief mention has been made in former "Echoes," seems to have flown off at a tangent and to have assumed something of the guise of a personal passage at arms between Mr. Holman Hunt and Mr. John Rogers Herbert, R.A. Admiring the genius of both artists, and specially revering as I do the character of Mr. Herbert, I hope that they have by this time cleared up their little misunderstanding, and that they will continue to be as good friends as ever.

Meanwhile, to young artists who may be liable through the too amply supplied palettes of Long-acre and Rathbone-place to be induced to use a superfluity of "flaming colours" in their pictures, I would respectfully commend the perusal of old Gerard de Lairesse's "Art of Painting in all its Branches," published in 1738. I have Gerard, in a fat little quarto, embellished with scores of quaint plates. His directions for flesh-painting are sweetly simple. Says Gerard, through his translator into English, John Frederick Fritsch,

> Now, in order to strike the right colour for each, take these:—For a Child, White and Vermilion, it being pretty Ruddy; for a Man, the same, with the addition of a little Yellow Oker, which makes it more Warm, and also more Fiery; for a Woman, take White, a little Vermilion, and Yellow Oker. And to know perfectly the proper Tint of the Tenderness of these Three Persons, you must, in Finishing, take your Smalt or Ultramarine, alone, and with soft Fitch scumble your Blue over the most Tender parts of your Figure, so that it lie Soft and Transparent.

Mr. Thackeray was very fond of what he used to term "painters' cookery books," and would gravely describe some exquisitely beautiful bit of natural scenery from the purely technical or artists' colourman's point of view. "Too much of the palette knife in that sky," he would say. "Very poor glazing of that foliage in the foreground," "middle-distance wants scumbling down," and so forth.

Mem.: Whence "Scumble"? It is not in Worcester's Webster. I find it in the "Library Dictionary" defined as "the art of glazing or covering with a semi-opaque colour on neutral tint portions of a painting so as to soften and subdue the original colour." The definition is inaccurate, to begin with. Glazing is one process, and scumbling another. The "Library Dictionary" (without, it would appear, the etymologist giving himself much trouble) says that "scumble" is the diminutive of "scum." In that case, whence the "b"? Do we "skimble" milk or "trimble" sails or "jamble" our fingers in doors? Perhaps our ancestors used to do so, four hundred years ago; and to be enlightened on this point I humbly look to the philologers. Still, considering the fact that "scumble" is, to all appearance, a purely studio term, and that much of the technology of the theatrical painting-room is the legacy of the Italian decorative artists who so abounded in England during the eighteenth century, it is just possible that "scumble" may have something to do with the Italian "scombavare" to rub over with saliva, or "scombujare" to disperse, scatter, or loosen. But I wait, with fear and trembling, for the philologers.

There was a Lord Mayor's chaplain who, some fifty years ago—rather more than less I opine—wrote a wonderfully although involuntarily diverting book describing the progress of the Chief Magistrate of the City of London to Oxford. It is one of the cheeriest and most innocent pieces of bombast that I ever read: but there are some things which you can never remember at the exact moment of your wanting them; and I cannot recollect either the name of the author or the Mayoralty during which the visit to Oxford took place. Still I can distinctly recall an inimitably ludicrous account of the brave appearance of the Lord Mayor's carriage at the door of the Mansion House on the morning of the beginning of the expedition, and how the horses pawed and snorted and champed the bit as though proudly conscious of the august load which they were destined to draw.

I happened to be passing through Garrick-street, Covent-garden, at about half-past one last Sunday afternoon. A handsome four-in-hand was standing in front of the Garrick Club; and the long-forgotten narrative of the Lord Mayor's chaplain rose up before me, clear and palpable, as I watched the four noble steeds—"prads" they used to be called in the old coaching days—pawing and snorting and champing the bit, precisely as their ancestors did at the Mansion House half a century since. Was the coach that I saw at the Garrick also destined to carry Cæsar and his fortunes? After a while I saw about a dozen gentlemen emerge from the club and clamber to the summit of the drag; and among them, with dilated pupils, hair on end, and knees shaking under me, I recognised Mr. Henry Irving, Mr. John L. Toole, Mr. Dion Boucicault, Mr. S. Bancroft, Mr. Kendal, Mr. Hare, the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, Mr. Wyndham, and Mr. John M'Culloch, the renowned American tragedian. The others were, in all probability, Dukes—they looked so awe-inspiring, and yet so affable. The coachman mounted his box, and gathered up his "ribbons." The guard forbore to wind his horn—was it not Sunday?—and away went these salt ones of the earth into the ewigkeit.

No; scarcely so far as that. I took some lessons in the art of "interviewing" lately, in the United States; and, late that Sunday night, I crept round to Garrick-street again, and "interviewed"—never mind whom. But I learned from "an unimpeachable authority," as our own Correspondent at Berlin is wont to say when he wires home to his paper some canard which was printed in the Doppeldummerkopfer Zeitung seven days before, that the handsome four-in-hand was the Dorking coach, which had been specially chartered for the day to convey Mr. Irving and his friends to the pleasant country town where, at the sign of the "Marquis of Granby," the elder Mr. Weller so satisfactorily settled his long-standing account with the Rev. Mr. Stiggins, and where the famous Battle, which was never fought, took place.

I was told, also, that these august personages dined in great state at the White Horse Hotel, Dorking, and that their conversation (this I had the next day from the head waiter, whom I sought by early train) was superb. Mr. Irving was great on the Eastern Question; but seemed slightly to deprecate the cession of so large a part of Thessaly and Epirus to the Greeks. Mr. Dion Boucicault took up finance, and had some sharp things to say concerning Mr. Gladstone's budget. Mr. Bancroft minutely analysed the phenomena of Russian Nihilism, and eventually came to the conclusion (similar to his well-known expression of opinion in "Caste") that Nihilism amounted to Nothing; and, in a few curt but incisive sentences, Mr. Toole disposed of the Bradlaugh case. Beshrew the Bradlaugh case! G. A. S.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, June 29.

The other day the Municipal Council of Paris gravely discussed the question of the advisability of engraving in the stone the words "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité," which are now inscribed in black paint on the walls of the public buildings. It has been suggested that, before arriving at a decision, the worthy councillors would do well to give to the Third Republic some motto more in harmony with its actual tendencies, such, for instance, as "Nopces et Festins." It is, indeed, a fact that never, even in the palmiest days of the Empire, were there more festivals and junketings than there are at present. In fact, the Third Republic, before arriving at its apotheosis which will take place on the occasion of the grand National Fete on July 14, has passed through several stages. It began in strife and bloodshed, the last traces of which will be cleared away by the Amnesty; then came the Republic of pure politics, the Republic of ennui, which tried to introduce an austerity of manners and bearing little in harmony with the French, and especially with the Parisian character. M. Gambetta, with his usual perspicacity, invented a mixed kind of Republic, which he dubbed with the name of Athenian, and, finally, we have arrived at the period of the Republic qui s'amuse. From the highest to the lowest ranks of society there is nothing but rejoicings and fêtes, nopces et festins. One of the strangest manifestations of this spirit of what Rabelais would call haute liesse—as we might say, "high jinks"—is the space given by the Republican and Radical press to the doings of the aristocracy. A Duchess or a Countess cannot buy a new dress without the workingmen of Paris and the bourgeois of the Marais being informed of the fact through the medium of the newspapers, and never have Princes been more esteemed than under the Republic of 1880. There is a perfect rage for society news, and when the fiddles are silent at Paris the reporters telegraph their echoes from Vichy and Deauville. It is thus that we learn that marriages in the world of high life are still frequent, and that Mdlle. Marie Blanc, the daughter of the famous Blanc of Monaco and Monte-Carlo, is shortly to be married to Prince Roland Bonaparte, a young Lieutenant in the French army, who has only his sword, while his future bride has an income of £30,000 a year, the proceeds of rouge et noir and trente et quarante. Prince Roland is a very estimable young man who, in his tastes, is said to take after his grandfather, Prince Canino. Another item of society news is that Lady Caithness and her son, the Duke de Pomar, of "Passion and Fashion" celebrity, intend to take up their abode in Paris, at the Hôtel Pozzo di Borgo, which the Duchess Pozzo di Borgo rendered famous by her fêtes twenty years ago. Lady Caithness promises wonderful fêtes for next winter. Nopces et Festins.

The transition from the Republic qui s'amuse to the Republic of politics is easy. The great questions of the hour are that of the Amnesty and that of the Expulsion of the Jesuits. The Senate met in its bureaux yesterday to nominate a commission to report on the Amnesty bill, and if the Senate voted in conformity with its bureaux the Amnesty bill would certainly be rejected, for only three out of the nine members of the commission are favourable to the bill. In the voting yesterday, however, there were fifty-three members absent, so that no certain prevision can be formed. Should the Senate, however, reject the bill and repeat the manœuvre which it made on the occasion of the famous Article 7, its existence would be menaced. Upper Chambers have never been popular in France, and if the present Senate becomes a mere instrument of obstruction it will certainly be abolished.

The Amnesty commission met this afternoon for the first time under the presidency of M. Jules Simon, and separated after an animated discussion without arriving at any conclusion. M. Jules Simon is strongly opposed to the Amnesty, and the commission is amenable to his influence. The report will probably be laid on the table of the House in time for the discussion to begin next week.

As regards the Jesuits, not much can be said at the time that I am now writing. To-night, at midnight, expires the delay of three months granted by the decrees of March 29 to non-authorised congregations to present their demands for legalisation, and to the Jesuits for the dissolution of their society in France. To-morrow, at noon, all the establishments of the Jesuits in France will be closed, except the schools, which will be allowed to remain open until Aug. 31. It appears that the Jesuits will allow themselves to be expelled only after having protested by all legal means, but nothing is known as to the exact intentions of the Government in putting its decrees into execution. Some few Jesuits have assumed the simple priest's robe and taken private apartments, some few have already left the country. The order has further bought the Hôtel Impérial, at Saint-Heliers, Jersey, and an adjoining property, for the whole of which 700,000f. have been paid. After having dissolved the Jesuit societies, the Government will have to expel the 383 remaining congregations of monks and nuns. A remarkable proof of the ascendancy of the Jesuits, who are directing the entire religious struggle against the Republic, is the fact that not one of these congregations has answered the appeal of the Government and asked to be authorised. Some few of these societies have already left the country; others are waiting, like the Jesuits, to see what will be done to them. Another proof of Jesuit influence is the resignation of some fifteen or twenty high magistrates and law officers of the Republic on the eve of the execution of the decrees. These gentlemen, who have waited three months before protesting against decrees which were passed on March 29, have certainly patient consciences. In short, feeling in the matter runs high, and all are looking forward with anxiety to what to-morrow will bring forth.

I find in a French paper that up to the present day the Jesuits have been expelled forty-two times. They were driven from Saragossa in 1555, La Valteline 1566, Vienna 1563, Avignon 1570, Antwerp 1578, Segovia 1578, Portugal 1578, England 1579 and again in 1581 and 1586, Japan 1587, Hungary 1588, Transylvania 1588, Bordeaux 1589, France 1594, Holland 1596, Tournon 1597, Bearn 1597, England 1601 and 1604, Dantzick 1606, Thorn 1606, Venice 1606 and 1612, Japan 1613, Bohemia 1618, Moravia 1619, Naples 1622, Low Countries 1622, China 1622, Indies 1622, Malta 1634, Russia 1676, Savoy 1729, Spain 1759, Portugal 1767, Two Sicilies 1768, Duchy of Parma and Malta 1768, Rome 1773, all Christendom 1773, Russia 1823. From the above statement it would appear that they have a faculty of coming back, like Marlbrook, à Pâques ou à la Trinité.

The return of the Communist leaders will be celebrated by the founding of more new newspapers. Henri Rochefort will publish the Intransigeant, Jules Vallès the Cri du Peuple, and Felix Pyat will revive Le Combat.

Prince Orloff arrived in Paris last night.

On Friday last the Civil Tribunal of the Seine gave judgment in the case of the Comédie-Française v. Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt. The recalcitrant actress was condemned to the loss of all her rights and privileges as a Sociétaire of the Comédie-Française; to pay damages to the amount of 100,000f.; and to pay the expenses of the lawsuit. Amongst the "rights" which she loses must be reckoned the contributions to the pension fund, fonds des pensions, amounting to not far short of 50,000f.

On Monday next a new piece by M. Paul Delair, entitled "Garin," will be played at the Théâtre Français. The plot of the piece is laid in the old feudal times, and reminds one very strongly of "Macbeth." The author even has frequent recourse to Banquo's ghost. The piece, which is in verse, will be played by MM. Maubant, Mounet-Sully, Volny, Mesdames Favart, Reichemberg, and others.

The novel of the week is "Inès Parker," in which Mario Uchard, the author of "Fiammina," gives a study of an American "flirt" from a French point of view. It is a clever and interesting novel. Apropos of books, I may announce that the widow of Michelet will shortly publish two important fragments of her late husband, "Les Grandes Journées" and "La Fédération."

Sarah Bernhardt is irrepressible; her name will persist in coming under my pen. They were gossiping at the Comédie-Française the other night, and somebody, referring to the eccentric villa which she has had built at Sainte-Adresse on the Normandy coast, called her "Doña Sol Normande." Et cependant elle n'est pas faite aux moules," added Thiron, who has a cruel wit.

MR. BRADLAUGH AND THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The extraordinary scene in the House on Wednesday of last week affords the subject of more than one Illustration in our present Number. The attitude of the inconvenient member for Northampton, as he stood at the Bar, pleading for his right to be allowed to perform the legal ceremony required in order to taking his seat, is portrayed in one of the Sketches presented on the front page. The "bar" is a sliding horizontal rod of brass, which upon such rare occasions is drawn across the entrance to the privileged floor. His subsequent arrest by the Serjeant-at-Arms, for disobedience to the order of the House which had enjoined him to withdraw, is represented in the larger Engraving, which occupies two pages of this sheet. To the left-hand side of this Engraving appears the Treasury Bench, with Mr. Gladstone and other Ministers seated in their places there. The room in the Clock Tower of the Palace of Westminster, where prisoners in custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms are confined, and which Mr. Bradlaugh occupied till his liberation next day, accompanied by one or both his two daughters, is also shown among these sketches. The room is one of the ordinary upper chambers of that Gothic edifice, plainly but commodiously furnished; only the window is barred. Mr. Bradlaugh is seen writing at a desk, while Miss Bradlaugh is at the tea-table, preparing to give him a cup of tea; his private secretary or literary assistant is at another desk working. Portraits of the hon. member himself, of Major Gosset, the Serjeant-at-Arms, and of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff and Mr. H. Chaplin, who took leading parts in the Parliamentary resistance to his admission to the ordinary privileges of membership, will be found in this publication. Our readers will be aware, probably, of the course of events since the period of last week to which our former notice extended.

At the sitting of the House on the Thursday afternoon Sir Stafford Northcote, having first asked Mr. Gladstone whether the Government had any motion to make concerning Mr. Bradlaugh, which was answered in the negative, moved the discharge of Mr. Bradlaugh from custody. Mr. Labouchere thought it right to state that he understood it was Mr. Bradlaugh's intention, if he were released, at once to return to the House, and to do what he had a legal right to do—what it was his duty to do. Mr. Labouchere added that the Prime Minister and his colleagues and the present and late Attorney-General considered this to be Mr. Bradlaugh's legal right. An appeal was therefore made by Mr. Gorst to the Prime Minister, to say whether such was indeed his opinion. Mr. Gladstone replied that he should draw a distinction between those proceedings of Mr. Bradlaugh which were necessary to establish his legal rights, as he judged them to be, and his later proceedings, which were unconnected with those rights. By declining to withdraw, in the first instance, at the Speaker's order, so that physical force, by a gentle manual pressure, had to be applied to secure his removal, Mr. Bradlaugh did all that was necessary towards the assertion of his legal right. But the action of insisting, again and again, upon presenting himself and pressing his entrance into the House, seemed to stand in a different category. With this answer from Mr. Gladstone, the discussion ended; the motion for Mr. Bradlaugh's release was agreed to, and he was immediately set at liberty. Mr. Ashton Dilke was the first person to enter his prison-chamber and convey to him the intelligence that he was set free. Mr. Bradlaugh went to the House of Commons shortly afterwards, but contented himself with a seat under the Peers' Gallery for a quarter of an hour that evening.

The arrest of Mr. Bradlaugh excited great indignation in the town which had elected him. An outdoor meeting of six thousand persons was held on the Thursday evening in the Market-square, three of the town councillors taking part in it, and decided resolutions were passed. The Birmingham Liberal Association prepared at once to take up the question. Meetings were held on Saturday or Monday in several of the great provincial towns of England. In London also a committee had been formed to demand the immediate release of Mr. Bradlaugh, and, further, to demand that he should be allowed to take his seat. Mr. Bradlaugh showed himself on Monday evening to a large assemblage in Trafalgar-square, and said a few words, in which he warmly commended Mr. Gladstone for his disposition to do justice in this case.

As the colleague of Mr. Bradlaugh in the representation of Northampton, Mr. H. D. Labouchere had given notice that he would, on Tuesday of this week, move for leave to bring in a bill to amend the law with respect to the affirmations or the oath to be taken by members of the House of Commons. But Mr. Gladstone on Monday gave notice of his own intention to propose a resolution, for a standing order of the House, permitting any member who claims it to make an affirmation, instead of taking an oath, notwithstanding the resolution lately passed that Mr. Bradlaugh shall not be so permitted. The resolution proposed by Mr. Gladstone has a retrospective effect, and virtually rescinds, to that extent, so far as concerns the affirmation, the unfortunate and unjustifiable resolution that was passed on the 22nd ult. It still remains possible that the legality of Mr. Bradlaugh, not being a Quaker, making an affirmation instead of the oath of allegiance, might be tried in a court of law, by some common informer suing for the penalty of £500 imposed by statute upon every person who votes or speaks in Parliament without taking the oath.

Natural caverns of enormous size—one being 600 ft. long—have been discovered within the last few days in the neighbourhood of West Harptree, near Wells, in Somerset.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

I happened to mention quite incidentally, "in another place," a week or two since, that I had never seen Mr. Henry Irving in Shylock. I have never willingly missed the first night of the appearance of this admirable artist in a fresh character; but at the time when his Shylock was the talk of the town I was some thousands of miles away, and more intent on studying the merchandise of the Mississippi than the Merchant of Venice. Not until the beginning of this week did I atone for my involuntary sin of omission. Seeing that it was the two hundred and twenty-fourth representation of the Lyceum Shylock which I witnessed, it may appear not only audacious but ridiculous that I should set down here what I thought of the acting of Mr. Irving as Shylock and of Miss Ellen Terry as Portia. I am, however, emboldened to undertake such a task by the remembrance that Leigh Hunt (pardon me for innocently and momentarily coupling so distinguished a dramatic critic as my humble self) when he emerged from his two years' imprisonment for libelling the Prince Regent, calmly began to make up for lost time by criticising all the plays and all the players that had become noteworthy during his twenty-four months' incarceration in Horsemonger-lane Gaol.

The first question I apprehend which a dramatic student has to ask himself when he sees a new Shylock is that which, if I remember aright, Macklin asked when first he saw Garrick in the part named—

> Is this the Jew
> That Shakspeare drew?

Although no trustworthy tradition has been handed down to us of the manner of Jew depicted in Shakspeare's Shylock, it is tolerably certain that in the claimant to the pound of flesh he did not draw that highly risible personage popularly known as "the comic Sheeny." Shakspeare wrote long before the days when pickled cucumbers, fried fish, "stuffed monkey," and old clothes were dear to the Hebrew heart in Petticoat-lane, Bevis Marks, and Goodman's-fields. The Elizabethan London had no Ghetto. For nearly three centuries the Jews had been banished from England. The abject, squalid, illiterate Jew, with his imperfect pronunciation of English and his antic gestures—the "Fagin" Jew, in short—was thus wholly unknown to the poet; yet I may say that I have seen at least a score of Shylocks represented by English actors of repute, who, so far as their aspect, gestures, and diction went, might have walked bodily out of George Cruikshank's etching, in which Fagin is embodied frying sausages, while his juvenile pupils are engaged in picking the marks out of the stolen pocket-handkerchiefs; and the equally well-known portrait of Fagin in the condemned cell has often been taken as a model for a host of Shylocks, as the Jew appears after the collapse in the trial scene. If Shakspeare never came in contact with the Continental Jew, and especially with the Italian Jew of his time, he must have drawn him only as an insatiably rapacious and merciless usurer, and as one, moreover, who retaliated by deep malignity and vindictiveness for the loathing and contempt with which he was systematically regarded by the Christians, among whom he was a Pariah and an outcast.

But if Shakespeare was ever in Italy, and if he ever sojourned at Venice—and who shall say with certainty that he never made such a pilgrimage?—he might have drawn such a Jew as Mr. Irving presents us with at the Lyceum: not a squalid, fawning, servile Israelite, but a Venetian Jew—a Jew of the stock of which the illustrious Venetian patriot Daniel Manin came—proud of his lineage, well read in the learning of his tribe, reserved, dignified, passionate in his domestic affections, a fast friend to the people of his race—witness his evident fondness for Tubal—but who is imbued with a fixed and mortal hatred towards Christians, fostered by the systematic scorn and contumely with which he and his brethren are treated by the dominant caste. But, homo duplex. There are two Shylocks. He is the greediest of money-grubbers. His daughter and his ducats (as Mr. Irving expresses with inimitable force, eloquence, and pathos) divide his love; and his aversion for the Nazarites, on religious and social grounds, is rendered more intense by his strictly business-like enmity to a merchant who, like Antonio, lends out money without interest. All these mingled feelings are merged into one absorbing and predominant passion of monstrous and bloodthirsty Revenge when both his ducats and his daughter have been stolen from him. But mark the exquisite subtlety, and at the same time the consistency, of the character as it is portrayed by Mr. Irving. When the cup of revenge has been dashed from his lips, and he finds himself a baffled and beggared defendant, in peril of his life, instead of a triumphant plaintiff, with his suit gained and his knife at Antonio's heart, he becomes once more the self-contained and composed Jewish merchant. The Court may frown, the spectators may howl and spit at him; but he has not lost one iota of his self-respect and the knowledge that he has been cleverly juggled out of his horrible rights. In the whole range of dramatic action there is perhaps no more difficult exit than that of Shylock after he has declared that he is content to sign a deed, in which he renounces his faith and agrees to give his riches at his death to his ungrateful daughter and her husband. He is too physically overwhelmed to sign the document then and there; he prays that it may be sent after him for signature; but, as he is shown to us by Mr. Irving, he does not crawl, or slink, or shuffle out of court. He gathers up his gaberdine, and departs in impassible dignity, withering, with a look of silent scorn, the ribald Gratiano. You hear the mob without yelling at him as he crosses the Ponte della Paglia and makes his way towards the Ghetto; but you have no idea that he will falter or sue for the forbearance of the rabble. He is vanquished, but not cowed. If this be the kind of Jew that Shakspeare drew, Mr. Henry Irving has drawn him to the life.

It is quite beyond my purpose here to describe the frame of the picture so wonderfully presented at the Lyceum, or to criticise the attendant and subordinate characters which surround the central figures; yet, in common justice, I must take brief note of the great improvement which has taken place in the Portia of Miss Ellen Terry since I saw that accomplished young lady play the part at the Prince of Wales's Theatre. It was then, as it is now, a most delicate and delightful performance; nor could even hypercriticism demand anything better than Miss Terry's acting in the scenes of the caskets. The silent agony—the agony too great for tears—which she suffers during the dreadful moments of suspense, her fears lest the only man she has ever loved should not choose the right casket, and her radiant and exultant joy when she finds that he has chosen it, were and are a triumph of intense artistic study and appreciativeness; but it was in the Trial Scene at the Prince of Wales's that I thought Miss Terry left just a little to be desired—that her elocution lacked the necessary firmness and aplomb, and that she reminded the spectator too frequently of the graceful, tender lady of Belmont, who had just, like Coleridge's heroine, "told her love with virgin pride," and too rarely of the learned young Doctor Balthazar of Rome, the protégé of the most eminent jurisconsult in Padua. These shortcomings at the Prince of Wales's have wholly disappeared at the Lyceum. Miss Terry's Portia disguised as Balthazar is irreproachably forensic; her elocution is matured and enriched by study and practice; her enunciation is distinct; and her delivery of the famous speech on "Mercy" is simply superb.

The midsummer holidays are not yet over, so I should very strongly counsel Paterfamilias and Materfamilias to take Miss Ethel and Miss Edith, Master Tommy and Master Jackey, and, indeed, all their olive-branches and all their pretty cousins, to see the "Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Theatre Royal, New Sadler's Wells. I saw the immortal féerie last Tuesday, and I intend to see it again shortly. Fathers and mothers were present in large numbers; and, in addition to them and the olive-branches, I was glad to see a strong contingent of clergymen in the stalls and the dress circle. The whole "plant," dramatis personæ, dresses, and decorations of the "Midsummer Night's Dream," as originally produced by Mr. Edward Saker at the Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, has been transferred from the shores of the Mersey to the neighbourhood of the New River, and I should say with prospects of brilliant success in the metropolis. The poem is magnificently and tastefully put on the stage, and it is enough to say that the music comprises the whole of Mendelssohn's beautiful compositions as written for the "Dream," together with selections from Henry Bishop, Charles Horne, and other classic lyrists who have illustrated the poem, which above all other works of Shakspeare lends itself in the highest degree to musical interpretation. Mr. Brunton's scenery is very splendid, and the dances, arranged by Miss Sarah Gunniss, are effectively participated in by that talented artiste and her sisters.

Oberon and Titania, Puck and all the fairy train are capitally played and sung, by children instead of adults. Little Miss Addie Blanche's Puck is one of the most graceful, intelligent, and humorous performances that I have seen for a long time. Miss Rosa Kenney is the Hermia, and sustains the part with sweetness and grace a rivederla! But I am going to the "Wells" again, and shall have more to say about a most intellectual, innocent, and rational entertainment.

Mr. Joseph Hatton made a bold and novel experiment—and, as it proved, a brilliantly successful one—in reciting at Steinway Hall a dramatic version of his deservedly popular novel, "The Queen of Bohemia." A numerous and fashionable audience testified by frequent and cordial applause their appreciation of a most vivacious and picturesque reading, to which additional interest was lent by that charming vocalist, Mrs. Osgood, who, in the reception scene in the third act, sang with great effect Mr. Cowen's "The Better Land" and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "My dearest Heart." MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The production of an Italian version of Hérold's "Le Pré aux Clercs" took place on Saturday last. The opera was originally brought out at the Paris Opéra Comique, in December, 1832, a year and a half after "Zampa," these being the best known and most popular of all the works of the composer, who died about a year and a half after the success of the opera now referred to had seemed to open for him a long career of prosperity. The music of "Le Pré aux Clercs," if never very powerful or strongly individual, is full of bright melody, always lively and piquant in its rhythm, and invariably refined and graceful in style, while being thoroughly French in manner. The character of Isabella was sustained with great success on Saturday by Madame Albani, who gave the Romance, "Souvenirs du jeune age" with charming grace, and the grand air "Jours de mon enfance" with brilliant vocalisation; the violin obbligato accompanying the latter having been finely played by Mr. Carrodus. In other instances—including the Trio "Vous me disiez," for Isabella, the Queen, and Cantarelli, and that in the third act, "C'en est fait" for Isabella, the Queen, and Mergy—Madame Albani sang with great effect. The music belonging to the character of Nicette was very brightly rendered by Mdlle. Valleria, who was thoroughly efficient in the effective duet with Girot, "Les rendezvous;" and other concerted pieces—having given the pretty rondo "A la fleur du bel âge," with much grace. Mdlle. Pasqua, as the Queen, also sang well, both in the concerted music and in the air "Je suis prisonnière." Hérold's bright and florid music is scarcely suited to M. Engel, who, however, gained much applause for his delivery of Mergy's air "O ma tendre amie." M. Gailhard, as Girot, acted and sang like a true artist; the co-operation of Signor Cotogni as Cantarelli, and of Signor I. Corsi as Cominge, having been of value to the general effect. Subordinate characters were filled by Signori Scolara, Ughetti, Manfredi, and others.

The stage effects—costumes, scenery, and ballet-action—were splendid. The Masquerade scene was a special feature, and included the clever dancing of the three Mdlles. Reuters. The charming dance music of Hérold in this situation has been supplemented by some commonplace interpolations that are very antagonistic to the general effect.

Madame Sembrich achieved another great success on Thursday week by her brilliant singing as Amina in "La Sonnambula;" a result that was repeated on Tuesday. Signor Vianesi conducted on both the occasions referred to.

This (Saturday) evening M. Jules Cohen's "Estella" is to be produced, with Madame Patti in the principal character. The season is to end on July 17.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

There is nothing fresh to record of this establishment. "La Forza del Destino" was given for the second time on Thursday week, and Madame Swift was again favourably received in her performance as Leonora de Vargas.

On Thursday last Madame Gerster was to appear, for the first time this season, as Amina in "La Sonnambula"—and this (Saturday) evening Signor Boito's "Mefistofele" is to be produced, for the first time in England.

THE TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.

But little remains to be added to our last week's notice of this great celebration, which closed on the Friday with the usual climax, "Israel in Egypt," the grand series of choruses in which—for single and double choir—are peculiarly suited for performances on so vast a scale and in so enormous a space. The occasion again exemplified the rare excellence of the chorus-singing at this festival, which has scarcely been equalled at any of the previous celebrations. In several instances the effect was of the most stupendous and sublime kind. Among the specially impressive choruses were the opening lament, "And the children of Israel," "He spake the word," "He gave them hailstones" (encored), "He sent a thick darkness," "But the waters overwhelmed," "Thy right hand, O Lord," and the triumphant climax, "The horse and his rider." The solo music of "Israel" is comparatively unimportant. The principal soprano music was brightly rendered by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams having been a good second in the duet, "The Lord is my strength," besides giving the solo passage leading to the final chorus. The contralto music was expressively sung by Madame Patey, that for tenor having been assigned to Mr. E. Lloyd, who produced a marked impression by his fine delivery of the declamatory air, "The enemy said," which was enthusiastically applauded and encored. The duet for two basses, "The Lord is a man of war," was well sung by Messrs. Bridson and F. King. The festival ended, as it began, with the National Anthem.

Sir M. Costa directed the performances throughout, with an energy, precision, and untiring zeal, such as have never been exceeded, even by him. Mr. Willing presided at the organ, of which he discreetly made less prominent use on the last day than previously.

The festival is understood to have been financially—as it certainly was in its choral results—a success.

MR. GANZ'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

This year's series of these concerts ended well on Saturday afternoon, when the programme was strong in interest and variety. One of Berlioz's finest works, his symphony entitled "Harold en Italie," was well rendered—the viola obbligato by M. Hollander. M. Duvernoy played Mendelssohn's first Pianoforte Concerto with brilliant execution; and a graceful Prelude from M. Saint-Saëns's "Le Déluge" was performed for the first time, the incidental violin obbligato having been well played by M. Musin.

Mr. Sims Reeves sang, in his own incomparable style, Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts" and Beethoven's "Adelaide;" and Miss Carlotta Elliot gained great and deserved applause for her effective delivery of Rossini's "Bel raggio" and three German lieder by Franz and Rubinstein. M. de Saint-Saëns was to have conducted his prelude, but was unable, in consequence of having slightly injured himself by a fall. The concert was therefore entirely directed by Mr. Ganz, as usual. The programme opened with Sterndale Bennett's overture "The Wood Nymph," and closed with that to Wagner's "Tannhäuser." The performances are to be resumed next year, beginning on April 30.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S CONCERT.

This event—always an interesting feature of our musical season—took place on Wednesday afternoon, for the forty-fifth time. St. James's Hall was crowded in every part by a fashionable audience, and the reception of Sir Julius was such as to prove how highly esteemed is the veteran composer and pianist, whose long and honourable career has been pursued among us. Not only by his numerous works in every branch of composition, but also as a brilliant solo pianist and an admirable accompanist has he gained distinction. That his hands have not lost their cunning was proved by his performance of two graceful pianoforte pieces of his own—a "Nocturne" and a "Gavotte."

The extracts from Sir J. Benedict's works were comparatively few in yesterday's programme, having consisted, besides those just specified, of the romance, "Ange adoré," sung by M. J. Diaz de Soria, and "The Rose of Erin," rendered by Mdlle. Thalberg.

Special features in the programme were the admirable vocal performances of Mesdames Albani and Sembrich, the former of whom sang "Casta Diva" and "Angels ever bright and fair," and the latter the Queen of Night's song from "Il Flauto Magico" (encored), and three lieder by Taubert, Hartmann, and Förster.

Other vocal pieces were effectively rendered by Mdlles. Thalberg and Isidor, Mrs. Osgood, Mesdames Trebelli and Scalchi, Signor Gayarré, MM. Gailhard and Lassalle, Mr. Santley, Mr. F. King, and Señor Pagans. A new song, "My Land," composed by M. Saint-Saëns for the occasion, and sung by Mr. Santley, was encored; another specialty having been the first performance, by Mr. Gailhard, of "La Kermesse," a characteristic "Air Populaire" by Weber.

Several part-songs were well sung by the Swedish vocal quartet, and instrumental solo performances were contributed by Herr Agghazy, Madame Montigny Rémaury, Miss Zimmermann, M. Wieniawski, and M. Saint-Saëns (pianoforte). M. Musin, and Herr Hubay (violin), Mdlle. Sacconi, and Mr. J. Thomas (harp), and M. L. Engel (harmonium). During the day Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt gave an admirable recitation of the poem, Béruria, by Porto-Riche.

Madame Edith Wynne's evening concert took place at Steinway Hall on Monday, when a long and varied programme included her own effective singing in several pieces, among which were Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Tell ye the daughter of Zion," Bishop's "Tell me, my heart," and, with Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mrs. Meadows White's pretty duet, "O that we two were maying." Several other eminent artists contributed vocal performances, which were interspersed with some instrumental solos by Mr. J. Thomas (harp), Madame Liebe (violin), and Madame Kate Roberts, Miss B. Waugh, and Miss Agabeg (pianoforte).

The seventh and last matinée of the thirty-sixth season of Professor Ella's Musical Union took place on Tuesday afternoon, when Beethoven's septet (for string and wind instruments), and Hummel's pianoforte septet, were included in the programme. M. Duvernoy was the pianist, and Herr Auer the leading violinist.

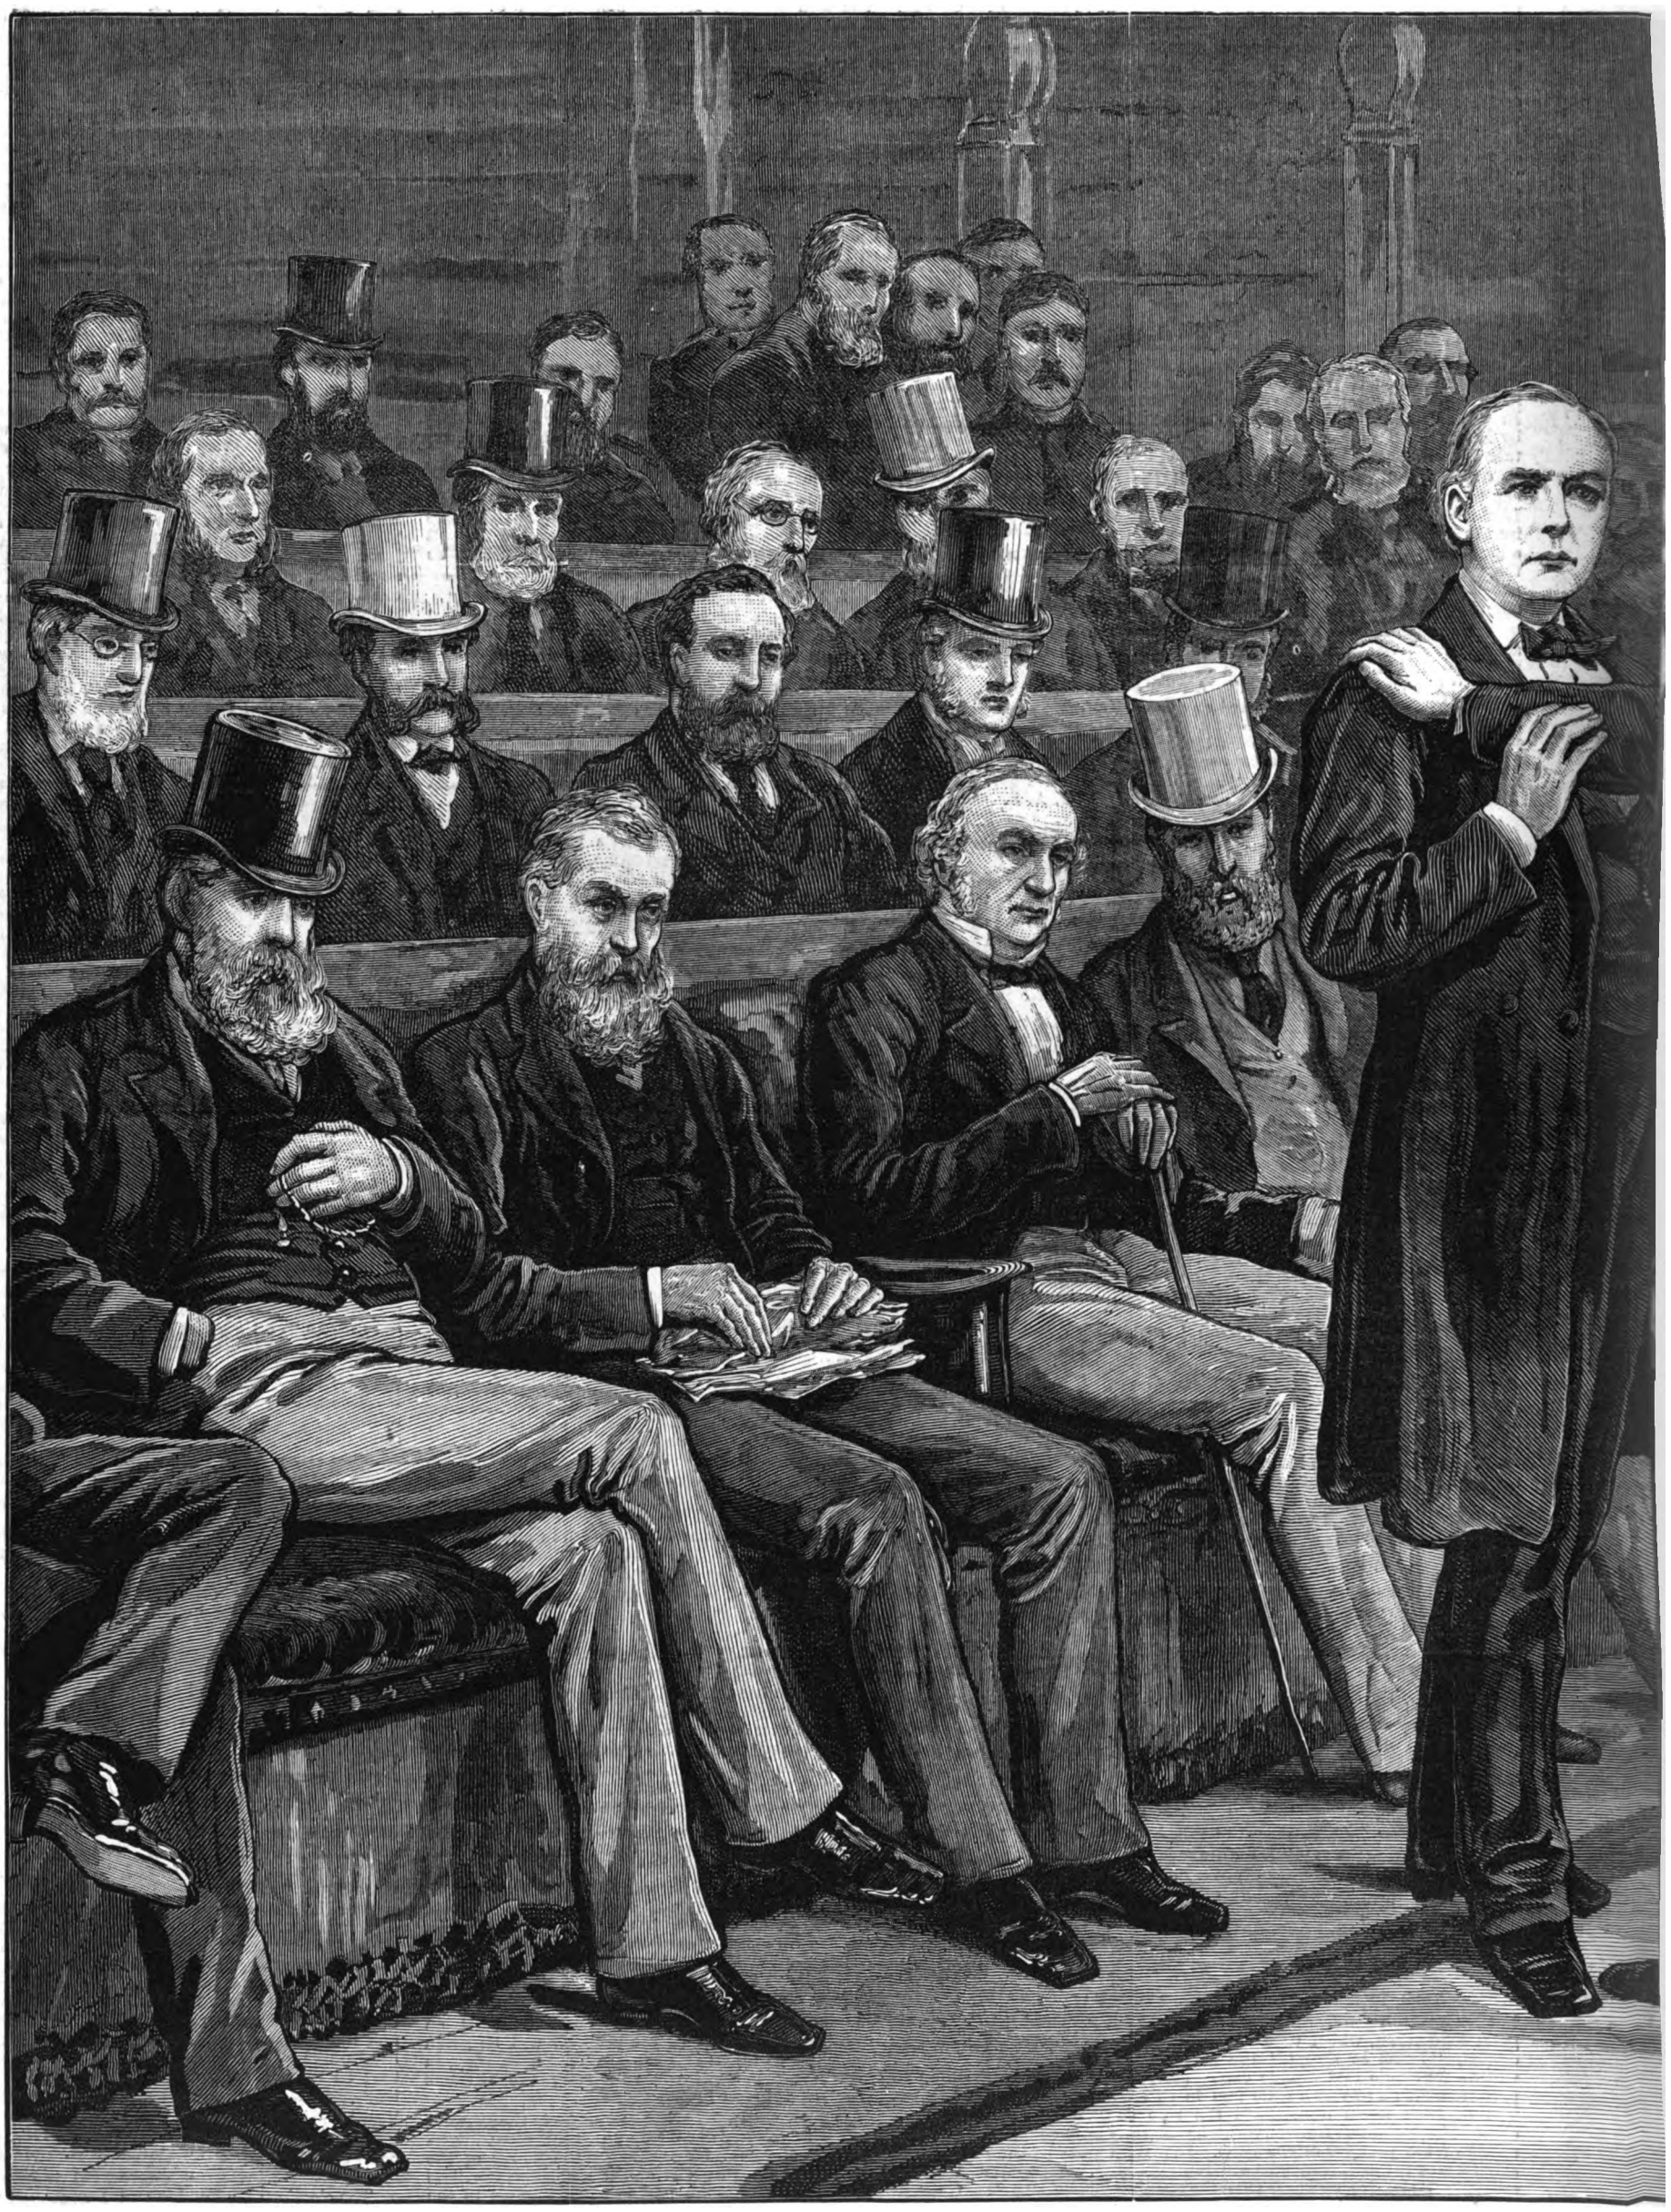
The sixty-eighth season of the Philharmonic Society closed this week with the eighth concert of the series. The programme included a new overture composed by Sir J. Benedict expressly for the society; and a new pianoforte concerto by Mr. A. Jackson, with Miss Agnes Zimmermann as pianist. Of the performances we must speak next week.

A concert, by the pupils of the Royal Normal College and Academy for Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood, took place at Grosvenor House on Wednesday, under Royal patronage.

A grand evening concert was given at the Royal Albert Hall on Wednesday, when a long and varied programme included the names of Mesdames Christine Nilsson, Trebelli, Marie Roze, Gerster, and Swift; Miss Minnie Hauk, Mdlle. Tremelli, Mr. Mass, Signori Campanini, Galassi, Del Puente, and Foli, and Herr Behrens. The orchestra and chorus of Her Majesty's Theatre co-operated, reinforced by the military band of the Scots Guards. Signor Arditi was the conductor.

Mrs. Gould's concert took place at Steinway Hall on Thursday evening. A portion of the proceeds will be given to the Female School of Art, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, in aid of the fund for permanently increasing the Queen's Scholarship from £30 to one of £60 annually.

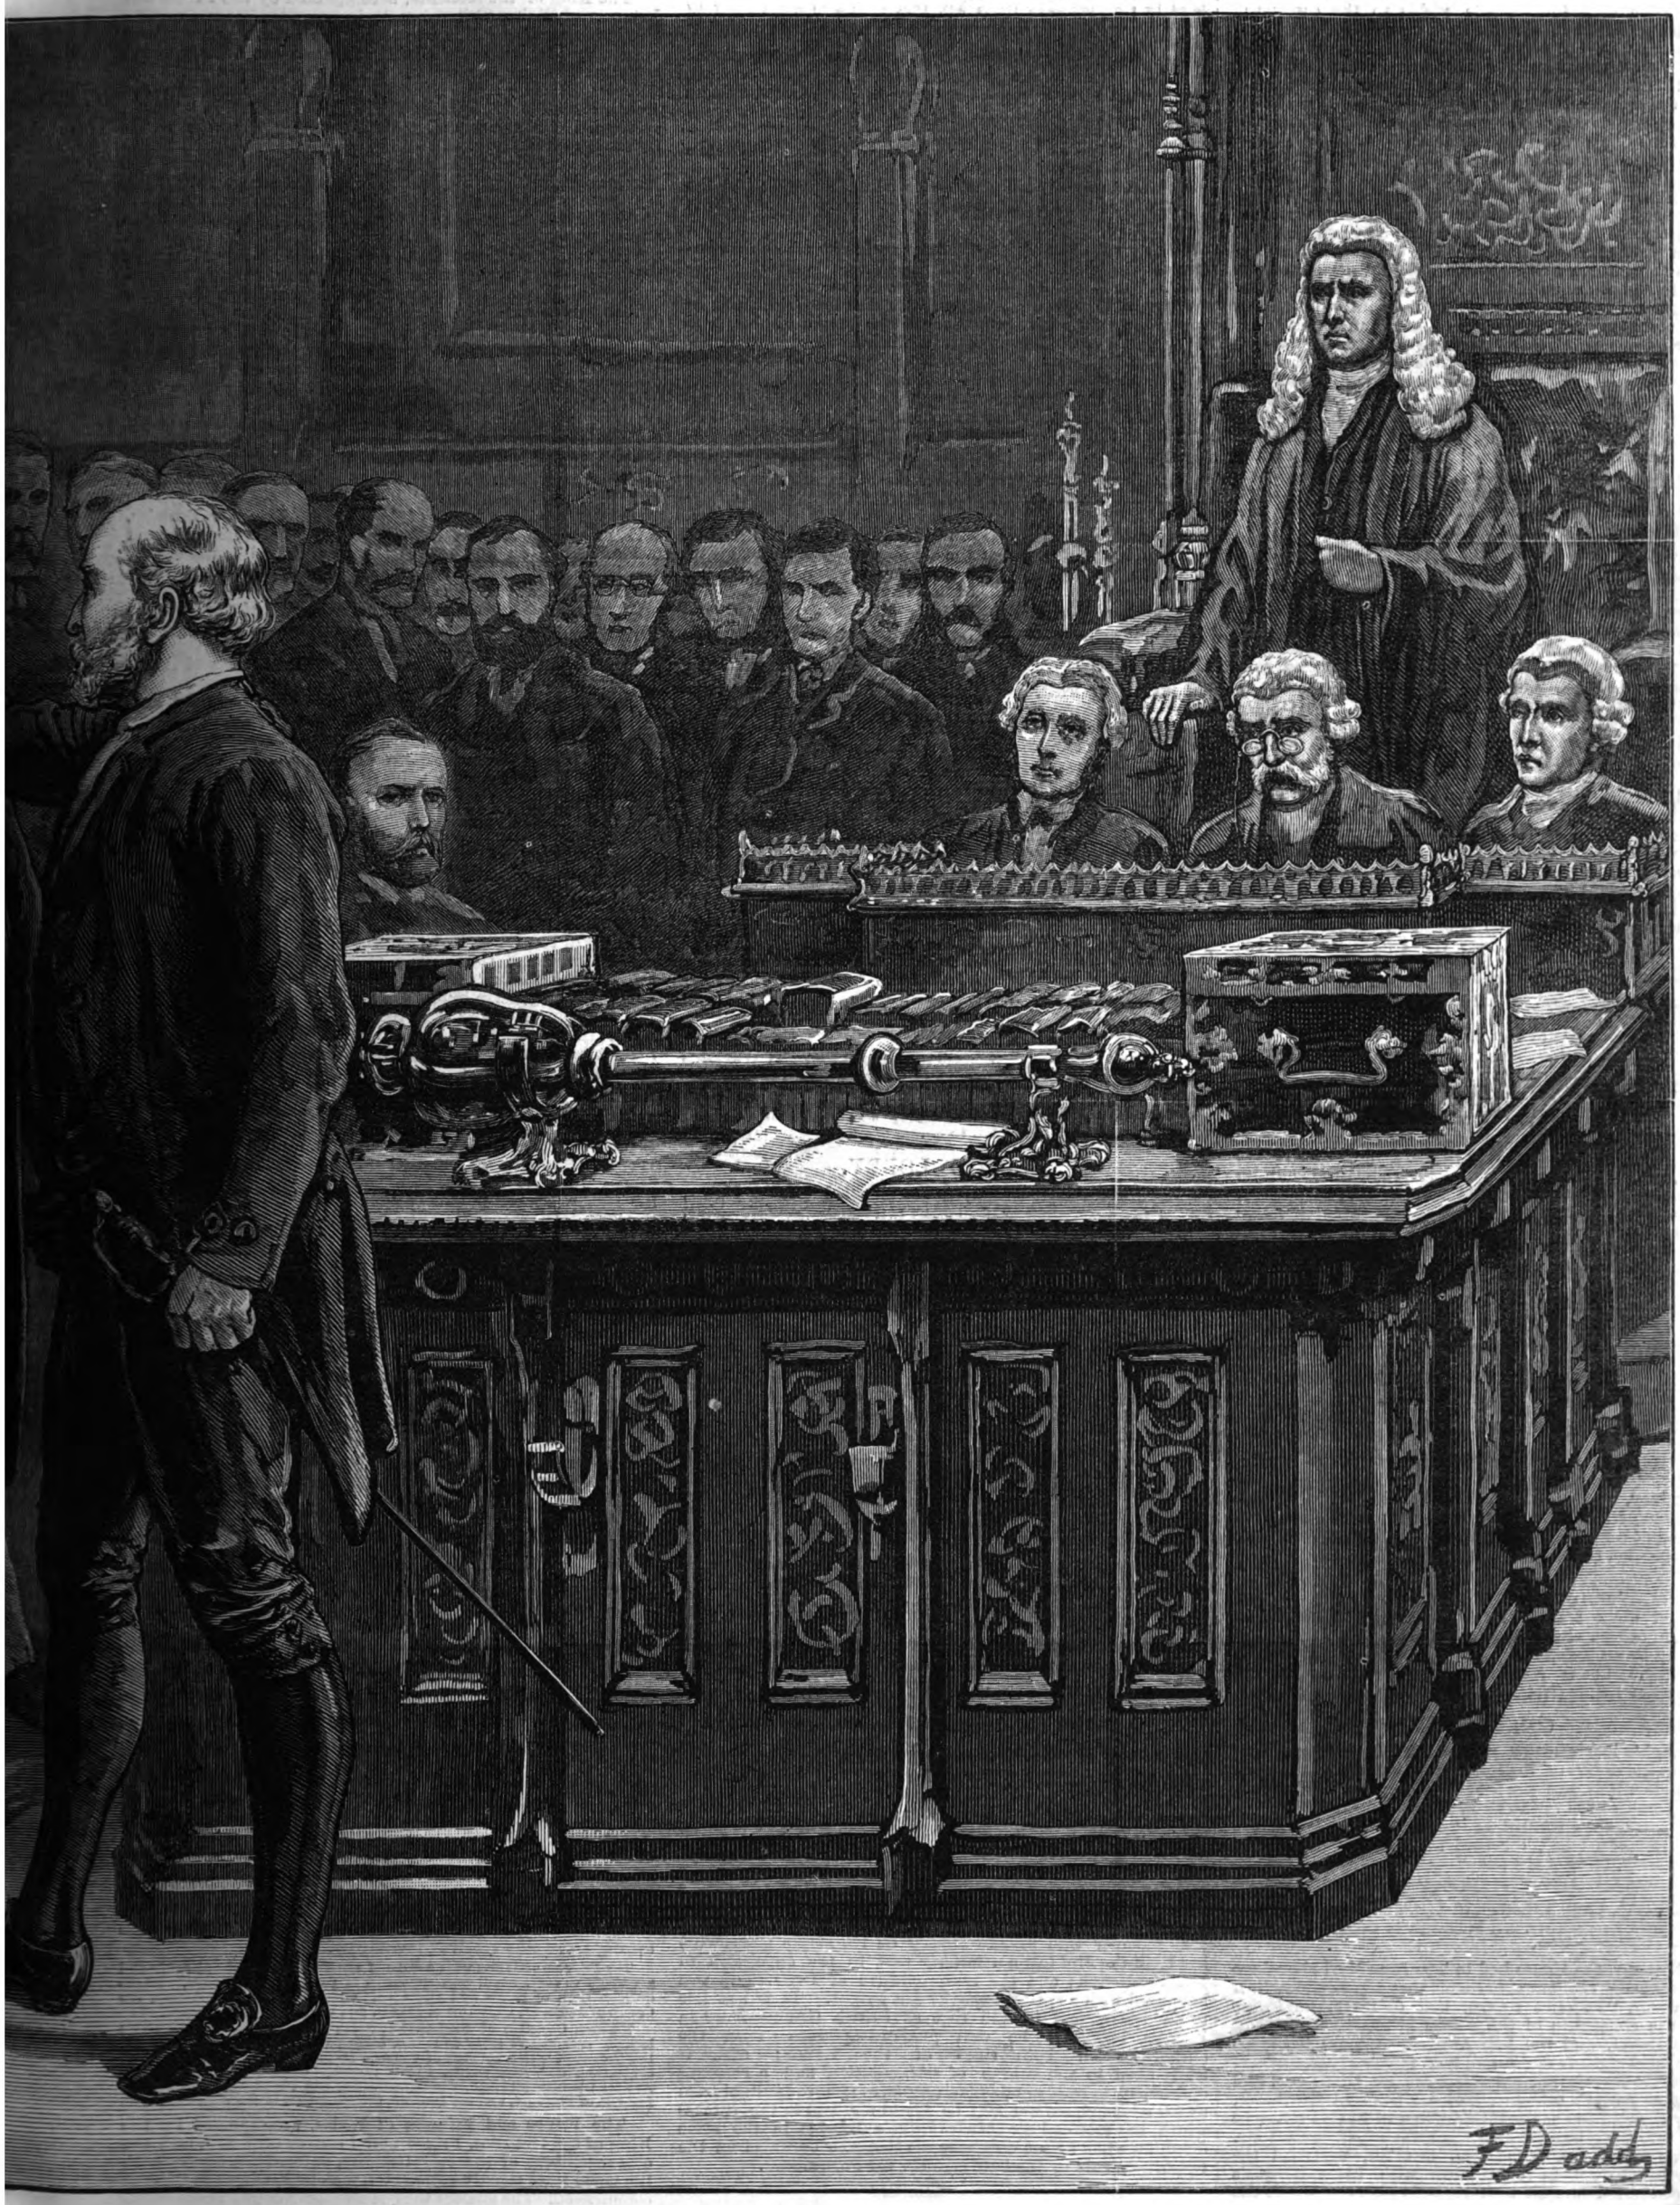
On Tuesday evening a lecture was delivered—in the concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music—on an ingenious invention by Signor A. B. Bach, for increasing the power of the voice. The instrument, which is called a "Resonator," is constructed of thin plate-gold, and is easily applied to the roof of the mouth. The inventor himself gave practical illustration of the effect by singing pieces with and without the Resonator, which appeared to answer the intended purpose of augmenting the volume of tone without altering its character. The lecture was followed by a concert to which Fraulein E. Fröbel and Mr. G. Magrath (pianoforte), and Signor Papini (violin) contributed.



NEW BOOKS.

That "Napoleon was a knave" is the very strong opinion expressed in some remarks considered to be excellent preparatory reading before entering upon the second volume of the Mémoirs of Madame de Rémusat, 1802—1808, published by her grandson, M. Paul de Rémusat; translated from the French by Mrs. Cashel Hoey and Mr. John Lillie (Sampson Low and Co.); and that is the opinion of Madame de Rémusat's son. As Napoleon the Great had already been represented in the first volume of the memoirs, on the not altogether unimpeachable authority of the injured and possibly hysterically reckless Josephine, as a wretch steeped in abominations, he must have been, on the whole, a monster wicked enough to give points to some of the most infamous among the Roman Emperors. Perhaps it was so. Yet, even if it was so, the horror and disgust with which a reader contemplates the portrait of the Corsican "ogre" are likely to be mingled with a sort of astonishment and contempt at the weakness of mankind, of whom so many are willing to be the tools and playthings of a man of whose character, as it afterwards turns out, they all the while have the lowest possible opinion. Probably this will always be the case; but, so long as it is the case, readers of history and of memoirs may be excused if they attribute the misery inflicted upon the world by an odious tyrant rather to the creatures who with their eyes open and through sheer self-seeking consented to serve his purposes than to the monster himself. Madame de Rémusat's son has written that, in his opinion, "that which degraded the Emperor, and, unfortunately, his Empire with him, most deeply was his knavery;" and, if that be so, nobody will dispute that "because of this it is humiliating for France that she ever yielded obedience to him; to individuals, that they ever served him—whatever glory the nation may have gained, whatever probity and ability individuals may have displayed. To have been the dupe or the accomplice—in any case, the instrument—of a system in which cunning held as much place as wisdom, and violence as genius—a system which led, by cunning and violence, to the extremes of an insensate policy—is a misfortune never to be effaced." And yet it cannot have been by his knavery alone, or chiefly, that the hero of Austerlitz bewitched the French nation. "Not content with deserving power," we are told, "he consented to extort or to steal it, when he could not merit it." But surely, on his escape from Elba, he was not in a position to extort or to steal it, save in a figurative and honourable sense. It was, no doubt, through the men of the sword that he triumphed on that occasion; but his influence over them was not obtained by any sort of political knavery. Yet even then his character had been painted to the public in the most unfavourable colours; and one cannot help smiling still at the remembrance of the well-known satirical summary of the graduated announcements made in the newspapers of the day, from "The Corsican ogre has escaped from Elba," to "His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the French has returned to his faithful people," or words to that effect. There is no desire here to vindicate the character of Napoleon I.; but, on the other hand, there is every wish to point out that memoirs, written after what may be regarded as a declaration of enmity against him, and provided with a preface in which his political knavery is chiefly insisted upon, are not likely to contain the most satisfactory portrait of the man himself or the most trustworthy explanation of the spell whereby he bound the majority not only of the French army but of all Frenchmen. That the memoirs are deeply interesting is unquestionable; but the interest, so far as the central figure is concerned, suffers a little from apprehensions which cannot fail to arise of a memory affected by a change of circumstances, and of an estimate reconsidered after a lapse of years spent partly in attendance upon an injured, angry, divorced wife. There were numerous smaller stars, however, revolving about the chief luminary; and the details concerning them and the Court where they shone with more or less brilliancy will be perused with an eagerness unchecked by so much need of caution.

Students and ordinary readers in America, whither so many of the emigrants who left France in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries made their way, might well expect to have works "of their own," as it were, concerning the events which had more or less to do with that emigration, and their expectations are likely to be fulfilled to their satisfaction by the two large and full volumes entitled History of the Rise of the Huguenots: by Henry M. Baird, Professor in the University of the city of New York (Hodder and Stoughton); and at the same time the great body of serious readers on this side of the Atlantic will no doubt show a proper appreciation of the service which the publishers have done in making so elaborate and intensely interesting a work accessible to the English public. It may seem, just at first, as if the last word had already been said about the Huguenots and their history, and as if there were already an abundance of works relating to them and their affairs; but, not to mention that there have been for many years past new rays of light thrown from different quarters upon various portions of the historical materials, and that it was quite worth while, and something more than worth while, to set forth the results of this illumination, the two volumes testify of so much patient research, such exhaustive investigation, so earnest a desire to be complete and thorough, that one is almost inclined to doubt, upon reflection, whether the history of the Huguenots had ever really been written until now. Let it be added that the style of writing is simple, plain, lucid; and that the narrative is put together with due regard for usefulness of form. This usefulness is further promoted by an index, a map, and numerous highly interesting and instructive notes. The first volume begins with a sketch of France in the sixteenth century, and ends with an exposition of the famous "edict of January," 1562, by the promulgation whereof "the Huguenots ceased to be outlaws." The second comprises the events of the interval between the promulgation of the edict and the death of Charles IX. in 1574. The whole contents of the two volumes are the history of about half a century, such a half century as cannot be surpassed even in the history of France for portraits and spectacles calculated to make every one who has eyes to read thrill with admiration, gape with astonishment and incredulity, flush with anger and shame, and tingle with horror and indignation. As for the Huguenots' now honoured and honourable appellation, the author very reasonably considers that he would simply waste time if he sought to know how they came by it, though he mentions some of the derivations which have found more or less favour. To take up this work and not read it through must require a strong effort, and such an assertion is no slight commendation.



The elections for Bandon and Dungannon took place yesterday week. For the vacancy caused by the retirement of Captain Bernard, the Conservative member for Bandon, Mr. Allman, the Liberal candidate, was elected by 216 votes, 172 being given to Mr. Payne, who came forward in the Conservative interest. At Dungannon, Mr. Dickson, the Liberal candidate, was returned by a majority of four votes over Colonel Stuart Knox.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

An observer of the exciting scenes that have lately happened in the Lower House may, upon seeking the tranquil atmosphere of the Chamber of Peers, have been excused for experiencing something of that sense of relief which the hushed seclusion of a forest glade yields to the careworn citizen. Characteristic of the readiness their Lordships have shown to march with the times is it that whilst the Government have practically turned a deaf ear in the House of Commons to the complaints made as to the manifest insufficiency of the accommodation for reporters, noble Lords have promptly resolved to act on the reasonable recommendations of their zealous Committee on the same subject. Earl Beauchamp, as mouthpiece of this considerate Select Committee, could not on Tuesday prevail upon the House to sanction each of the suggested experiments. The noble Earl rendered appreciable service, however, in eliciting remonstrances against the free-and-easy custom of carrying on private conversations while speeches are being made; in calling forth a remark which should disabuse Earl Granville of the notion, on which he prided himself, that it is an easy task to report many of his frequently inaudible sentences; and in affording the Duke of Argyll an opportunity of airing what was possibly intended for Caledonian "wut." Was it because of the saying that "walls have ears" that his Grace threw out the suggestion that the reporters should be placed within the walls of the House and the division-lobbies? Be that as it may, Earl Beauchamp succeeded in getting noble Lords to agree to the temporary placing of a few additional seats for reporters in front of the existing gallery, and to the erection of a platform "on either (? each) side of the House below the bar," although the proposal to remove the Lord Chancellor and the woolsack to the place occupied by the cross-benches facing the throne did not find favour.

The Burials Bill was not read the third time and passed on June 24 without an expression of opinion on the part of the two foremost orators of the Upper Chamber. With accustomed clearness of thought and delivery, the Bishop of Peterborough took exception to the introduction of "second and third class burial services," and devoted some trenchant criticism to the clause for the provision of "Christian services," which, he complained, the clergy might be liable to read over "the greatest reprobate in the parish." This reference to "Christian services" drew an animated rebuke from the Archbishop of Canterbury. That the ecclesiastical benches are not a bed of roses received further exemplification when the Right Rev. Dr. Magee asserted that "the most reverend prelate did him the most cruel injustice." The one rival to the Bishop of Peterborough in oratorical ability, Lord Beaconsfield, seized this opening to put in the pungent remark that "it would have been very desirable if the most reverend prelate and the right reverend prelate had arranged to have been of the same opinion on the bill." The noble Earl thought "it an unjust and an unwise bill," and feared that the arguments used to open the churchyards would be applied to churches. As a sanitary measure, he would advise the closing of "all the 'God's acres' throughout the country," and the opening of fresh cemeteries, placed where they would not be prejudicial to the public health. Earl Granville having quietly given Dr. Magee a rhetorical dig in the ribs by alluding to his eloquence as being "sometimes not of an episcopal character," and the Lord Chancellor having added a few words in the same vein, the bill was passed, with some verbal amendments.

Marriage with a deceased wife's sister may be almost regarded as within the region of "practical politics" when his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, for the second year running, has presented a weighty petition in favour of the measure, and has, in conjunction with the Duke of Edinburgh and the Duke of Connaught, voted for the bill; and when, moreover, a majority of eleven only pronounced against this change in the marriage laws on June 25. To the lot of Lord Houghton did it fall to reintroduce the measure to their Lordships' notice. Why quips should be generally introduced into the discussion of this ticklish question is not obvious. The quip which elicited laughter on this occasion was furnished by Earl Granville, who solemnly declared that, on his part, he had no desire to marry one of his wife's sisters, but added that that was no reason why he should debar those who had excellent reasons for wishing to contract a marriage of that sort. The Bishops of Oxford and Lincoln, however, opposed the bill, which was rejected by 101 to 90 votes, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Duke of Argyll, Lords Hatherley, Salisbury, Cranbrook, and Coleridge being in the majority.

Earl Sydney, as Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, on Monday brought up the Queen's gracious reply to their Lordships' address, praying that the fourth schedule of the new Education Code regulations should be omitted.

As likewise representing her Majesty, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Argyll, and Lord Monson braved the heat of Tuesday and donned their Peers' robes as Royal Commissioners, in order to lend accustomed pomp to the ceremony of signifying Royal Assent to the Consolidated Fund (No. 1) Bill, the Glebe Loans (Ireland) Bill, the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill, and other measures.

COMMONS.

Mr. Bradlaugh's incarceration in the clock-tower for formal resistance to the orders of the Speaker was of short duration. Only a single night had the excluded member for Northampton to compose himself to sleep as well as he could within something more than earshot of "Big Ben." When the Thursday afternoon came, Sir Stafford Northcote, still with unruffled suavity, secured the adoption of this motion—

That this House, having committed Mr. Bradlaugh to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms on account of his disobedience of the orders of the House and of his resistance to its authority, and having thereby supported its order and asserted its authority, Mr. Bradlaugh be discharged from the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms.

First, however, the House had to hear from Mr. Labouchere a characteristically cool announcement that Mr. Bradlaugh, if released, would "at once return, and do what the Prime Minister, the colleagues of the Prime Minister, the present Attorney-General, and the late Attorney-General say is his absolutely legal right to do;" and hon. members had furthermore to endure Mr. Gorst's catechising of Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. O'Connor Power's catechising of Sir Stafford Northcote, and manly deprecation of the introduction of heated religious sentiment into the question. No voice was raised against Mr. Bradlaugh's release; and the hon. member, who had the discretion not to act in accordance with his colleague's warning, contented himself with resuming his seat under the Peers' Gallery.

The Government appear to have decided at Saturday's Cabinet Council on actively intervening to extricate the House from the Bradlaugh dilemma. Mr. Labouchere had on the Friday given notice of a motion to rescind Sir Hardinge Giffard's resolution; but on Monday readily withdrew it directly he heard Mr. Gladstone give notice of the following motion for Thursday:—

That every person returned as a member to this House who may claim to be a person for the time being by law permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration in place of an oath, shall henceforth, notwithstanding so much of the resolution of this House passed on June 22 as relates to affirmation, be permitted without question to make and subscribe a solemn affirmation in the form prescribed by the Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866, as altered by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, subject to any liability by statute; and, secondly, that this resolution be made a standing order of this House.

On Tuesday Sir Stafford Northcote, as Leader of the Opposition, took up the gauntlet, and flung down his glove, saying, amid encouraging cheers from his supporters, that he would meet the Prime Minister's motion with this amendment—

That this House cannot adopt a resolution which virtually rescinds a resolution passed by it on June 22 last.

On these issues the rival parties elected to do battle; but the upshot of the contest must be left to be dealt with in our next issue.

The new Budget of Mr. Gladstone will not affect that immediate change in the French wine duties that was anticipated. On June 24 Mr. Gladstone confessed that it was now probable the negotiations with France would not be brought to a close before January. The Customs and Inland Revenue Bill was thereafter read the second time, but not before Sir Stafford Northcote had lightly criticised the Budget and Mr. Anderson had moved and withdrawn an amendment to the effect that the loss through the abolition of the malt duty should be supplied by an increased beer tax in lieu of an addition to the Income Tax.

The sweeping nature of a majority of hon. members' views on the liquor trade received further illustration yesterday week, when, despite the opposition of Sir William Harcourt and Sir Richard Cross, the House agreed with Mr. Stevenson, and virtually decided by 153 to 117 votes that "it is expedient that the law which limits the hours of sale of intoxicating drinks on Sunday in England and Wales should be amended so as to apply to the whole of that day."

Liverpool can hardly have failed to read with satisfaction Lord Ramsay's speech on Monday in Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates. It was an able appeal for an improved system of professional education for officers of the Navy, to put them, at least, on a footing in this respect with the officers of the French, Russian, and American services. What was the use of voting large sums of money for powerful ironclads if our officers were not the most highly trained in the world? These and other pungent questions drew sympathetic cheers from the House, and a promise from Mr. Shaw-Lefevre that the attention of the Admiralty should be drawn to the matter. On the plea that Ireland did not get her fair share of the £1,027,689 for dockyards, Mr. Arthur O'Connor moved that the vote be reduced by £125,000; but his amendment was rejected by 219 to 17 votes.

The Ministerial measure for granting compensation to evicted tenants suffering from distress in Ireland was on Tuesday subjected to much adverse criticism from Mr. Tottenham, Mr. W. H. Smith, and others, who were replied to by the Solicitor-General for Ireland, and the debate was adjourned to Monday next.

On Wednesday, after Mr. Allman had taken his seat for Bandon, and a new writ had been issued for the vacant seat for Plymouth. Mr. John Roberts triumphed over Mr. Warton's opposition, and secured the second reading of the measure prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in Wales on Sunday. Mr. Litton's Irish Fixity of Tenure Bill was afterwards defeated by 187 votes to 45.

IN THE LOBBY.

In his purgatorial position on the threshold of the House, Mr. Bradlaugh has not been utterly without friends. Reconnoitring the House through the folding glass doors, he has now been cheerily encouraged by a chance greeting from Mr. Labouchere, and at other times consoled with a shake-hands from Mr. Joseph Cowen, Mr. Peter Taylor, or Mr. Ashton Dilke. But most gratifying of all, perhaps, to the hon. and prohibited member for Northampton has been the affable demeanour of the gallant Serjeant-at-Arms, Major Gosset. Never can there have been a courtlier gaoler, never a more comfortable prisoner, than Major Gosset and Mr. Bradlaugh! Report had it that the Serjeant-at-Arms, solicitous for the wellbeing of his charge, hospitably entertained him on the evening of his so-called imprisonment. To have watched them before or since in the Lobby would have suggested that the tall and large-framed man with the shaven face and long hair, politely doffing his hat, was a favoured guest of the white-headed Serjeant in knee-breeches, silk stockings covering Malvolio limbs, sword at belt, and tail-coat. Does not a meeting like this make amends for the cold-shoulder shown to Mr. Bradlaugh in the Lobby by one or more members of both Houses?

Who is the leader of the Opposition? Mr. O'Connor Power propounded this question rather pertinently in the House on Monday, when Mr. Gorst, for about the hundredth time, more or less, rose seemingly to show his ability to fill that important post with self-possession. Of the other candidates for the office which Sir Stafford Northcote, as a matter of fact, has evinced no desire to relinquish yet, the "self-constituted Leaders of the Opposition" in one of Mr. Wallis Mackay's Lobby sketches are among the most prominent. One of the tallest men in the House, Mr. Henry Chaplin (the hon. member to the right with the cleanly-cut features) is a model of erect deportment. If Mr. Chaplin entertains serious notions of running for the Opposition leadership, the hon. member for Mid-Lincoln has certainly this strong point in his favour, that he was the direct cause of Mr. Forster's withdrawal from the first Irish Ministerial measure of the clause which had to be re-introduced in the shape of a separate bill. Sir Drummond Wolff (the member who plumes himself on his ample moustache) has from the first taken a leading part in the opposition to Mr. Bradlaugh; and the representative of Portsmouth was honoured with a special reply by Mr. Bright. It is but fair to Sir Drummond to add that as British Commissioner in Eastern Roumelia he won golden opinions from the authorities on both sides of the House; and, if he is open to the charge of self-assertion and a constant endeavour, in season and out of season, to remove his light from under a bushel, excuse may be found for him in the success which has crowned Sir Charles Dilke's labours in the same direction when he sat very near the seat now occupied on the Opposition side by the hon. member for Portsmouth.

A public meeting will be held by the Society of Arts in their rooms in the Adelphi, on Wednesday, July 14, at which a lecture on the subject of "National Insurance" will be given by the Rev. W. L. Blackley, M.A. The lecture will be followed by a discussion. The Earl of Shaftesbury will take the chair at three p.m.

THE COURT.

The Queen, upon her return to Windsor Castle from the Highlands, gave an audience to Earl Sydney, who presented an address from the House of Lords. Earl Granville also had an audience of her Majesty. Princess Christian came from Cumberland Lodge to visit the Queen upon her arrival.

The King of the Hellenes, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales, visited her Majesty yesterday week. The King and their Royal Highnesses were met at the Windsor railway station by Major-General Du Plat, Equerry in Waiting, who attended them to the castle. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse and attended by the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, received his Majesty and the Prince and Princess at the entrance of the castle. The King presented his Gentlemen in Attendance, Colonel Hadji Patros, Colonel Kolocotronis, and M. Kalinski, to her Majesty. After lunching with the Queen, his Majesty and their Royal Highnesses returned to London. Lady Frances Baillie and the Dean of Westminster dined with her Majesty.

The Queen conferred the Victoria Cross on Colour-Sergeant Anthony Booth, 80th Regiment, on Saturday, for gallant conduct when in command of a party of the 80th Regiment on the Intombi river resisting the Zulus, March 12, 1879.

Princess Beatrice and Princess Victoria of Hesse came to London and were present in the afternoon at Baronne de Caters-Lablache's concert, which took place at the Countess of Airlie's residence in Chesham-place, returning afterwards to Windsor. The Duke of Edinburgh arrived at the castle. The Queen's dinner party included the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse, the Duchess Dowager of Athole, Lady Churchill, Earl Spencer, the Earl of Kenmare, and Viscount Torrington.

The Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Beatrice, and Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle, the Rev. J. Teignmouth Shore officiating. The Duke of Edinburgh returned to town after the service.

Monday was the forty-second anniversary of the Queen's coronation, which was celebrated with the customary observances; and her Majesty, although in residence at Windsor, permitted the members of the Rochester Sunday School Union to visit the state apartments.

The Queen held a Council, at which were present Earl Spencer, Earl Granville, the Earl of Kenmare, and the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. The Premier and Earl Granville had audiences of her Majesty. After the Council the Bishop of Liverpool did homage on his appointment. The French Ambassador (M. Léon Say) presented his letter of recall; the Danish Minister (General Bülow) took leave of her Majesty, after which M. de Fulbe was received by the Queen and presented his credentials as Danish Minister; and M. Contostavlos was afterwards introduced and presented his credentials as Greek Minister. The Right Hon. Sir Austen Henry Layard had an audience of her Majesty on his return from Constantinople, and Major George Cumine Strahan, Governor-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, was knighted by the Queen, and invested with the insignia of Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Princess Christian lunched with her Majesty. The Misses Frere had an interview with the Queen. Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse paid a visit to the Duchess of Connaught at Buckingham Palace, and also to the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. Miss Alice Corry (Lady in Waiting to the Duchess of Edinburgh) and his Excellency R. B. D. Morier (her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon), arrived at the castle. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Beatrice, Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse, the Duchess Dowager of Athole, Miss Alice Corry, Mr. R. B. D. Morier, the Earl of Fife, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby, Colonel the Hon. Augustus Liddell, and Lieutenant-General Lord Charles Fitzroy.

Princess Beatrice came to London on Tuesday to be present at the state concert. Baron Von Riedesel arrived at the castle.

Yesterday (Friday) was the day appointed for the investiture of her Majesty with the order of the White Elephant, of which the Ambassador of the King of Siam is the bearer. A lesser decoration of the same order is also to be conferred upon the Prince of Wales.

STATE FESTIVITIES.

At the state ball held last week at Buckingham Palace the Princess of Wales wore a dress of white poult de soie, veiled in silver tissue, with broad ruches of silver; corsage of white and silver brocade with deep silver fringe. Head-dress, a tiara of diamond stars; ornaments, pearls and diamonds; orders, the Victoria and Albert, the Crown of India, St. Catherine of Russia, and the Danish family order. The Prince and Princess of Wales were accompanied into the saloon at the opening of the ball by Prince and Princess Christian, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck. The King of the Hellenes and the Duke of Edinburgh were prevented from attending the ball owing to their mourning for the late Empress of Russia. The Prince of Leiningen, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and the Countess of Dornberg, Prince Louis of Battenberg, the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh and the Maharanee, and Count and Countess Gleichen, and the Countess Feodora Gleichen were among the invited guests.

By command of the Queen, a State Concert was given on Tuesday evening at Buckingham Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at the garden entrance of the palace from Marlborough House, attended by their suite and escorted by a detachment of the Household Cavalry. The King of the Hellenes, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn, the Duke of Cambridge and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were present at the concert. The Prince of Leiningen, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the Countess of Dornberg, Count and Countess Gleichen, and the Countess Feodora Gleichen were among those who received invitations.

The Princess of Wales wore a dress of myrtle green velvet and satin and a corsage to correspond, with stomacher of pearls and diamonds. Head-dress, a tiara of pearls and diamonds. Orders, Victoria and Albert, the Crown of India, St. Catherine of Russia, and the Danish family order.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein wore a dress of rich violet brocade and mauve satin de Lyons, draped with Brussels lace, the front being covered with a network of violets. Head-dress, a tiara of diamonds; ornaments, emeralds, pearls, and diamonds. Orders, the Victoria and Albert, the Star of India, the Saxe-Colurg and Gotha family order, St. Isabelle of Portugal, and the Prussian Order for Care of the Wounded, 1870.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the King of the Hellenes, Prince and Princess Christian, and the other members of the Royal family, entered the saloon with the usual state shortly before eleven o'clock, when the concert commenced. The artistes were Mesdames Adelina Patti, Marie Roze, Trebelli, Etelka Gerster, Signor Nicolini, and Messrs. Santley, Maas, John Thomas, and Horton. The band and chorus, consisting of upwards of 160 in number, were selected from the Italian Operas, the Philharmonic and Sacred Harmonic Societies, with her Majesty's private band. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted.

A Levée was held on Wednesday by the Prince of Wales, on behalf of the Queen, at St. James's Palace.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES AND THE KING OF THE HELLENES.

The Prince and Princess, with their usual interest in charitable proceedings, were present at the Grand Military Tournament last week at the Agricultural Hall in aid of the funds of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows. They were accompanied by the King of the Hellenes and their children. The Duke of Cambridge was present.

The Princess, accompanied by the Prince and her sons, performed the ceremony of opening the new recreation ground, Thomas-street and Baker's-row, Whitechapel, on Thursday week. A guard of honour of the Tower Hamlets Rifle Volunteers was in attendance. The Royal visitors were received by Lord Monteagle, Lord Dunsany, Mr. Loder, M.P., the Rev. J. F. Kitto, Rector of Whitechapel, the Rev. S. A. Barnett, Rector of St. Jude's, and others interested in the work. The Princess accepted a bouquet from the hands of Miss Burrell, granddaughter of Mr. Robert Loder, the contributor to the charity completed by the Princess in opening the grounds, the key of which, with the deed of gift, was presented to the Chairman of the Board of Works for the Whitechapel district. Three thousand children from the schools of the district were interested spectators of the ceremony, and received especial notice from the Royal party.

On Saturday the Prince and Princess, accompanied by Princes Albert Victor and George, performed the ceremony of opening the bridges of Wandsworth, Putney, and Hammersmith free of toll to the public.

Their Royal Highnesses, with their sons, went on Monday to a meeting of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals at St. James's Hall, where the Princess distributed the prizes that are annually given by the society to the successful essayists. In replying to the vote of thanks tendered to the Princess on behalf of the meeting by Lord Aberdare, the Prince spoke of the good effect of the society's work, and especially upon the excellent result of the competition, which had brought 10,000 essayists into the field from 500 different schools in the metropolis.

The Prince and Princess, with the King of the Hellenes, have participated in various festivities. Their Royal Highnesses and the King, after their visit to the Queen at Windsor yesterday week, dined with Lord and Lady Alfred Paget, at their residence in Queen Anne-street, the Prince afterwards going to Mrs. Naylor's ball in Belgrave-square.

The Prince and Princess, with Princes Albert Victor and George, and Princesses Louisa, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, and the King of the Hellenes were present at the garden party at Kensington House, given on Saturday by the officers of the Grenadier Guards. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Duke of Cambridge were also present, the general company numbering 2000 persons. The Grenadier Guards' band attended, as also the drums, buglers, and fifes, under the direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey. The members of the committee of officers received the illustrious guests on alighting, a number of non-commissioned officers of the regiment lining the passage, and the band playing the National Anthem as the members of the Royal family entered. In the course of the afternoon a troupe of trained dogs went through their performances on the lawn in front of the terrace, and afforded considerable amusement by their cleverness. The Spanish students were engaged, and in the spacious concert-room played some admirable national music. Refreshments were served during the afternoon in the large saloons right and left of the bow window looking upon the terrace. The Prince and Princess went to the Gaiety Theatre in the evening.

Prince Louis of Battenberg arrived arrived at Marlborough House from Germany on Sunday night on a visit.

Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse lunched with their Royal Highnesses on Monday at Marlborough House. The Prince and Princess and the King of the Hellenes were present at Earl and Countess Cadogan's ball at Chelsea in the evening.

The Duke of Edinburgh visited their Royal Highnesses and the King of the Hellenes at Marlborough House on Tuesday, previous to his departure for Portland, and remained to luncheon. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the King of the Hellenes were present at the state concert.

The Prince held a Levée on Wednesday, and in the evening was present with the Princess at his Excellency Count Munster's ball at the German Embassy.

Their Royal Highnesses have dined with the Earl and Countess of Wilton at their residence in Grosvenor-square, and the King of the Hellenes has dined with Earl Granville at his residence on Carlton-house-terrace.

The Duchess of Bedford issued invitations for a garden party for yesterday (Friday) at Woburn Abbey to meet the Prince and Princess.

The Duke of Connaught, the Ranger of Epping Forest, accompanied by the Lord Mayor and other dignitaries, visited Epping Forest last week. His Royal Highness drove from town to Chingford, where he lunched at the Royal Forest Hotel, and, after visiting the forest, returned, viâ Loughton, by special train to Liverpool-street station. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught (as the representatives of her Majesty) formally opened the Royal Victoria and Albert Docks on Thursday week. The Duke and Duchess of Teck were present. Their Royal Highnesses were afterwards entertained at luncheon by the chairman and members of the St. Katharine's Docks Company, 4000 guests being present. The Duke and Duchess were at the Countess of Lovelace's ball, and at Lady Molesworth's "at home" on Wednesday. Their Royal Highnesses have also dined with Lord and Lady Harlech.

The Duke of Cambridge presided at the annual Staff College dinner at the Pall Mall Restaurant, and has dined with the Earl and Countess of Sefton.

Owing to the pressure on our space this week, we have been obliged to postpone an Illustration of the opening of the Belgian Exhibition building at Brussels, as well as other Illustrations.

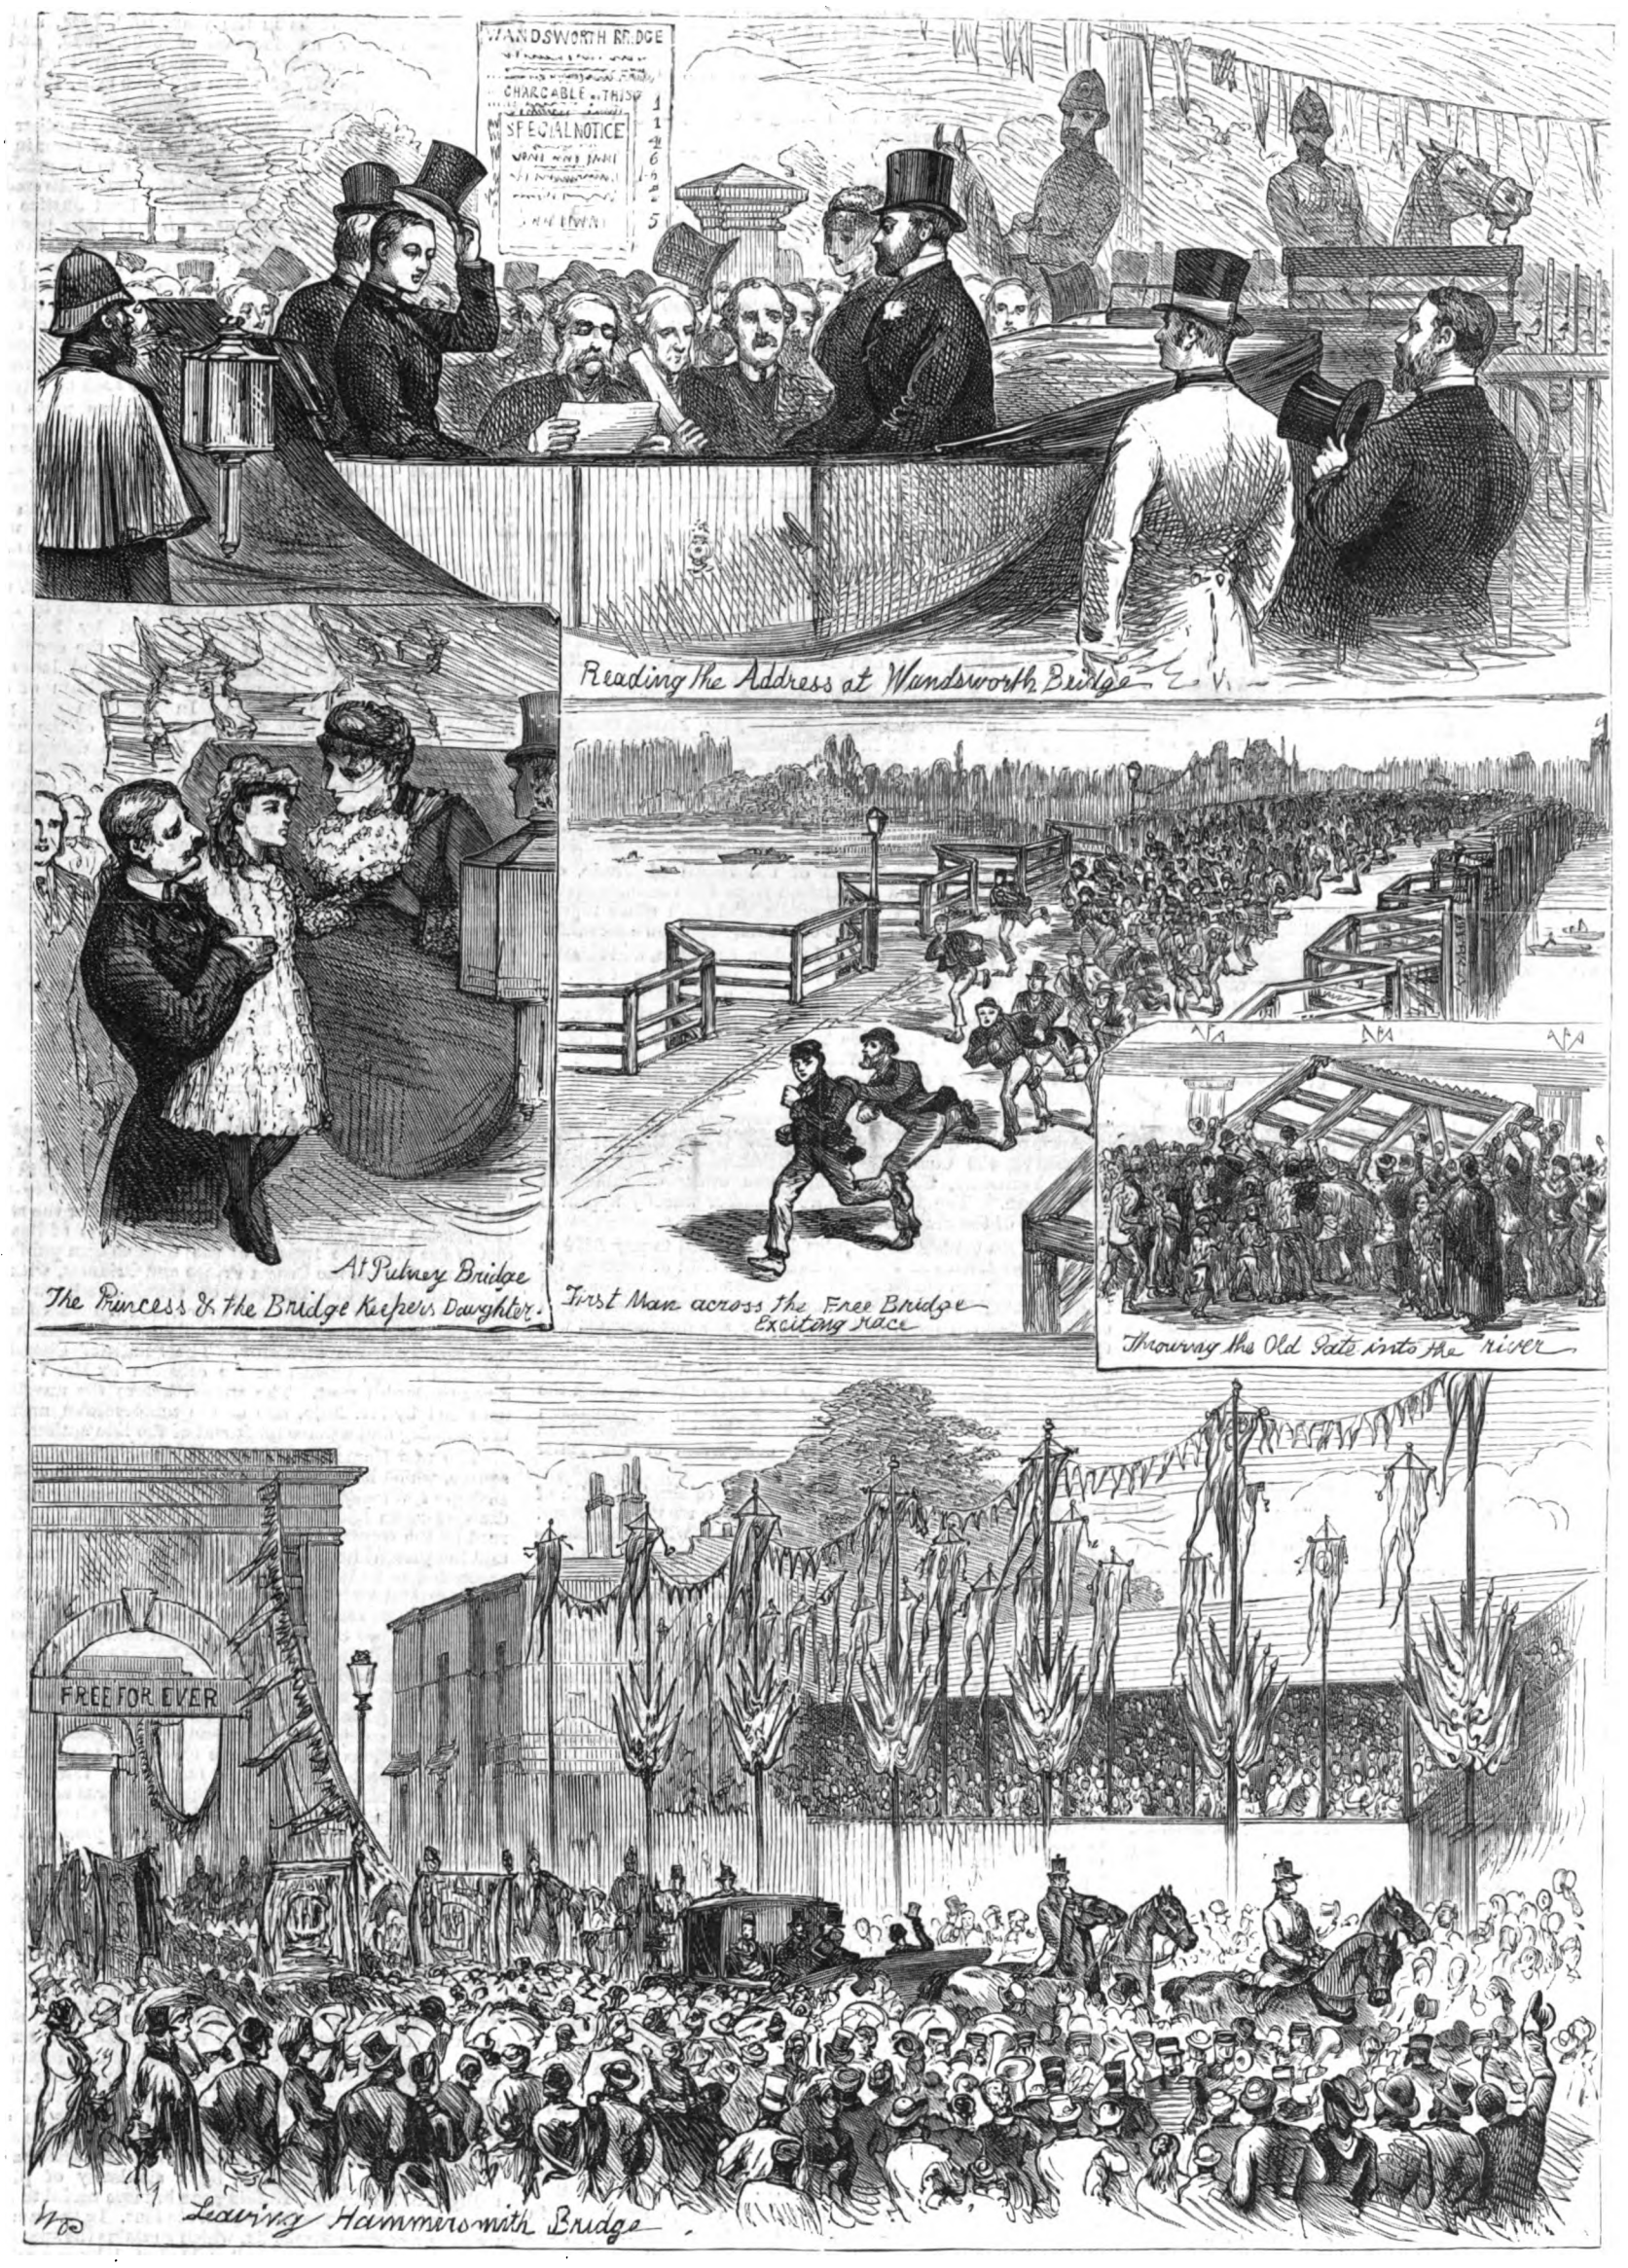
The sea was very high, and the British steam-ship approached with the greatest difficulty. A small boat put off with the steward and mate (who is also to receive a medal), and succeeded in rescuing one by one the crew of nine men.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the third week in June was 84,521, of whom 46,567 were in workhouses and 37,954 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1879, 1878, and 1877, these figures show an increase of 3226, 7063, and 6785 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 807, of whom 619 were men, 158 women and 30 children under sixteen.

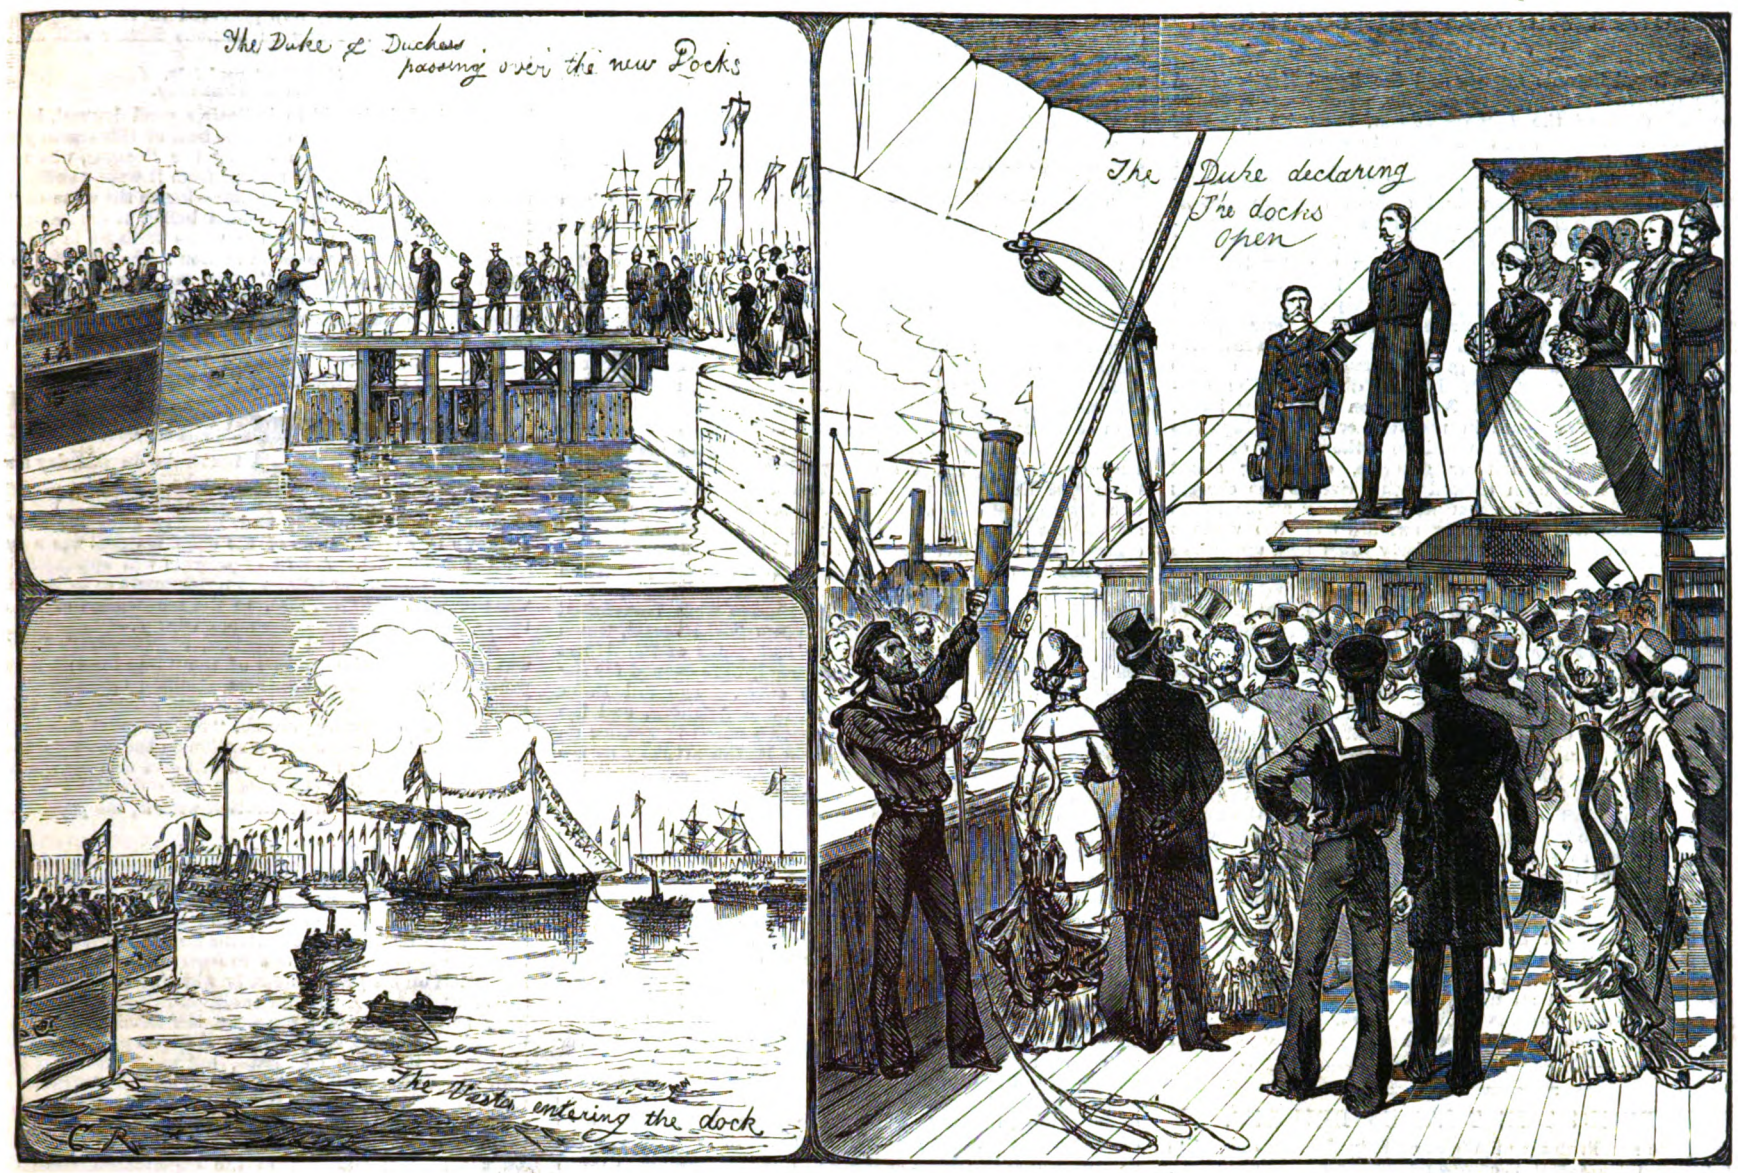
With promptness well worthy of imitation in other cases, the Court of Appeal has disposed of the writ of error in "The Queen v. Orton." It has decided adversely to the prisoner on all points. The three Judges forming the Court delivered their opinions without hesitation or reserve. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the writ of error had been improperly issued, and that it was monstrous to suppose that the law would allow any number of perjuries to pass with but one punishment because they all formed part of one scheme. Lord Justice Bramwell, in concurring, pointed out that if a man could not be punished on more than one count for two distinct offences the Crown would have to wait until the first sentence had expired before prosecuting for the second offence; it was consequently thoroughly unreasonable to urge such an argument.



Thunderstorms again prevailed in various parts of the country yesterday week. In London the rain was heavy, and floods were caused at Hackney, Kingsland, and Clapton. The main street of Hackney, near the North London Railway Station, was for a long time impassable for pedestrians, and the cellars of many of the houses and shops were some feet deep in water. The North London Railwway line was for some distance covered with water to the depth of two or three feet, and presented the appearance of a turbulent stream. At Banbury the lightning struck a house in High-street, setting fire to the thatched roof. Much damage was done by the rain at Chatham. A thunderstorm, attended by heavy rain, visited the neighbourhood of Dingwall in the evening, and lasted for about two hours, the streets and lanes being flooded.—On Saturday afternoon a thunderstorm of a local character broke over London. In Peckham and part of Dulwich scarcely any rain fell, and in some of the northern and north-eastern suburbs, which had been deluged on the previous night, the storm was hardly felt; whereas in the City and the west of London there were loud peals of thunder, vivid lightning flashes, and torrents of rain. At Wandworth two policemen, a sergeant and a constable, were struck by lightning while on duty and severely injured. Other places were visited by thunderstorms. At Trent a labourer named Brooks was killed; and at Wilton Towers, Durham, Mr. Henry Smith Stobart, a local magistrate, was struck dead while walking on a railway close to his house with a friend. A most destructive thunderstorm is reported from the upper part of Banffshire. On Monday the rain fell in such torrents that the streams rose so rapidly that several persons narrowly escaped. At the farm of Inverlochy 400 sheep and lambs were carried off and stranded on the banks of the river Avon. Several bridges were swept away, and damage to the extent of many thousands of pounds was done.

A monument to the poet and fairy-tale teller, Hans Christian Andersen, was unveiled at Copenhagen last Saturday. The bronze statue, somewhat over lifesize, is due to the sculptor Mr. Saabye. The poet is represented in modern dress, sitting in a chair and reading one of his fairy-tales to an imaginary audience. The place chosen for the statue is the garden surrounding the venerable Castle of Rosenborg, one of the favourite resorts of the Copenhagen public. The King, the Queen, the Crown Prince and Princess, with two of their children, the Duchess of Cumberland, two of the children of King George of Greece, and a numerous assembly, including most of the notabilities of the Danish capital, were present at the ceremony. The Students' Choral Union executed a song, written for the occasion by Mr. V. Bergsoe, a young Danish poet. The speech before the unveiling was delivered by Mr. Bille, one of the metropolitan members of the Rigsdag and a personal friend of the late author.

The new Home Hospital for paying-patients in Fitzroy-square, which has already been described, was opened by the Bishop of Winchester on Monday. At a meeting held in the drawing-room Earl Percy presided. The report having been read by the secretary, Earl Percy, in addressing the meeting, said the present hospital was but a tentative scheme, for, if it succeeded, as he believed it would, the association would establish a hospital for infectious diseases and a third for convalescent patients. The scale of charges to be made would secure the association 5 per cent upon the capital laid out. The present hospital would give accommodation for sixteen patients, and at the present time they had forty applications for admission. The sum of £10,000 was now required, and when that had been secured the governors would be able to carry out what they considered a complete scheme—namely, to establish hospitals for non-infectious and infectious cases, and to provide a home for convalescents. Upon the motion of Lord Aberdeen, seconded by Mr. Walter, M.P., the report was adopted. The Bishop of Winchester afterwards declared the hospital opened. The Duke of Northumberland was elected president and the officers were appointed.



In this week of the Sunday Schools centenary, we have much pleasure in recommending an important publication by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, the Queen's Printers, which will render valuable service to all engaged in religious instruction. It is a volume bound in flexible black leather, and very clearly and beautifully printed on thin but fine paper. The "Sunday School Centenary Bible," or "Teachers' Variorum Bible," as the latter name implies, shows all the various readings and renderings of the text, set forth in foot-notes at the bottom of each page. This feature of the work is taken from the edition published by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode about four years ago; but with the addition of references, in the margin of the page, as in ordinary "Reference Bibles," to other passages of Scripture containing allusions to the subject mentioned in the sentence before the reader, or characterised by a similarity of phrase, of thought or sentiment. Nothing can be more useful to a clergyman, or to any private theological student. In the same volume we have a copious Appendix, which contains the special "Aids to the Study of the Bible," contributed by several learned and authoritative writers upon Biblical criticism, history, geography, chronology, archæology, and other scientific researches concerning the times, the countries, and the nations and families, spoken of in the Old and New Testaments. This portion of the work can also be had separately for one shilling. A very complete Index to the whole Bible, and a Concordance of words, have been added to the volume with several excellent maps.

The Extra Supplement.

A FLOWER SHOW AT THE BOTANICAL GARDENS.

Both the Royal Botanic Society and the Royal Horticultural Society possess fine ornamental gardens, which become, on the appointed days of the London season, favourite places of fashionable assemblage, and are pleasant alike to the lovers of society and to those with a taste for natural productions of the rarest beauty. There is, however, great dissimilarity between the situation, plan, and style of the two gardens belonging respectively to those distinct societies for the promotion of the same class of pursuits. The Horticultural Society's grounds at Kensington, between the Royal Albert Hall and the site of the Exhibition of 1862, part of the galleries of which are standing, is entirely surrounded with buildings. It is a regular quadrangle, and is formally laid out in the Italian style, with terraces at three successive levels, ascending to the grand conservatory, and is encompassed with arcades of Italian design. The gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, on the other hand, occupying a circular space in the very centre of Regent's Park, are most agreeably removed from the vicinity or prospect of buildings; and their grounds, extending about eighteen acres, have been treated with a view to the charms of landscape, in a park-like manner, displaying ample lawns and shrubberies and mounds or swellings of the verdant surface. This was done thirty or forty years ago, under the direction of Mr. Robert Marnock, but some of the trees are older, having been planted in a nursery garden that formerly existed there. We do not know a more delightful place of retreat, open to the general public on all summer week days, and on Sundays to Fellows of the Society and their friends. The students of botanical science, moreover, are here provided with abundant materials and facilities for gaining the instruction they desire. The conservatory, the plant-houses, and the special gardens for different classes of plants, including one of those used for medical purposes, are very complete in their arrangements, and deserving of a careful inspection. The periodical Flower Shows, which are held under the vast awning that is stretched for such occasions upon the woodwork in rear of the Conservatory, have during many past years been recognised as the most agreeable promenade to be so easily reached in town. We present an Illustration of this well-known scene of public enjoyment, with the various attitudes and inclinations of its frequenters, some of them being true amateurs of floral perfection, while others have no aim but to pass an idle hour in lounging or social amusement. There are, besides, at the Regent's Park Gardens, brilliant evening parties, with an artificial illumination of the conservatory and other premises of the Royal Botanic Society. An entertainment of this kind, which was patronised by some of the Royal family, took place last Wednesday night.

FREEING THE THAMES BRIDGES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales on Saturday last opened to free traffic, without toll, the three remaining toll-gate bridges, those of Wandsworth, Putney, and Hammersmith, within the metropolitan district. In May last year, it will be remembered, their Royal Highnesses opened five of these bridges—namely, those of Lambeth, Vauxhall, Chelsea, the Albert Suspension Bridge at Cheyne Row, and Battersea Bridge. The arrangements for abolishing the tolls upon these, and likewise at Waterloo and Charing-cross Bridges, have been carried out by the Metropolitan Board of Works. Ten bridges in all have been thrown open to the public, at a cost of £1,377,325. The original claim amounted to £2,338,095. For Waterloo Bridge, £750,000 was claimed and £474,200 paid; for Charing-cross—claim, £150,000; paid, £98,540; Lambeth—claim, £100,000; paid, £35,974; Vauxhall—claim, £395,460; paid, £255,000; Chelsea—claim, £120,000; paid, £75,000; Albert and Battersea—claim, £300,000; paid £170,000; Wandsworth—claim, £152,000; paid, £53,311; Putney (or Fulham)—claim, £100,000; paid, £58,000; Hammersmith—claim, £200,000; paid, £112,500; Deptford Creek—claim, £70,635; paid, £11,800.

Their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by their two sons, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, came from Marlborough House, between three and four o'clock, in an open carriage, though it was raining heavily all the time. At the north end of Wandsworth Bridge, they were received by Sir James M'Garel Hogg, Bart., chairman, and other members of the Metropolitan Board of Works. There was a guard of honour of the 1st Surrey Artillery Volunteers. The gate of the bridge was opened, and the carriage in which their Royal Highnesses sat advanced upon it. Sir J. M. Hogg read an address, to which the Prince of Wales replied. The Chairman of the Metropolitan Board then presented his Royal Highness with the key of the toll-gate, together with a handsomely bound copy of the address. The Prince declared Wandsworth Bridge free for ever, and this announcement was hailed with cheers by the people assembled.

The Royal carriage drove over the bridge to the Surrey side, and made its way along York-road and through Wandsworth to Putney. Here the crowd was greatest, and there were most ample tokens of festive welcome. Putney Bridge, which is called Fulham Bridge, we observe, by the local authorities on the opposite Middlesex shore, was decorated with much artistic taste. On the river above and below this bridge were many steam-boats and rowing-boats; and the banks were thronged with spectators. The guard of honour here was furnished by the 3rd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers and South Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. The Prince and Princess, with their escort of fourteen or fifteen carriages in procession, went across the bridge to Fulham. His Royal Highness, here as at Wandsworth Bridge, formally declared the bridge henceforth open free of toll.

The procession advanced from Putney Bridge, through Fulham High-street and London-road, northward to Walham-green; thence it turned westward, and soon entered North-end-road, Hammersmith. Turning again southward, and passing through the main street of Hammersmith, it reached Hammersmith Bridge. The bridge was crossed to the Barnes or Castelnau side, and the carriages stopped there at the corner of Lonsdale-road, where a tall flagstaff with banner was erected. Here the procession turned back, and presently recrossed the Thames. The carriage of their Royal Highnesses, being the last, was left standing upon the bridge at the Middlesex end, where the Prince stood up and declared Hammersmith Bridge freely opened to public traffic.

A pamphlet written by Mr. T. E. Jones, clerk to the Local Board of Works for the Fulham District, giving an historical account of the three bridges, had been printed by order of the Board. His daughter, Miss Edith Charlotte Jones, presented a copy of this to the Prince of Wales, while another young lady, Miss Edith Alice Bean, presented a bouquet to the Princess. Their Royal Highnesses then returned to Marlborough House.

OPENING VICTORIA AND ALBERT DOCKS.

The completion of the Royal Victoria and Albert Docks, belonging to the London and St. Katharine's Docks Company, was noticed in our last. The new Albert Dock, situated eastward of the Victoria Dock, both extending across the Plaistow and East Ham Marshes, adjacent to Silvertown and North Woolwich, was more particularly described. The formal opening, by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, took place on Thursday of last week. Some Illustrations of the ceremony appear in this Number of our Journal.

Their Royal Highness, with the Duke of Teck and Duchess (Princess Mary of Cambridge) were conveyed down the river from Westminster Bridge by the Victoria saloon steam-boat. On board that vessel they were received by Mr. G. H. Chambers, chairman of the London and St. Katharine's Docks Company; Mr. James Brand, deputy-chairman; Mr. W. Hamilton Crake, treasurer; Lieut.-Colonel Martindale, C.B., general manager; and Mr. Rendel, C.E., the engineer. Among the company of invited passengers in the same boat were the German Ambassador, Count Munster, and Countess Munster, the Duke of Sutherland, and many ladies and gentlemen of the nobility. Another steam-boat, the Princess Mary, accommodated one hundred members of the two Houses of Parliament, with ladies accompanying them. The band of the Royal Engineers played on board the Victoria. These two leading vessels were joined lower down by the saloon steam-boat Duke of Edinburgh, and afterwards by ten others, one of which conveyed the Lord Mayor and Corporation.

There was a shower of rain as the aquatic procession moved on, but the weather cleared before arriving opposite Woolwich. Here their Royal Highnesses were transferred from the Victoria to the Trinity steam-yacht Vestal, which was prettily decorated. The outer lock-gates of the Albert Dock, nearly opposite Woolwich Arsenal, were opened for the Vestal and the other steamers to enter. The 3rd Essex Artillery Volunteers, the City of London Artillery, and the 26th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers formed a guard of honour on the quays. A Royal salute was fired by the artillery as the steam-boat carrying the Princes and Princesses came into the dock; the National Anthem was played, and there was a burst of cheering from several thousand assembled spectators.

At the centre quay of the new Albert Dock, in front of the large shed, lay two fine ships, the City of Agra, belonging to Messrs. G. Smith and Sons, and the Dorunda, belonging to the British India Company. As the Vestal, passing half-way up the dock, approached the Dorunda, the latter had her yards smartly manned by her own crew, under command of Captain Templeton. This example was followed by another vessel of the same company. The Vestal made fast to the north quay, opposite the two steamers just named. A brief ceremony took place on board the Vestal. The Chairman of the Dock Company read and presented an address, to which the Duke of Connaught replied, speaking of the completion of this magnificent public work, and expressing his gratification at witnessing it. The Bishop of St. Albans, in whose diocese the place is situated, then offered a prayer. The Duke of Connaught, standing at the side of the steam-boat, exclaimed, in a clear and loud voice, "In her Majesty's name, I declare these docks open; and, with her Majesty's gracious permission, I declare that they are to be called the Royal Victoria Dock, the Royal Albert Dock, and, as a whole, the Royal Victoria and Albert Docks." There was another burst of cheering and another Royal salute from the guns.

The London and St. Katharine's Docks Company provided luncheon for a company of four thousand guests, including their Royal Highnesses and the other distinguished persons. This repast was laid out upon vast lengths of tables in an enormous shed, 750 ft. long by 150 ft. wide, decorated with garlands, shields, and trophies of banners, and the Royal dais in rich satin and gold cloth. Mr. G. H. Chambers, the chairman, presided, with the Duke of Connaught and Duke of Teck at his right hand, and the Duchess of Connaught and Duchess of Teck at his left. Their Royal Highnesses had their health drunk, and the compliment was suitably acknowledged by the two Princes. The German Ambassador also made a speech.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, before departing, visited the British Indian steamer Dorunda, and were much pleased with her appointments.

GRAND MILITARY TOURNAMENT.

To aid the funds of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, a series of daily performances of soldierly feats of personal strength and skill took place every day last week at the Islington Agricultural Hall. It was styled a Grand Military Tournament, and was patronised by the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and many general officers, Colonels of the Guards, and colonels commanding other regiments. The performances included tilting at the ring on horseback; fencing with sword and bayonet, with lance and sword, and with bayonet and sword against each other; as well as single-stick, equestrian tent-pegging, and sabre practice. There was also slicing the lemon and "cutting off the Turk's head," of which we give an Illustration; besides gymnastic exercises of the horizontal bar, the vaulting horse, and other exhibitions of athletic prowess. The "Turk's head," it will be observed, is stuck on the top of a post; and the mounted soldier, leaping his horse over a barrier, rides past at full speed, and cuts at the turbaned pate, if he can hit it, with a sharp horizontal cleavage.

Professor Liston has resigned the chair of Hebrew and Oriental Languages in the Edinburgh University, which he has held for thirty-two years.

The new Holyhead steam-boats, the Lily and Violet, constructed of steel by Messrs. Laird for the London and North-Western Railway Company, were noticed in our last. They are to be employed on the service between Holyhead and Company's station at North Wall, Dublin, where the different lines of railway converge from the south, west, and north of Ireland. It is the City of Dublin Company's boats that ply from Holyhead to Kingstown.

The death is announced, at the age of sixty-seven, of the Danish Arctic explorer, Carl Petersen. In 1850-1 he took part in the English Expedition under Captain Parry to try to discover the survivors of the Franklin Expedition. From 1853-5 he was engaged with Dr. Kane's American Expedition, of which he was one of the few survivors. From 1857-9 he took part in the Fox Expedition under Sir Leopold M'Clintock, which brought back relics of the Franklin Expedition; and finally he took part in the Forell Expedition to Spitzberg, in which he was accompanied by Professor Nordenskjöld. Mr. Petersen had received the decoration of the Dannebrog, the English Arctic Medal, and the Swedish Gold Medal "Pour le Mérite."

FOLKLORE OF JULY.

This month, popularly called by our Saxon ancestors "Heymonath," because they now gathered in their hay, is rich in weather proverbs. Many an anxious farmer still utters the old saying:—

> No tempest, good July,
> Lest the corn look ruely.

Thunder in July is said to indicate a good harvest, but to be injurious to cattle. The extreme heat of this season gave rise to a curious superstition among the Romans, who believed that the various disorders arising from it were associated with the appearance of the Dog-Star—hence the name of "Dog Days." According to the Roman belief, at the rising of the Dog-Star, "the seas boil, the wines ferment in the cellars, and standing waters are set in motion; the dogs also go mad, and the sturgeon is blasted." The exaggerated effects, however, of the rising of this star are now known to be groundless; although it is still a common notion that dogs at this time are subject to madness. The Translation of St. Martin (4th), generally known as "Bullion's Day," and in Scotland as "St. Martin of Bullion's Day" is supposed to be a critical day, for—

> Bullion's day, if ye be fair,
> For forty days 'twill rain nae mair.

Whereas in France it is said that rain on this day foretells wet weather for the ensuing six weeks.

Formerly a festival called "Bodmin Riding" was kept in Cornwall on the Sunday and Monday after St. Thomas à Becket's Day (7th). One of the chief features was a curious kind of mock trial. A lord of misrule was appointed, before whom any unpopular person so unfortunate as to be captured was promptly dragged, and, to the amusement of the spectators, made to answer some mock charge.

According to the old calendars, St. Margaret's Day (13th) was considered to be the first of the "Dog Days;" hence the proverb, "Margaris os Canis est, Caudam Laurentius." The Bohemians say that the harvest should commence on this day, and have the following proverb, "St. Margaret puts the sickle to the corn." There is also a notion on the Continent that "if St. Margaret's Day be fine, God will give us a dry autumn."

St. Swithin's Day (15th) is in this country chiefly noted for the weather-lore in connection with it, the popular superstition being:—

> St. Swithin's Day, if thou be fair,
> 'Twill rain for forty days nae mair.
> St. Swithin's Day, if thou dost rain,
> For forty days it will remain.

The origin of this notion has been variously explained. When St. Swithin died he left directions that his body should not be buried in the cathedral, but in such a situation that the rain might fall on his grave, hence he was buried in the churchyard at Winchester. A popular tradition informs us that after his body had been buried some time, the monks, thinking it dishonourable that it should lie in the open ground, determined to remove it to the cathedral, but were prevented by rain, which prevailed until they had given up their intention, or for forty days. This story, however, is without foundation, in so far from rain happening on that occasion, the weather seems to have been most propitious. A writer in the "Book of Days" (ii. 63) thinks that the superstition "was derived from some primeval pagan belief regarding the meteorologically prophetic character of some day about the same period of the year as St. Swithin's." It has been pointed out that the same belief exists in most parts of the country, though the particular day in question varies. In France, St. Medard (June 8), and SS. Gervase and Protasius (June 19) have, says Mr. Swainson ("Weather-Lore," 115), a similar character assigned to them. In Belgium, St. Godelieve (July 6) is the rainy saint; whilst in Germany it is the day of the Seven Sleepers (June 27). In some parts of England, when it rains on this day, the peasantry say that "St. Swithin is christening the apples." Churchill, alluding to this day, tells us—

> July, to whom the Dog-Star in her train,
> St. James gives oysters, and St. Swithin rain.

St. James's Day (25th) is considered another critical day; and the peasantry, when speaking of the hops, are in the habit of saying—

> Till St. James's Day is past and gone,
> There may be hops or there may be none.

The Germans have a curious notion that as the weather is on this day so it will be on the festival of Christmas; a belief which seems to have been shared by our forefathers. An old work, entitled "The Husbandman's Practice," informs us that "St. James's Day before noon betokeneth the wintertime before Christmas; and after noon it betokeneth the time after Christmas. If the sun shine on St. James his day, it is a token of cold weather—if it rain, it is a token of moist and moist weather; but if it be between the two, that is a token of neither too cold nor yet too warm." Apples were formerly blessed on this day, and sprinkled with holy water; and in the manual of the Church of Sarum there is a special form for this purpose. It is customary to commence eating oysters on St. James's Day; and, according to a popular fancy, "whoever eats oysters on St. James's Day will never want money." This, however, does not agree with another old conceit, more than two centuries and a half old:—"It is unseasonable and unwholesome in all months that have not an 'r' in their name to eat an oyster." At this season, in many places, it is customary for children to collect together the oyster-shells which have been thrown away from the fish shops and to build with them grottoes. As each person passes by he is assailed by a crowd of little children asking him to "Pray, remember the grotto!" Mr. Thoms considers that this custom may be a memorial of the world-renowned shrine of St. James at Compostella, which may have been formerly erected on the anniversary of St. James, as on invitation to those who could not visit Compostella to show their reverence to the saint by almsgiving to their needy brethren.

The 25th of July is also dedicated to St. Christopher, the patron of field sports. His picture was supposed to have the power of preserving its owner from a violent death. A magic power has also been attributed to his staff in the following lines from the "British Apollo"—

> Alas! there's no need
> Of wings or of steed,
> St. Christopher's staff 'tis but mounting,
> You'll fly like a witch
> With broom at her breech,
> Nor fear any tempests encountering.

St. Anne's Day (26th) is not without its weather-lore. Thus, at Milan, it is said that "if it rain on St. Anne's Day, it will rain for a month and a week." And in Italy rain on this day is called "St. Anne's dower." At Venice, the peasantry say that on "St. Anne's Day the July grape is ripe."

Among the admonitions with respect to the harvest, we may mention the following: "In July shear your rye;" and another still common in many localities—

> In July
> Some reap rye;
> In August
> If one will not, the other must.

THOSE TERRIBLE TRACTION-ENGINES.

The normal quiet of the country—that "easy quiet" with which Dryden couples "rural pleasures"—is occasionally disturbed by sounds less agreeable to the listening ear than are the ravishing notes of the nightingale or the joyous song of the thrush. For example, there are the sounds that proceed from those terrible Traction-Engines.

I say "those" because they often travel in couples, like two behemoths on their honeymoon tour. Their roar at a mile's distance is great, more especially if the wind lies in that quarter. It comes with a mysterious throbbing sound, suggestive of thunder and earthquake combined. Your first impression is that some convulsion of nature has occurred; and that your rural rumble or ride is stopped for that day. Then there comes a shrill and prolonged whistle, that gives you the key-note to the solution of the mystery, and you are aware that the unseen thing is a something in the engine line. It comes as an impertinent intrusion, upsetting the country quiet with its

> And thundering loud, with his ten thousand wheels.

Perhaps you are driving a young and spirited horse, and the action of his ears and the way in which he lifts his head and distends his nostrils, has already telegraphed to you the information that he also has heard those horrific sounds. You think of Cowper's lines—

> Not rural sights alone, but rural sounds
> Exhilarate the spirits;

but you would have preferred that the spirits of your steed should not be exhilarated in this untimely manner by these unwished-for noises. They get louder and louder as you advance; until a turn in the road brings you in sight of those terrible Traction-Engines; and the uncomfortable conviction is forced upon you that, as you cannot turn back, and there is no lane either to the right or the left, to receive you in its harbour of refuge, you have nothing else to do than to screw up your courage to face the enemy and advance to meet the dual demon. If you were on foot you would be equal to the emergency; but, as you happen to be driving a horse whose ordinarily youthful spirits are greatly exhilarated by those rural sounds, you are somewhat dubious as to the result.

It is all very well to say that a man, bearing a red flag, walks in front of the first engine, and waves a signal that it is to be stopped, until your carriage has passed it. Yes; but he is only about thirty or forty yards from the Traction-Engine; and even the aspect of a man, standing in the middle of the country road, and brandishing a red flag, is of itself sufficient to cause terror in the mind of a horse who has not had the doubtful advantage of going into training for the accompaniments of a Spanish bull-fight. Supposing that you have steered your gallant steed in safety past the man with the flag, then you have to pass the dreadful-looking Traction-Engine, which has come to a standstill in the very centre of the road, and is shutting off its steam, and making that mysterious noise known as "spluthering." Three or four men are probably mounted upon it; and the smell of the whole machine is fearfully greasy and oily, distinguishable, with an unfavourable wind, at the distance of half a mile. As Lord Chesterfield said of certain things, in his "Letters," "this is beastly and horrid." Your exhilarated steed gaily capricoles round the snorting and spluthering monster, apparently undetermined whether to capsize you under its broad wheels, that have so deeply indented their pattern into the muddy road, or to make a bolt, and carry you over hedge and ditch, after the fashion of one of the steeplechases on wheels of the late Mr. Mytton.

It is borne in upon you that you may have seen a Traction-Engine for the last time, and you are glad that you made a certain codicil to your will only a fortnight ago. You have no desire to emulate the erratic performances of the late Mr. Mytton, feeling assured that if you do so your achievement will be doomed to be talked about as having been performed by the late Mr. So-and-So. But, while these thoughts flash like lightning through your brain, your exhilarated steed, in a sort of forked-lightning way, has bolted on to the turf and taken your off-wheel over a heap of stones and nearly flung you out of your carriage into the ditch before you can pull the right rein that shall steer you into comparative safety. It is a near touch, and the very narrowest of shaves. Immediately behind the first Traction-Engine there is a lengthening chain—"long drawn out," yet decidedly not "of linked sweetness"—of carriages, ploughs, cultivators, trucks, or what not, that are dragged by it. With a rush, you are carried past them—swerve again on the turf—jolt over another heap of stones—threaten the ditch—and nearly break an axle by a sudden bump on a drain. This carries you on a level with Traction demon the second; and you have the same difficulty in steering by its formidable mechanical shape, and its offensive oily, greasy smell, that you had in passing by the first. Nay, still more! for the driver of Number One has now turned on his steam, and has whistled, and spluthered, and throbbed, and roared, and rattled, and pounded, and made all the horrible noises that he is able to produce from his steam steed; and is going ahead, after that man with the red flag, persistently oblivious of the startling fact that you are going to the rear, propelled thereto with a velocity that is not agreeable, and may be dangerous.

Your performance is da capo. It is as vain to attempt to stop a repetition before demon Number Two, of all that you have gone through before demon Number One, as it would be to prohibit an encore when Sims Reeves sings a popular song. Therefore, all your powers of driving are put to the severest test; and your exhilarated steed caracoles, shies, snorts, and jumps, and takes you with flying bounds over the stone-heaps, until he has carried you past a house upon wheels that is dragged in the wake of the second Traction-Engine. Behind it, probably, a water-cart is being tugged, like a boat in tow of some larger vessel. The oily-looking men, whom you saw travelling on the first Traction-Engine, sleep in that wooden house, while it, and the mechanical behemoths of which they are in charge, are drawn up for the night by the side of the road or field in which their next day's work is to be taken. And you remember that, on one bitterly cold and snowy night during the past winter, three men who had gone to sleep in a similar caravan—attached to two Traction-Engines that were at work on a farm not far from your own house—had made themselves comfortable with the warmth derived from a charcoal stove, and were all three found dead the next morning when the early labourers trudged through the snow to their work.

With which tragic memory in your mind, your horse carries you with a rush past the wooden house upon wheels and its attendant water-cart—the Traction-Engine dragging "its slow length along," like Pope's "needless Alexandrine";—and, when you have succeeded in reducing his gallop to a canter, and then to the orthodox trot, you hear the rattling and roaring and whistling growing fainter in the distance, and thank your stars that you have safely passed by those terrible Traction-Engines.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

At a meeting of this institution held on Thursday at its house, John-street, Adelphi, rewards were granted to the crews of different life-boats for recent services. The Ramsgate Harbour life-boat Bradford had assisted to rescue the schooner Isabella, of Beaumaris, having a crew of four men, which had gone on the Goodwin Sands in a heavy sea. Rewards were granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts, and payments amounting to £2800 were made on some of the two hundred and seventy life-boat establishments of the institution.

The receipt of various contributions was announced, including £500 from Miss Da Costa, who had previously sent the same amount; £20 from T. J. M., "In Memoriam;" £15 from Morris Carswell, Esq., in memory of his late wife; and £5 5s. from the Amalgamated Fête Committee of the Ipswich Odd Fellows and Foresters. The late Mrs. Eliza Wright, of Southport, had bequeathed £700, free of duty, for a life-boat in memory of her late son, Charles Henry Wright.

The meeting expressed regret at the death of the Right Hon. Sir Steven Cave, G.C.B., who had been a member of the committee of management and a trustee of the institution for many years.

New life-boats were ordered to be placed at Hastings, and Kingsgate, near Margate. Reports were read from the chief inspector and the five district inspectors of life-boats to the institution on their recent visits to the coast.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, 25th Edition, 8vo, cloth, pp. 1102, price 16s.,
HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely rearranged, revised, re-written, annotated, and brought down to the present time, with a copious Introduction, by R. S. Guttéridge, M.D. The present edition contains many important new chapters and sections, with new features and matter pertaining thereto, including the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of women and children, with plain directions for the treatment of Accidents (including Railway Accidents), and numerous physiological notes, deductions, explanations, and illustrations delineating the minor operations in surgery. The new chapters comprise Nursing, Change of Air and Scene, Mineral Baths and Waters, Hydropathic Appliances, and External Remedies, Affections of the Digestive Organs, Cancer, Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Affections of the Lungs, Consumption and Diseases of the Respiratory Organs, Asthma and Hay Asthma, Affection of the Eyes (with a description of the Eyes and their Appendages, and Illustrations showing the various parts of the Eye), Insanity, Delirium Tremens, Hysteria, Locomotive Ataxy, Scurvy, Softening of the Brain, Alcoholism, Dipsomania, Diseases of the Spinal Cord, while Paralysis has been specially considered, and the section on Stammering is quite new. This edition possesses a New and Concise Dictionary of Medical Terms and Treatment, with leading indications of Treatment, prefixed to the various chapters and divisions, and a most comprehensive and intelligible Index. The whole book is lucidly expressed, the definition being carefully divested of technicalities, and definite expression studied from first to last. Diseases of Tropical climates are fully considered, and the volume may be pronounced of the greatest value to families, emigrants, and missionaries.

EPITOME OF THE ABOVE WORK. By R. S. GUTTERIDGE, M.D.
The slightest comparison of this edition with the last will show that it is practically a new work. It will serve for beginners and for those who prefer a small book; for further information reference must be made to the larger work. This edition contains notices of most of the new medicines, and is brought down to the present time.

GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

THE CENTENARY OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The hundredth year since the first commencement of Sunday Schools in this country has been commemorated with a prolonged festival in London during the past week. It was in 1780, in the provincial cathedral city of Gloucester, that a very worthy man, Mr. Robert Raikes, pitying the neglected children he saw about the streets on Sunday morning, resolved to begin gathering them into a school of Christian instruction. There had been Sunday Schools, about two centuries before, established by the Roman Catholic clergy at Milan, in the grand Cathedral and other churches there, under the excellent Cardinal Archbishop Carlo Borromeo. But no institutions of precisely the same kind existed here till Robert Raikes thought of it at Gloucester. He was proprietor and editor of a local newspaper, the Gloucester Journal, and a man of substance and good connections. His great-grandson is Mr. H. Cecil Raikes, late M.P. for Chester. The history of this good work is agreeably told by Mrs. H. B. Paull in a little book called "Robert Raikes and his Scholars," just published by the Sunday School Union; and in another of the Union's publications, "The Day, the Book, and the Teacher," by the Rev. E. Paxton Hood. Mr. Raikes was assisted by a young clergyman, the Rev. Thomas Stock, Rector of St. John's and Perpetual Curate of St. Aldate's Church, Gloucester. One Sunday school was opened in a house at the corner of Grey Friars, near the Church of St. Mary-le-Crypt, under Mr. Raikes's personal superintendence. The teachers were women, paid by Mr. Raikes for their services. Mrs. King was the first, and the children first met in July, 1780, at her own house, in Catherine-street. Those next employed were Mrs. Sarah Critchley and Mrs. Brabant, and there was another school at the house of the sexton of St. Aldate's, Mr. Trickey. But the example was very soon followed in other parts of the city and in the neighbouring villages, Painswick and Micheldean. The movement quickly spread, and was taken up in London.

Surrey Chapel, the well-known circular building in Blackfriars-road, belonging to the Independents, was built in those days for the Rev. Rowland Hill. A Sunday-school in connection with this chapel was opened in 1784. Its superintendent and chief teacher was Thomas Cranfield, who had already set up Sunday classes of religious teaching for children at Hoxton, Kingsland, Tottenham, and Rotherhithe. Mrs. Hannah More, who lived at Bristol in 1788, established a village Sunday school at Cheddar, in the Mendip Hills; while Mrs. Sarah Trimmer, another lady of some note in English literature, exerted herself greatly in this cause at Brentford, Richmond, and Windsor. In August, 1785, a committee was formed in London, at the suggestion of Mr. William Fox, a City merchant and deacon of an Independent Church at Islington, assisted by Jonas Hanway, the well-known philanthropist, Mr. Samuel Hoare, the banker, and Mr. Henry Thornton, also a banker, and M.P. for Southwark, who were evangelical members of the Established Church. They originated a society for the promotion of Sunday schools throughout the kingdom. It became "the Sunday School Union," established by that name in 1803, under whose auspices the present centenary festival is held. Among its founders or early members were Mr. W. Brodie Gurney, the parliamentary short-hand writer; Mr. Thomas Thompson, of Poundsworth Park, Bath; Mr. James Nisbet, Mr. Joseph Butterworth, M.P.; the Rev. Leigh Richmond, the Rev. Hartwell Horne, and Mr. Richard Watson, a leading Methodist.

The beginning of local efforts, from 1780 to 1790, was favoured with the Royal approval. King George III. and Queen Charlotte took much interest in them, and the Queen had more than one interview with Mrs. Trimmer and with Mr. Raikes upon this subject. Their Majesties visited Cheltenham and Gloucester in 1788. It does not appear that any jealousy arose between the Church of England friends of Sunday schools, or their supporters among the clergy, and the Dissenters engaged in this work. It was early taken up in Wales; first by Thomas Charles, of Bala, an active travelling evangelist. It is said that his proposal to the Religious Tract Society for the printing of a Welsh Bible was the hint which led to the formation of the British and Foreign Bible Society. There was more backwardness in Scotland to adopt the institution of Sunday schools; a notion prevailed that the Sabbath should be spent entirely in direct religious worship, preaching and prayer. The United States of America, but first Virginia and other Southern States, began their Sunday schools in 1786. Before the end of the last century, the aggregate number of pupils, in charge of schools connected with different Protestant churches or societies, must have been reckoned by several hundreds of thousands.

It is calculated by Mr. Fountain Hartley, one of the honorary secretaries of the Sunday-School Union, that the present number of Sunday scholars in England and Wales is 3,800,000, about 15 per cent of the population; and the number of Sunday-school teachers, 422,000. In Scotland there are, it is estimated, 494,500 scholars and 47,972 teachers. This calculation includes the several Presbyterian churches, the Congregationalists, Baptists, and Wesleyans, as well as the Episcopalians. In Ireland, reckoning Protestants alone, the numbers are stated at 345,920 scholars and 32,548 teachers. This makes a total exceeding four and a half million scholars and half a million teachers in the United Kingdom. The British Colonies of Canada, Australia, and New Zealand have 387,800 scholars and 46,764 teachers. In the United States of America there are six and a half millions of scholars, with 853,000 teachers of Sunday schools. The Protestant churches on the Continent of Europe which have been influenced by British example should also be reckoned. The Sunday-School Union, which has its offices at 56, Old Bailey, is under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen. Its president for this year is Sir Thomas Chambers, M.P., Recorder of the City of London; and Lord Kinnaird, Mr. S. Morley, M.P., Sir Charles Reed, M.P., Sir Henry Havelock, M.P., and Alderman M'Arthur, M.P., are vice-presidents.

The proceedings of the centenary festival, in London, were preceded last Sunday with special prayers and sermons in many of the churches and chapels. On Monday the Lord Mayor presided over a joint meeting at Guildhall of the Sunday-School Union and the Church of England Sunday-School Institute. The Archbishop of Canterbury took part in this meeting. The conferences were opened at the Old Bailey. The Church of England Institute attended a special evening service at St. Paul's Cathedral, where a sermon was preached by the Archbishop of York; while there was a meeting of the Sunday-School Union at the Congregational Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. On Tuesday, besides the morning and afternoon conference at the Old Bailey, there was an evening meeting at the Wesleyan Chapel in City-road. On Wednesday there was a grand gathering of many thousands of London Sunday-school children and their teachers at the Crystal Palace, with singing of hymns by the children in the Handel orchestra, and on the terraces. There would be a concert at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday; also, the unveiling of the statue of Robert Raikes, on the Thames Embankment; and the assemblage of a multitude of children, by the invitation of the Archbishop, in the gardens of Lambeth Palace.

A monument has been erected in front of the Unitarian chapel in Essex-street, Strand, to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the beginning of Sunday schools in this country. It is to exhibit the statue of a Sunday scholar, designed by Mr. Hugh Stannus. On the pedestal are the names of Cardinal Borromeo, Mr. Robert Raikes, the Rev. Theophilus Lindsey, an esteemed Unitarian minister of the last century, and others, with the principal dates of their work. The model of the statue, a seated figure reading the Bible, was unveiled on Saturday by Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., with Alderman Sir J. C. Lawrence, M.P., and other gentlemen assisting.

At Gloucester, the native city of Robert Raikes and scene of his benevolent labours, this festival has been celebrated with peculiar interest. The model of a statue of Robert Raikes, which is to be erected in Gloucester Cathedral, was unveiled by the Earl of Shaftesbury at the Shirehall on Tuesday. There was a Sunday-School Conference next day, and a procession on Thursday; and the foundation-stone of a Raikes Memorial Hall is to be laid. We give some Illustrations of the scenes associated with this subject in the city of Gloucester; the house in which Raikes was born and that in which he opened his first Sunday school, and the design for the Raikes monument, the sculptors of which are Messrs. Wills Brothers, 168, Euston-road, London.

There have been Centenary Festival proceedings at Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, and in most of the large towns of England this week.

Several convenient Handbooks to the New Parliament, and statistical records of the late General Election, have been issued by different publishers. A special edition of "Dod's Parliamentary Companion" is published by Messrs. Whitaker and Co. The merits of that work have been approved by forty-eight years' experience, and its complete revision, which was made necessary by the great amount of change in the composition of the new Parliament, has been effected with the utmost diligence and correctness. We are informed that in the new House of Commons there are not less than 236 members who did not sit in the last House, and 201 of them were never before in Parliament. Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin publish a volume compiled by Mr. William Saunders, author of two approved books of political discussions and American travel. It is entitled "The New Parliament, 1880;" and about half of its contents have the character of historical narrative, or collected newspaper reports and public documents, showing the immediate occasions, the progress, and the result, of the late General Election and of the change of Government. The remainder of the volume presents a very complete and accurate record of all the constituencies, the electoral returns, comparing those of 1874 with 1880, and the personal connections and antecedents of the new Members of Parliament, as well as of the new Ministry and subordinate offices. Messrs. Ward and Lock's "Guide to the House of Commons, 1880," is equally to be commended. "Debrett's Illustrated House of Commons and the Judicial Bench" hardly requires a word of praise, its merits are so well known. It is compiled and edited by Mr. Mair, and the edition for 1880 is marked by his wonted accuracy. Messrs. Dean and Son publish it. A supplement to that most useful work, "Who's Who in 1880" (published by Bailey and Co.), contains lists of the New Ministry, the new Peers, and the new House of Commons, with the names of ex-Members; also the new Privy Councillors, the new Baronets, and the new Knights, corrected to May 19. Bacon's "Parliamentary Map of the British Isles;" and likewise the "Political Maps" of England and Wales, of Scotland and of Ireland, published by Mr. E. Stanford (which latter are compiled by Mr. E. Shaw Lefevre), exhibit at a glance the topographical situation of affairs in the present condition of party politics.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

King Humbert on Monday received Ismail Pasha, the ex-Khedive of Egypt, in private audience.

Vice-Admiral Sir B. Seymour, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, arrived at Rome on Monday.

In the Chamber yesterday week a man in the gallery threw two large stones into the hall below. No one was hurt. When arrested, the man, who is a tailor of Viterbo, named Gordigliani, said that he had come to Rome with the intention of killing a personal enemy or committing suicide, but being in a desperate and starving condition he had done something to cause himself to be arrested. According to one statement, he also alleged that some time ago he had received a commission to come to Rome to assassinate the King. When he was seized his pockets were found to be full of stones. It is believed that the man is mad.

The official reports furnished to the Minister of War show that on April 1 this year the Italian army consisted of 218,210 men, of whom 103,210 were infantry of the line, 39,290 mountain corps and Bersaglieri, 22,177 cavalry, and 22,530 infantry.

SPAIN.

On Sunday morning the King and Royal family were present in the Atocha Cathedral at a splendid religious and military ceremony to inaugurate the monument of Marshal Concha. Near the spot where he fell mortally wounded on June 27, 1874, close to the sierras of Monte Muro, near Estella, Marshal Quesada, with military pomp, inaugurated last Saturday another marble monument in a vineyard of Navarre, to the memory of Manuel Concha, Marquis del Duero.

AMERICA.

General Hancock's nomination as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and that of Mr. English for the Vice-Presidency, have been enthusiastically received by the Democratic press throughout the country.

General Winfield Scott Hancock has held a prominent position in American politics for many years. He is between fifty-six and fifty-seven years of age. His parents were in good circumstances, and he was entered as a student at West Point Academy, where he graduated in 1844. He served during the Mexican War in 1846, and was promoted for gallantry. In the great Secession War he accompanied General M'Clellan's army on the Potomac, distinguishing himself at the battle of Williamsburg. He was also engaged in the battle of Fredericksburg, where General Burnside was defeated, and took part in the campaign of General Hooker on the Rappahannock, ending in the disaster of Chancellorsville, where the celebrated Stonewall Jackson received his death wound. He subsequently took a prominent part in the great battle at Gettysburg, which ended in the frustration of General Lee's invasion of Pennsylvania. Still later, he commanded a body of troops in the series of actions which were fought during the Wilderness campaign and the advance of General Grant upon Richmond. General Hancock has since the war held important political positions, and was a prominent candidate for the Presidency in 1868.

Diplomatic relations have been finally broken off between Brussels and the Vatican. Early in the present month the recall of the Belgian Legation was notified to the Pontifical Government, and all efforts to obtain a postponement of the measure have proved unsuccessful.

A curious bequest recently made to the city of Vienna by a wealthy banker, Herr Heinrich Lustig, was the subject of animated discussion last week at a meeting of the Viennese Municipality, specially convened to decide upon its acceptance or rejection under the conditions prescribed by the testator. The Daily Telegraph states that the legacy consists of thirty thousand francs, to be deposited in the State savings bank at the usual interest, the said interest to be collected every quarter and added to the capital, and this process to be repeated until the interest shall amount to an annual income of five millions of florins, a result attainable in something less than two hundred years from the date of the first deposit. When this cumulative operation shall have been completed the income is to be applied to the erection and endowment of orphanages, hospitals, and asylums in Vienna, and subsequently in Prague, Pesth, Brünn, Linz, and other large towns duly enumerated in Herr Lustig's testament. Should the city of Vienna not think fit to accept his bequest upon these terms, the testator directs that it be tendered by his executors to the City of Paris "which," he observes, "will unquestionably carry out his wishes." The will containing these eccentric dispositions closes with the following paragraph: "The benefits accruing from this legacy shall be accorded to men of all creeds whatsoever; but I desire that priests of every religion and sect may be debarred from exercising any influence upon the institutions thus founded." By a considerable majority, the Municipality of the Kaiserstadt resolved to accept Herr Lustig's bequest, and to fulfil all the conditions attached thereto.

VOLUNTEERS.

Last Saturday witnessed the parade in and near the metropolis of nearly 15,000 volunteers, most of whom were ordered out for the annual Government inspection by officers of the regular troops.

The 22nd Middlesex (Queen's Westminster) were inspected on the Horse Guards' Parade. When they marched on to the ground, with Lieut.-Colonel the Duke of Westminster, K.G., at their head, they were in twelve companies of about twenty-seven files, or about 900 of all ranks, and presented a fine and solid appearance. Major-General Higginson, C.B., commanding the Home District, was the inspecting officer.

The 2nd London, which had an hour previously mustered at St. George's Barracks, were subsequently inspected on the same ground by Colonel Philip Smith, Grenadier Guards, in the presence of General Higginson and other officers. The 2nd London were in ten companies of twenty-five files, the total muster showing an attendance of 744, slightly in excess of last year's. Lieut.-Colonel Vickers was in command. At the end of a close inspection Colonel Smith expressed his satisfaction with the drill and appearance of the regiment.

On the parade-ground of Wellington Barracks the 3rd Middlesex Artillery Brigade were formed for inspection by Colonel Waller, Royal Artillery. There were eleven batteries on the ground, and a 40-pounder siege battery horsed. The brigade was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Ray. After the inspection in line, march-past in open and quarter column, and the manual and firing exercises, the various detachments were detailed for gun, repository, and gyn drill, with which and the general appearance of the brigade Colonel Waller was much pleased.

Colonel Gipps, Scots Guards, inspected the 1st Tower Hamlets in the Regent's Park, the parade state showing an advance on last year's return from 680 to 814.

The 37th Middlesex (Bloomsbury) also had a large increase in their numbers for inspection, which was held in the grounds of the Foundling Hospital by Colonel Fitzroy, Coldstream Guards. The "state" showed 891 of all ranks, compared with 824 last year, the present enrolled strength being 1000.

The St. George's (11th Middlesex) were inspected in the grounds of Lambeth Palace by Colonel Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards. In this case, also, the muster exceeded the last inspection. The battalion was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay.

The 1st Middlesex Engineers went through the official ordeal in Hyde Park for battalion drill, and at the headquarters, Chelsea, for engineering, Colonel Dawson Scott, R.E., being the inspecting officer. Lieutenant-Colonel Ball was in command. The muster was 532 of all ranks, which is a slight decrease on that of last year's (563).

Other regiments inspected were the 40th Middlesex, 3rd Tower Hamlets, 4th Surrey, and 26th Kent.

The ten days under canvas which the London Rifle Brigade have had at Mitcham-common for purposes of instruction were practically brought to a close last Saturday with the official inspection of the camp and the regiment by Colonel Philip Smith, Grenadier Guards. The regiment was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Haywood, whose field-officers were Major Adrian Hope and Major and Adjutant Ewens. With their movements and the inspection of the camp the gallant officer expressed himself in high terms of satisfaction. The camp has been a pattern of neatness and cleanliness, and the task of awarding the prizes for the best kept lines by no means an easy one. The brigade goes into camp next month at Wimbledon for a fortnight, prior to which the Duke of Cambridge will make his annual inspection.

On the invitation of Dean Stanley, hon. Chaplain of the regiment, the Queen's (Westminster) attended Divine service on Sunday in the Abbey, parading in the first instance at New Palace-yard, under the command of the Duke of Westminster, and marching to the sacred edifice, preceded by the drums and fifes. The Dean preached an eloquent and appropriate sermon.—The 3rd City of London Rifles also paraded for Divine service, and marched to St. Paul's Cathedral, where the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. L. Davies.—The 37th Middlesex Rifles paraded in Russell-square at 10 a.m., and marched to St. Giles's Church.

The English team, who recently won the Volunteer International Challenge Trophy, have requested the Lord Mayor of London to be the custodian of it until the next annual competition, and the Trophy will be formally handed over to his Lordship at a public ceremony, to be held in the Guildhall on July 26, being the Monday succeeding the Wimbledon Meeting. Should the Elcho Shield be won by England it will be presented at the same time.

After seven days' sojourn under canvas at Bobbing, the East Kent, numbering 700, struck their camp last Saturday. The volunteers behaved in an exemplary way, and the organization and management of the camp called for high commendation. The duties of camp life were agreeably varied on Tuesday and Thursday by concerts in the canteen tent, and on Friday the volunteers underwent a most satisfactory inspection. Colonel Knocker, the commanding officer, who is most popular with his men, and most of the other officers shared the week's work.

On Monday a meeting of the members of the Hull Artillery Brigade was held at the barracks, about 800 men being present. Colonel Commanding Humphrey, who was received with enthusiastic cheering, said he thought a few days ago he had taken his farewell. He met them, however, still as their commanding officer. His resignation and those of the other officers who resigned with him had been returned. His character had been vindicated publicly in the House of Commons, the Minister of War having declared the charges against him unfounded and frivolous. The Colonel concluded by asking the men to take back their uniforms and recommence drill. Every hand was held up in token of assent.

The International Rifle-Match between the American and Irish teams on Tuesday resulted in a victory for the Americans by twelve points. In the first competition, at the 800-yards range, the result was a tie—the even score of 436 being made on both sides. At the 900-yards range the Irish riflemen fell behind eight points, 428 being scored by them, as against 436 by the Americans. At this range Majore made the score of 74 for the Irish out of a possible 75; and for the Americans Mr. Rathbone and Major Clark each made the highest total of 75. At the 1000-yards range the contest was decided. The Americans made a total of 420, and the Irish scored 416, thus dropping four points. The grand total for America was 1292, and for Ireland 1280. The Americans, therefore, won by twelve points. Both teams were cheered when the match terminated. The riflemen on both sides were entertained at dinner by the Lord Lieutenant.

Volunteers will regret to learn that the Donegall match has disappeared from the Wimbledon programme, and that the Irish Challenge Trophy (as the splendid cup, given for annual competition by the Marquis of Donegall in 1866, was formerly called) will this year not form one of the ornaments of the prize tent. Some time ago the Marquis expressed a wish that only privates should compete for the cup, which for the last five years has been contested between twelve men of the regular army and twelve volunteers, irrespective of rank in the service. The proposed change of conditions was found so distasteful at Hythe that an intimation was forwarded to the National Rifle Association stating that no Army team would be organised if the new condition was insisted on. It was felt by the Council of the National Rifle Association that such a condition would render the contest unequal, the Volunteer private, who cultivates marksmanship, being usually in a much more favourable position for devoting the necessary time to practice than the private in the Army.

The council of the National Rifle Association, as a substitute, have initiated a match to be called "The United Service Match," open to five teams from five different branches of the service, namely—an army, a navy, a marine, a militia team, and, lastly, a team from the yeomanry and volunteers. The conditions are to be similar to those of the Donegall match—twelve men on each side firing with the Martini seven shots at 200, 500, and 600 yards. The National Rifle Association will give £40 annually in money as a prize, and it is hoped that a couple of hundred pounds or so will be forthcoming from the public to provide a challenge cup to replace the famous Donegall Cup or Irish International Trophy.

Lady Charlotte Schreiber and Mr. Montague Guest, M.P., Provincial Grand Master of the Dorset Freemasons, laid on Thursday week the foundation-stones of the new church of St. Paul's, Poole. Lord Wimborne has promised £500 towards the fund. The ceremony was attended with Masonic honours.

Last Monday the Bishop of Durham consecrated a new church at Stillington, near Stockton-on-Tees. This is the fourth church the Bishop has consecrated within less than three weeks. West Pelton Church was consecrated on the 9th, St. Matthew's, Newcastle, on the 14th, and South Hylton on the 21st ult.

Mr. Hugh Birley, M.P., has given £50 to the Bishop of Bedford's East London Church Mission; Bishop How himself gives £200 a year; Mr. Jacomb, one of the Bishop's neighbours at Clapton, gives £100 a year; Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., £100; and a layman not resident in the diocese £500, in addition to an annual subscription of £75 for special parishes.

A portrait of the Dean of Llandaff (by Mr. Sydney Hodges) was on Saturday last presented to Mrs. Vaughan as a token of esteem from a number of personal friends. Lord Fortescue, on behalf of the subscribers, presented the picture, and dealt on the great acquirements and eminent services of the Dean, and the widespread regard which was entertained for both him and Mrs. Vaughan by a large circle of friends.

On Tuesday the foundation-stone of the new Oratory in Brompton was laid by Dr. Bradshawe, Bishop of Nottingham, a former Priest of the Oratory. The new church will be in the Italian Renaissance style, and will be the most magnificent specimen of that school in England, next to St. Paul's Cathedral. The Duke of Norfolk has contributed £20,000 to the new structure and the Fathers of the Oratory £25,000.

The foundation-stone of a new Catholic Church at Caterham, Surrey, was laid on Thursday week by the Right Rev. Dr. Danell, the Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese, in the presence of a number of his clergy and the guests of the Priest in charge of the mission, the Rev. Francis J. Roe. The buildings are in active progress, and comprise a church, schools, and presbytery, rendered necessary in part by the newly built Guards' Dépôt in the neighbourhood.

The General Baptist Conference was concluded at Nottingham on Thursday week. At the evening session petitions to the House of Commons were adopted in favour of Sunday closing and the abrogation of the enactments upon which the opium traffic between England and China rested. Resolutions were passed expressing satisfaction at the adoption by the House of Commons of Sir Wilfrid Lawson's resolution on local option, and approving of the recognition and application by the Prime Minister of the principle that no religious views which a man might have should disqualify him from holding high office under the Crown. A third resolution was adopted expressing an opinion that a simple affirmation of allegiance might safely be substituted for the usual Parliamentary oath. The next conference will be held at Norwich, the Rev. Dawson Burns being the president.

Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, has offered the Baptist Missionary Society £4000 in aid of its Congo Special Mission, and particularly for the purchase and perpetual maintenance of a steamer on that river and its affluents.

A large Wesleyan chapel was opened on Monday at Roupell Park, Streatham, by the Rev. Dr. Pope.

The annual conference of the Methodist New Connexion has been held at Longton, under the presidency of the Rev. Dr. Cocker, Principal of the Ranmoor College. An increase of 255 members during the past year was reported. In the course of the conference a deputation from the Wesleyan Methodists attended and offered fraternal greetings, which were warmly reciprocated. It was decided to start a special fund to pay off existing debts, a sum of £12,000 being fixed upon, towards which over £2000 was promised.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

The annual festival of the Royal Caledonian Asylum was held at the Freemasons' Tavern last week. The Marquis of Tweeddale presided, and the company numbered about 300. As the result of an earnest appeal, contributions to the funds of the asylum amounting to about £1900 were announced.

At the anniversary festival of the Poplar Hospital—Mr. David Powell, jun., chairman of the East and West India Dock Company, presiding—the donations amounted to £1600.

The Earl of Lathom presided last Saturday at the annual inspection of the Royal Masonic Institution at Wood-green, and distributed the prizes to the successful boys of the year.

The Printers' Pension Corporation has been made the depositary of a gift of stock in the East India Railway Company, value about £550, producing an annuity of £23 per year, to be applied to the relief of such deserving workmen, or widow or orphan child of such workmen, employed in "La Belle Sauvage Printing and Publishing Works," as the donor, Mr. Thomas Dixon Galpin, or his sons may select.

The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress yesterday week paid a state visit to the Infant Orphan Asylum at Wanstead upon the occasion of the celebration of the fifty-third anniversary of this admirable institution for the education and maintenance of necessitous orphan children. His Lordship was accompanied by Mr. Sheriff and Mrs. Woolloton, Mr. Sheriff and Mrs. Bayley, Under-Sheriffs Crawford and Wragg with their wives, and the officers of the civic household.

Mr. Brassey, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, distributing prizes to the pupils of the training-ship Conway in Liverpool last week, said that successive Boards of Admiralty, in sending young seamen afloat to learn practically their profession by means of training-ships, acted in conformity with the advice of the finest seamen of the day. The Admiralty, whilst taking every precaution against the recurrence of disasters such as the Eurydice, could not suffer themselves to be deterred by the apprehensions of similar catastrophes from sending boys to sea, where alone they could learn the duties of their calling.

On Monday the Bishop of Rochester presided at the annual distribution of prizes to the pupils in the Royal Asylum of St. Anne's, Streatham-hill. The prizes to both boys and girls were distributed at the same meeting, prizes being given in six classes of girls and seven classes of boys, besides the prizes to the boys and girls of the Town School. Several of the pupils received prizes for proficiency in two or three branches, and one lad named Crews, gained considerable applause in carrying off four out of the five prizes given to the second class. The proceedings were enlivened by several songs capitally sung by the children, and after the distribution the Bishop, whose manner had already won the hearts of the children, gave them some fatherly counsel in a remarkably genial style.

At St. Andrew's Hall, Newman-street, on Tuesday night, the tenth annual general meeting of the Cabdrivers' Benevolent Association was held, under the presidency of Major-General Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram, Bart. The report, which was read by Mr. G. Stormont Murphy, the honorary secretary, contained an encouraging statement of affairs, with the announcements that the Duke of Richmond and Gordon had consented to accept the position of president; and that the trusteeship, vacated by the resignation of Lord Carington, would be refilled by Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P.

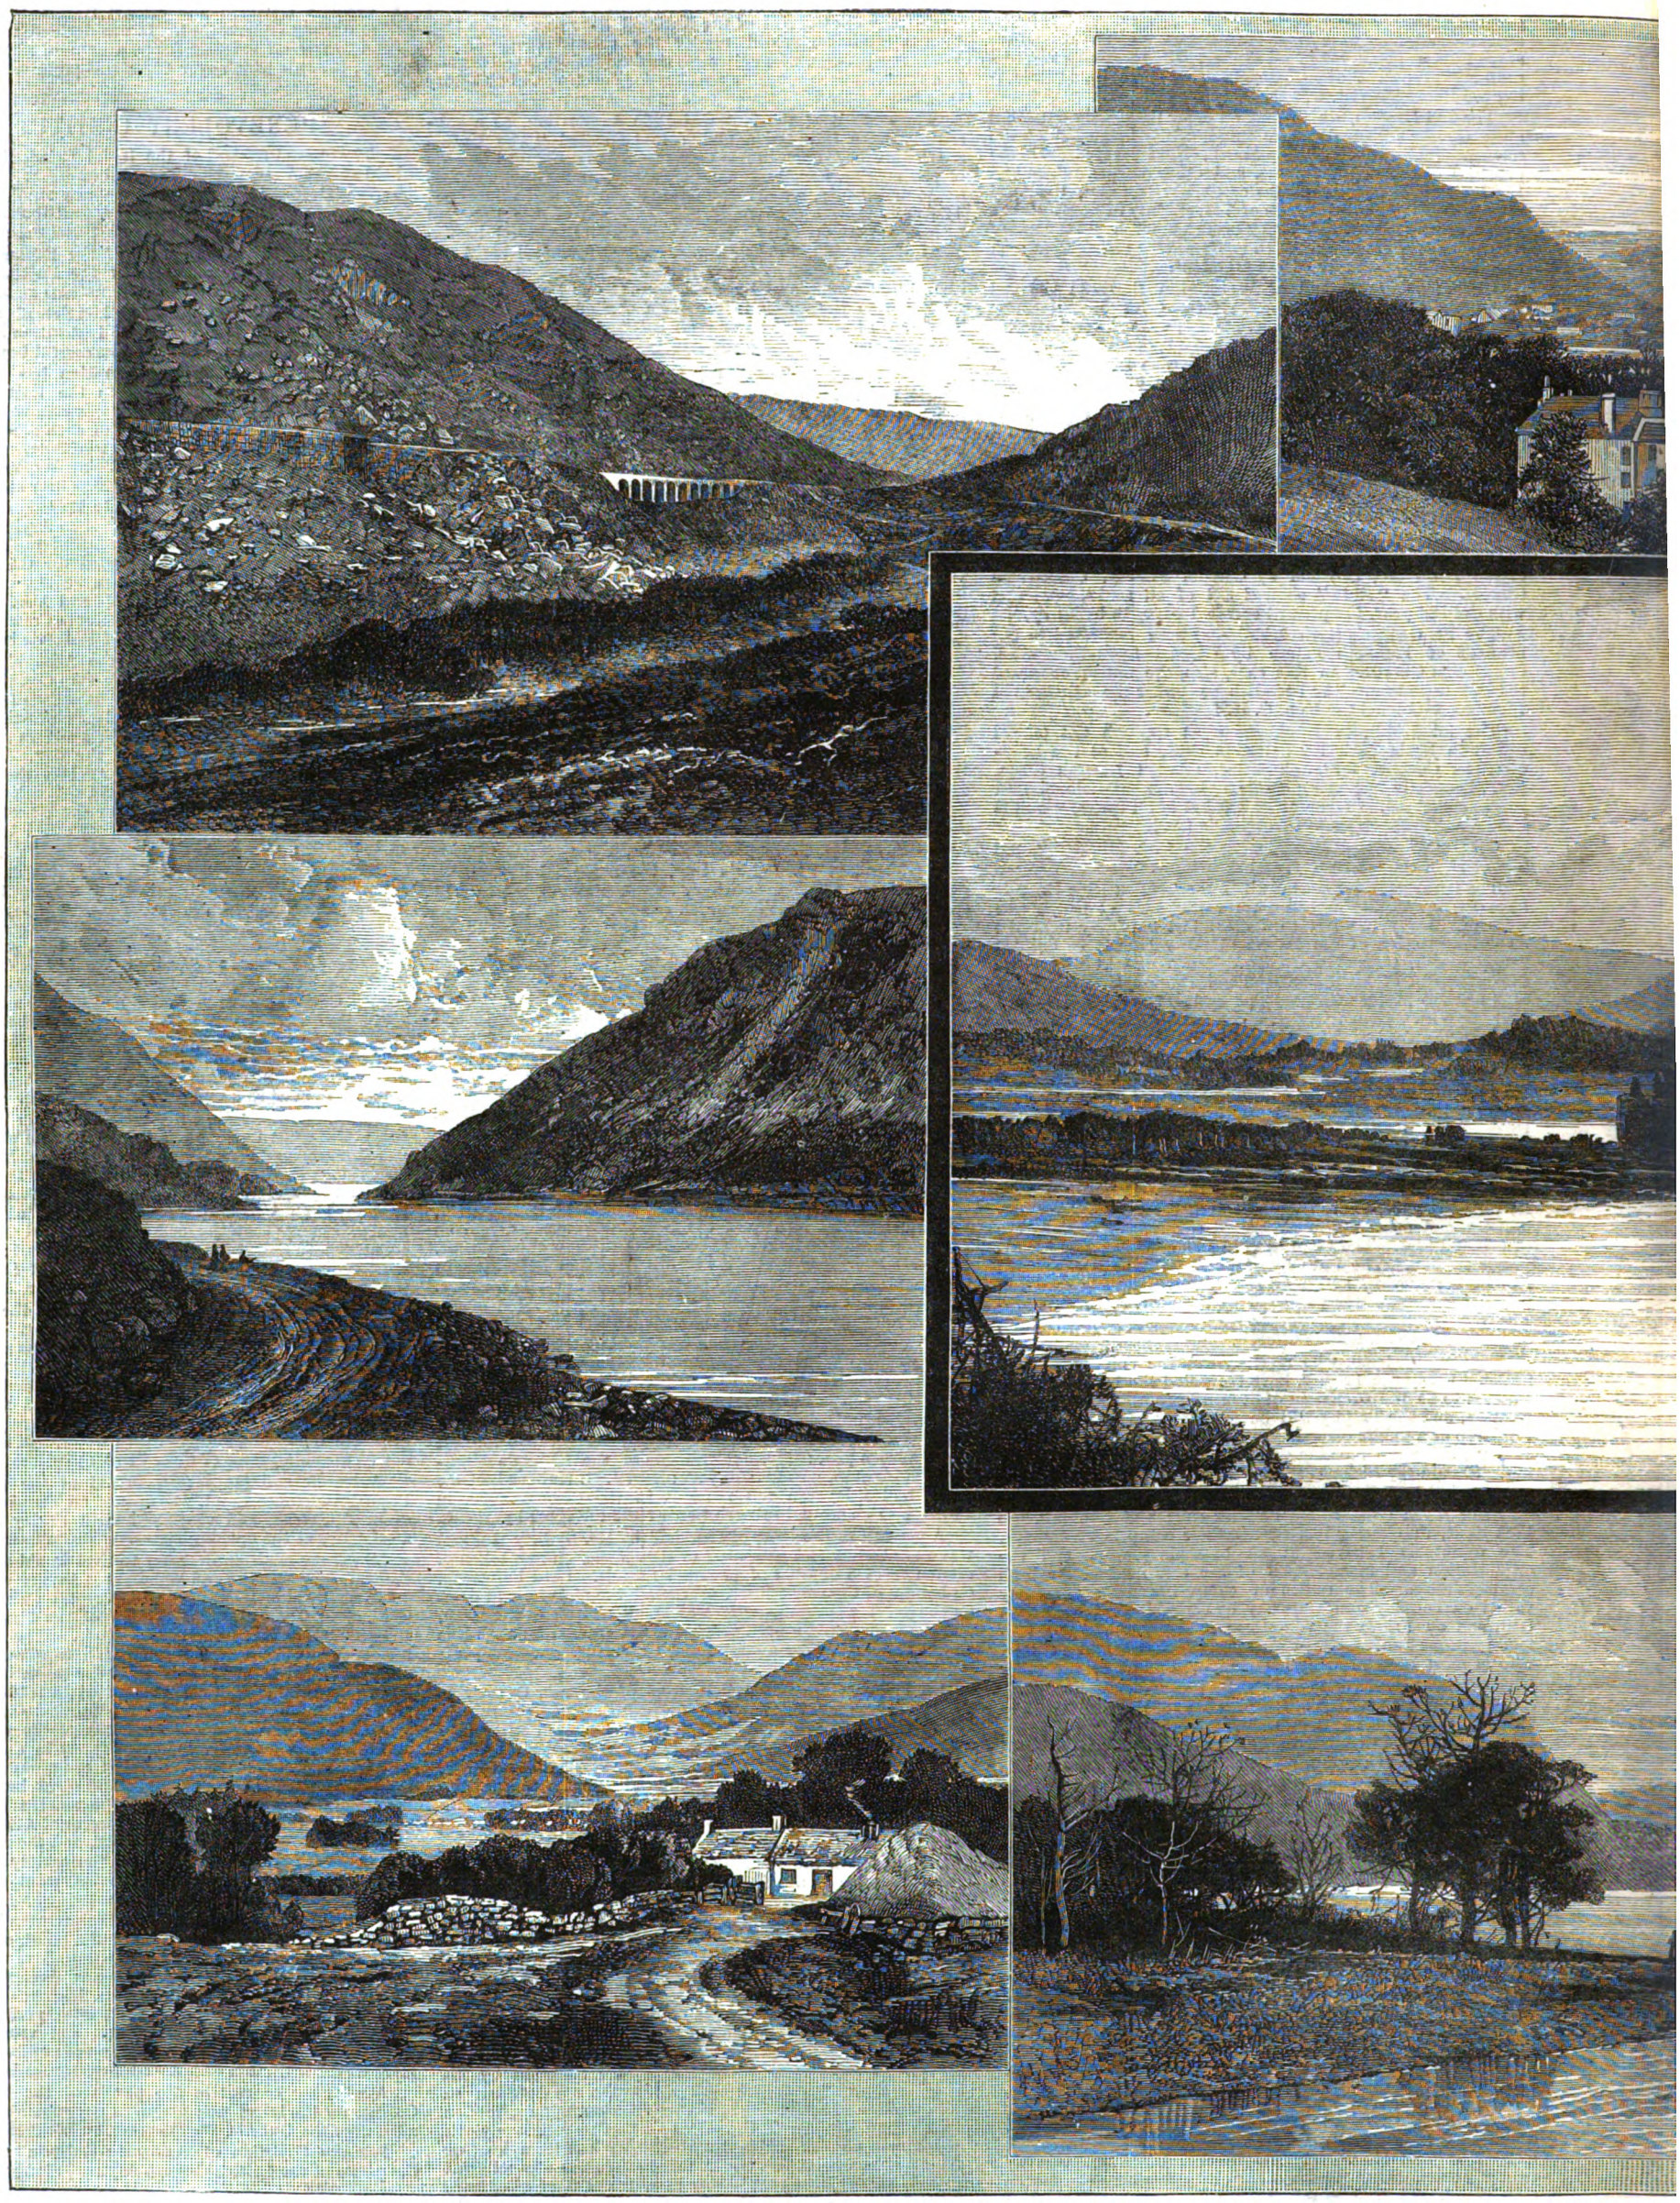
The twenty-first annual meeting of the Metropolitan Drinking-Fountain and Cattle-Trough Association was held at the Mansion House on Tuesday, when the adoption of the report was moved by the Duke of Westminster, and seconded by the Earl of Derby, who warmly commended the objects of the organisation. The 735 fountains and drinking-places under the society's care cost £12 a day, merely to keep them in proper repair and supplied with water, and if the money is not forthcoming some of those drinking-places must be closed.

A bazaar and fancy fair, in aid of the Royal Masonic Pupils' Assistance Fund, was opened on Tuesday at the Freemasons' Tavern, and continued until Friday evening. The attendance at the opening ceremony was numerous.

The forty-sixth anniversary festival in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan Beer and Wine Trade Asylum and Benevolent Fund was held on Tuesday at the Crystal Palace—Mr. Philip Chasemore Gates, Q.C., chairman of the New Westminster Brewery Company, taking the chair. The object of the society is to raise a fund from which to allow temporary or permanent assistance to members of the trade. The asylum at Nunhead-green, Peckham, was erected in 1852-3, at a cost of £3000, including £550 paid for the purchase of the freehold. Part of this sum was raised by subscriptions from the trade and the remainder was voted from funds in the hands of the Protection Society. On a portion of the ground on which the seven almshouses of the asylum stand eight houses have been built, and these having been let, the rents, after payment of rates, taxes, repairs, &c., yield an income of £120 a year. The small debt incurred has been paid off, and the rents now form a permanent part of the income of the society. During the evening Mr. Colin Oliphant read a list of donations, amounting in all to 1150 guineas.

For the purpose of illustrating the progress being made in France in the musical education of the blind, a séance musicale was given at the Mansion House on Tuesday, when pupils of the Institution Nationale des Jeunes Aveugles (Paris), by special permission accorded to Mrs. Richardson-Gardner by the Ministre de l'Intérieur et des Cultes, performed a well-selected programme of instrumental and vocal music. On Thursday another séance was given by the pupils at St. James's Hall, at the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson-Gardner.

A morning concert of the pupils of the Royal Normal College for the Blind was given at Grosvenor House, by permission of the Duke of Westminster, on Wednesday.



Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein will distribute the prizes at the British Orphan Asylum, Slough, to-day.

The first meeting of the Senate of the new Royal University of Ireland was held in Dublin Castle on Thursday week. The Duke of Abercorn, Chancellor, presided. On the motion of Dr. Ball, ex-Lord Chancellor, seconded by Dr. McCabe, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, Lord O'Hagan, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was unanimously elected Vice-Chancellor.

THE CALLANDER AND OBAN RAILWAY.

A new line of railway to the Western Highlands was opened this week. Oban, the well-known resort of summer tourists on the Lorne coast of Argyllshire, near the mouth of Loch Etive, is now connected with the "Lady of the Lake's" country and the inland valleys of the Teith and Forth, at Callander, in Stirlingshire. The new line, opened last Wednesday throughout its entire length, was begun so long ago as 1867. It will save a long and circuitous navigation from Glasgow down the Clyde, up Loch Fyne, and through the Crinan Canal and Straits of Mull.

The distance by railway from Callander to Oban is but seventy-two miles, traversing some of the most romantic parts of Scotland. The line starts in a northerly direction. Along the eastern shore of Loch Lubnaig, overlooked by huge Ben Ledi, passing the Braes of Balquhidder and Loch Earn Head, with a fine view of Loch Earn, thence westward through wild Glen Ogle, visited by the Queen and Prince Consort in 1842, it reaches Loch Dochart, under the shadow of mighty Ben More. Here are the ruins of an old castle, on an island in the Loch, which the Campbells made their stronghold in times when clan against clan was often arrayed in war. It is said the Macgregors hit upon rather a novel plan of attacking it. In the winter, when the loch was frozen, they constructed a breastwork of trees and branches, which they pushed before them over the surface of the ice. On the loch is another island apparently formed by the interweaving of roots and stems of water-plants. This island is sometimes moved or shaken by the force of the wind and water. On the north shore of the loch are the ruins of a farmhouse, claimed to be the birthplace of Rob Roy.

At the head of Glen Orchy, in a lovely spot, nestles the tiny hamlet of Dalmally. It is an alluring retreat, surrounded by a profusion of grand landscape of mountain, glen, loch, and stream. We understand there is capital fishing and good shooting to be had. Past the village, onwards to Loch Awe, flows the River Orchy. The stream is crossed at Dalmally by a fine old bridge, which forms the connection with the road to Oban. At the north end of the bridge is the parish church, with the ancient burying-ground, and divided from this by the road is a grassy knoll, formerly the Gallow-hill of Glen Orchy, where the powerful Macgregors executed their traitors and captives. Converging into the valley of the Orchy, in which the village is embowered, are Glen Lyon, Glen Orchy, and Glen Strae. The expulsion of the "Red Macgregor" from this district is sung of by Scott in his "Macgregor's Gathering":—

> Glen Orchy's proud mountains, Coalchuirn and her towers,
> Glenstrae and Glenlyon no longer are ours;
> We're landless, landless, landless, Grigalach!

About half a mile from Dalmally the train crosses, on a long iron bridge, the head of Loch Awe. Everybody has heard of Loch Awe, and of the grand old ruin, Kilchurn Castle, built on a rocky promontory at the head of the loch. It is a square tower surrounded by high walls, with battlements and turrets at the angles. This castle was erected in the fourteenth century by the wife of Sir Colin Campbell, the Black Knight of Rhodes, and the founder of the Breadalbane family. She built it during the Knight's crusade in the Holy Land. Two hundred years afterwards the Breadalbane family enlarged the castle, and it was their residence until 1740. In the rebellion of 1745 it was garrisoned by the Royal troops. Dotted about Loch Awe are four-and-twenty islands, many of them exquisitely beautiful in form and colour, not a few preserving the remains of castle, monastery, or chapel, and all rich in legendary and historic associations.

Perhaps no portion of the route has a wilder aspect than at the Pass of Brander. Here the train runs along the side of the huge mountain Ben Cruachan at a considerable height. The pass is three miles long, and is a gorge of surpassing ruggedness. On both sides the mountains are lofty and exceedingly steep. In one part the depth is over 1300 ft., and the river Awe dashes along at the bottom. Often has this dangerous pass been the scene of bloody battles among the ever-contending clans. Scottish history tells how Robert Bruce encountered and almost exterminated one of the rebellious clans; and how Sir William Wallace defeated another of these war-loving factions. Not far from the bridge of Awe, which may be remembered as the scene of Sir Walter's tale "The Highland Widow," there are, on the brow of both banks of the river, numerous cairns of stones covering the resting-places of those who were slaughtered in the Bruce escapade. The formation of the line through this pass is a marvellous feat of modern engineering skill.

Oban, the terminus of the line, is a delightful seaside watering-place. It is sheltered by the island of Mull from all harsh-blowing breezes. Being made so much more easily accessible by this railway, it will become a still more popular haven for holiday-makers. The railway station occupies a conspicuous and advantageous site close to the bay at the southern extremity of the village. The building is of the attractive Swiss style of architecture, being principally of polished pine, and having a glass roof. The platform arrangements are ample, while there is excellent accommodation for train travellers and the officials. Considerable improvements are to be made at the harbour, in order to permit passenger-steamers to berth close to the pier at the station.

The New Roker Park, Sunderland, consisting of thirteen acres, the gift of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and six acres, the gift of Sir Hedworth Williamson, of Whitburn Hall, Sunderland, was opened last week by the Mayor (Alderman Storey) in the presence of 20,000 inhabitants. At the same time, 10,000 children celebrated the Sunday School Centenary.

There was a goodly gathering in the parish schools of St. Michael's, Ebury-street, last Saturday, to witness the distribution of prizes to the successful competitors in a show of flowers grown in the windows of London. The competition was highly creditable, and 300 persons exhibited specimens of their window culture. The Rev. Canon Fleming, Vicar of St. Michael's, aided by the Rev. Canon Wilkinson, Vicar of St. Peter's, distributed the prizes; and the Duke of Westminster addressed a few words to the competitors.

The annual meeting of the Cobden Club was held on Saturday last at the Century Club, Pall-mall-place, Mr. J. B. Potter, M.P. for Rochdale, in the chair. There are upwards of 500 subscribing members of the club, and nearly 300 honorary members. On the club list are the names of about 200 members of the Houses of Parliament. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said they had now in the Cabinet of fourteen Ministers twelve who were members of the Cobden Club. They would be very glad to welcome the new French Ambassador, M. Challemel-Lacour—who would attend the Cobden Club dinner, they expected, on July 10—knowing him to be a stanch free trader, and to have been associated during his life with the political and economical principles which Mr. Cobden advocated. Mr. John W. Probyn was unanimously elected honorary treasurer, in the room of the late Mr. Richard Baxter.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The ranks of racing men were divided last week, the northerners naturally patronising Newcastle, while south countrymen were catered for at Stockbridge and Kempton Park. The Northumberland Plate has sadly degenerated since the days of Underhand and Caller Ou, and this year the "Pitmen's Derby" gained a more unsavoury reputation than ever, as favourites came and disappeared again like will-o'the-wisps. All through the piece, however, Victor Emmanuel (5 st. 12 lb.) held his place bravely, and, right up to the start, it was a case of "seven to one bar one," the Osbornes not thinking it possible that the highly-tried three-year-old could be beaten. He ran well, but was not quite good enough to take much part in the final struggle between Mycenæ (7 st. 13 lb.) and Inval (8 st. 6 lb.), a great fight between the pair resulting in the victory of the former by a head. As Mycenæ had incurred a 10 lb. penalty by his success in the Newton Cup, it was clear that he had something like a stone in hand on the original weights, and he has done good service for Mr. Vyner on several occasions. Parole (8 st. 12 lb.) ran well for a mile and a half, which he has shown again and again is the extreme length of his tether. Two or three other races at Newcastle were of more than passing interest. Simnel, the newly-named colt by Brown Bread—Alice Lee, made very light of a 10 lb. penalty in the Monkchester Plate, and the North Derby showed once more how greatly Fire King has been overrated. He was backed against the field, but was never in it with either Novice or Gildersbeck, the filly's running contrasting strongly with her wretched display in the Oaks. Favo appears to be greatly in need of a little well-earned rest, and Webb, who was in great form at the meeting, had to ride him desperately hard to get him home before old Knight Templar. It was asking a little too much of Mycenæ to expect him to win the Newcastle Handicap under 9 st. 8 lb.; and her penalty just stopped the Adrastia filly in the Seaton Delaval Stakes, though she beat everything except Abbess of Beauchief, a daughter of Prince Charlie, who received 15 lb. from her.

Though once or twice we were threatened with heavy rain, the weather at Stockbridge fortunately proved fine, and, as usual, the meeting on the picturesque downs was a very pleasant one, and no one grudged the veteran John Day and Tom Cannon their brilliant succession of victories. The Wednesday was devoted to the meeting of the Bibury Club. On the whole, backers were pretty successful, though they suffered a severe blow when the odds of 3 to 1 on Capuchin were upset by Jessie. Moll Davis, a half sister to Robert the Devil, made her début in the Twenty-Second Biennial; but the flaming reports of her excellence were soon contradicted by her position in the quotations, and she is in reality very moderate indeed. Sea Foam once more performed badly, and Chelsea would have had an easy task but for the unexpected form shown by Canace, who made him do all he knew to win by half a length. The Stockbridge Meeting proper began on the Thursday, and the members of the ring had all the best of the two days' racing. A good field of seven ran for the Stockbridge Cup, and when it became plain that the stable had no fancy for Hackthorpe, Phénix became all the rage. Until about one hundred yards from home he appeared to have the race at his mercy, but he has grown cunning, and, stopping to nothing at the finish, was caught and beaten by Elfe, a two-year-old in John Day's stable. Marksman and Couronne de Fer—two Derby seconds—are the only juveniles that have ever won this cup, which is run over a very severe six furlongs, and Elfe must be quite beyond the average. He was the first winning mount of Salter, jun., and the lad, not content with having broken the ice in such splendid style, carried off the next two races, Unless his head is turned by such a brilliant beginning, there is a great career before this light-weight. His style of riding reminds us forcibly of Archer's early doings, as he seems to get off wonderfully well, and, avoiding the temptation of trying to win "cleverly by a head," a ticklish performance which is only safe in the hands of such masters of the art as Fordham and Cannon, he keeps his horse going in earnest until he is well past the post. Jockeys of this stamp are none too plentiful, and his future efforts will be watched with the greatest interest. Scobell had no difficulty in taking both the Mottisfont and Hurstbourne Stakes, two of the richest prizes of the week. He is one of the most improved colts in training, and was evidently not half fit when beaten by Althotas at Northampton; indeed, he will not lack supporters if he should meet Sir Charles again this season. We had a good look at Robert the Devil, who was unopposed for a Biennial on the last day. He, too, has gone on the right way since Epsom, and looks like making a rare bid for St. Leger honours, even if Peck manages to send Bend Or to the post perfectly trained. We must not omit to mention that Cannon, who knows every inch of the Stockbridge course, scored seven wins during the week, and is now a good third on the list of winning jockeys.

A series of military competitions, including tent-pegging, lemon-slicing, and tilting at the ring, took place at the Agricultural Hall during last week. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, and other members of the Royal family, honoured the sports with their presence, and the general attendance on each day was very large. The profits were devoted to the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows.

In spite of very unfavourable weather, a meeting of the London Athletic Club, which was held at Stamford-bridge on Saturday, proved thoroughly successful. A level 100 Yards was won easily by C. L. Lockton, from M. Shearman and W. P. Phillips. The last named was by no means at his best, as, having formed one of the Kingston crew at Henley, he could not have trained properly, and Shearman, who won the level Quarter in the fine time of 51 sec., has almost given up sprinting. The handicaps were remarkable for the fine running of the everlasting C. H. Mason, who did as good as 2 min. 2 sec. for half a mile, and the success of H. L. Cortis in the Four Miles Bicycle Race, his time being 12 min. 12-¼ sec.

The trial-matches of the two University elevens mainly engrossed the attention of cricketers last week. Neither managed to win against the M.C.C. and Ground; but the Cambridge men did decidedly better than their rivals. Mr. A. G. Steel (51 and 37) was again in great form with the bat; but, thanks to the free scoring of Messrs. A. P. Lucas (37 and 46), T. S. Pearson (64), and A. W. Ridley (32), the M.C.C. won by 49 runs. None of these three gentlemen played against Oxford; but Barnes (118, not out) did yeoman service for the Club, and the Oxonians succumbed by nine wickets. The fielding of both University teams was below par, the Oxonians being particularly loose and slovenly. Morley bowled grandly in both matches, and Mr. A. G. Steel was once more very deadly with the ball. A wonderfully close match between Eton and Winchester resulted in the victory of the former by only eight runs; the scoring on both sides was very small. The Australians are gaining uninterrupted victories against Eighteens all over the country, and the Canadians are displaying far better form than on their first appearances in England.

Charming weather favoured the forty-sixth annual inter-University cricket-match at Lord's Ground on Monday and Tuesday last, and the result has fully justified those who expressed their belief in the superiority of Cambridge, who, apart from Mr. Steel, were a long way in advance of their opponents, both in batting and fielding. The Cambridge captain bowled very finely, but strange to say he was not successful with the bat in either innings. G. G. Studd, with 78, was the highest aggregate scorer in the match, and his success gave great satisfaction. The Hon. Ivo Bligh batted brilliantly for 72, whilst C. T. Studd, Whitfield, Lancashire, and Wilson all played up well for the success of their University. For Oxford, E. T. Hirst, 49 (not out); and M'Lachlan, 27, must be awarded the palm, as they undoubtedly saved their side from a "follow on," the score being 80 for nine wickets, and 132 for ten, the last wicket thus putting on no less than 52 runs. Fowler, Evans, and Colebrooke deserve a word of praise for their efforts in endeavouring to avert a defeat. The scene was as bright and picturesque as ever, and the attendance could not have been less than 20,000 on either day. Full particulars will be gleaned from the following score:—

Cambridge have now won twenty-three matches, Oxford twenty-one, and two have been drawn.

At Leamington on Thursday week the thirtieth Midland Counties' Archery Meeting was concluded, and the prizes were awarded. The principal lady winners were: Greatest gross score, £9, Mrs. Butt, West Kent Archers, 561; second, £7, Mrs. Lester, Grand National, 555; third, £6, Miss Legh, Cheltenham, 516; fourth, £5, Miss Allen, Blundell Sands, 512; fifth, £4, Mrs. Legh, Cheltenham, 505. Miss Wright, Barsdale Archers, won the prize for the greatest number of golds, and Miss Hollis, Cheltenham, that for the greatest score at sixty yards, Mrs. Hussey winning at fifty yards. The principal gentlemen winners were: Greatest gross score, £9, Mr. Bridges, Royal Toxophilites, 737; second, £7, Mr. Legh, Cheltenham, 666; third, £6, Mr. Remmington, Royal Toxophilites, 666; fourth, £5, Mr. Aston Edgbaston, 635; fifth, £4 10s., Mr. Neesham, Royal Toxophilites, 634; sixth, £4, Mr. Pardoe, Montgomeryshire, 629. Mr. Martin, Royal Toxophilites, won the prize for the greatest number of golds, and Mr. Barter, of the Wychwood Archers, that for the best gold—each £3.

Favoured by delightful weather, the prize tournament of the Kemptown Lawn Tennis Club concluded yesterday week, the final rounds in the double handicap having been won by Mr. Clarke and Mr. Ridley, receiving two bisques, beating Mr. H. J. Vernon and Miss Adshead. The single handicap was secured by Mr. T. J. Vernon, who, receiving two bisques, beat Mr. Jennings.

The ocean race of the Royal Cinque Ports Yacht Club was sailed on Monday from Dover to Boulogne and back, in a strong westerly breeze. Latona came in first, Egeria second, and Miranda third. A man fell off the Gwendoline, a couple of miles from home, and was drowned. The Gwendoline was leading at the time of the accident.

On Thursday morning last, that accomplished lady swimmer Miss Beckwith, daughter of the well-known Professor Beckwith, commenced her gigantic task of remaining in the water for sixty continuous hours. It will be remembered that Captain Webb was successful in a similar test of endurance some few months ago. The feat is being attempted in the large whale tank, in the Annexe of the Royal Aquarium, and if all goes well Miss Beckwith will finish her swim on Saturday night at eleven o'clock.

THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

A numerously attended meeting was held on Tuesday at the residence of Lord Aberdare, Queen's-gate, Kensington, for the purpose of affording increased facilities to ladies seeking a high-class education. Lord Aberdare occupied the chair, and a considerable number of ladies were present. The chairman, in opening the proceedings, said an association had been formed at Oxford for promoting the higher education of women some time ago, and Somerville Hall had been established for the reception of students coming from a distance to attend the lectures of the association. Owing to the success which had attended the movement, the premises were not sufficiently large, and they had been offered by St. John's College the freehold ground on which the hall stood for £7000. Three thousand more, however, would be required, so that in all £10,000 would have to be raised in order to accomplish the object which they had in view. He earnestly appealed to those present to use their exertions to collect the necessary funds.

At the conclusion of his Lordship's address, Mr. A. H. D. Acland briefly explained in detail the work which had been done in consequence of the establishment of the hall.

Professor Green moved a resolution in favour of the purchase of the property offered. Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., in seconding the motion, said he thought they ought not to stop at £10,000, but try and get more. Professor Legge supported the resolution, which was unanimously adopted.

Several other resolutions in accordance with the object of the meeting were also unanimously carried.

Amongst the other speakers who addressed the meeting were Mr. Stuart Rendel, M.P., Mr. Shaen, Mr. F. D. Mocatta, the Rev. J. Percival, and Mr. G. Palmer, M.P.

The latter gentleman signified his intention of contributing £100 towards the amount required.

The City Press says that the Shipwrights' Company have unanimously resolved to hold a second competitive exhibition of ship models in 1882.

OBITUARY.

SIR THOMAS KIRKPATRICK, BART.

Sir Thomas Kirkpatrick, seventh Baronet, of Closeburn, in the county of Dumfries, died suddenly on the 23rd ult., at Dover, on board his yacht. He was born in 1838, the eldest son of Sir Charles Sharpe Kirkpatrick, sixth Baronet, and succeeded to the title (created in 1685) at the death of his father, Oct. 9, 1867. He married, in 1866, Sophia-Anne, daughter of the late Mr. William Blanton, of Frampton-on-Severn, but by her (who died July 31, 1879) had no issue. The baronetcy devolves, in consequence, on Sir Thomas's next brother, now Sir James Kirkpatrick, eighth Baronet, who was born in 1841, and married, in 1872, to Mary Steward, youngest daughter of Charles John Fearnley, Esq., by whom he has two sons and two daughters. The Kirkpatricks of Closeburn are one of the oldest families in Scotland. Their history is replete with interest and vicissitudes. The estate of Closeburn was sold in the latter part of the last century to the Rev. James Stuart Menteath; and his grandson, Sir James Stuart Menteath, resold it to Mr. Baird, the great ironmaster, for £220,000. The story of "The Swans of Closeburn" is one of the prettiest episodes in Sir Bernard Burke's "Family Romance."

The deaths are also announced of—

Major-General William Bethell Gardner, Royal Artillery, on the 15th ult., at Cromal Lodge, Ardersier, N.B., aged sixty-four. He entered the Army, 1834, and attained the rank of Major-General, 1867.

Lady Harriet Jane Herbert, youngest daughter of Edward, second Earl of Powis, K.G., by the Lady Lucy Graham, his wife, daughter of James, third Duke of Montrose, on the 21st ult. Her Ladyship was born Dec. 21, 1831.

Lieutenant-Colonel Archibald Butter, younger, of Faskally, on the 19th ult., at Killiecrankie House, Perthshire, aged forty-four. He was eldest son of Archibald Butter, Esq., of Faskally, by Jemima, his wife, daughter of James Richardson, Esq., of Pitfour Castle.

George Dudley Ryder, Esq., second son of the Hon. and Right Rev. Henry Ryder, D.D., Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, by Sophia, his wife, daughter of Thomas March-Phillipps, Esq., of Garendon Park, Leicestershire, on the 19th ult., at 16, Palace Gardens-terrace, in his seventy-first year.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN JULY.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The third Eclipse of the year is an Annular Eclipse of the Sun on July 7, but invisible from Europe. It begins on the Earth generally at 43 minutes after 10h. a.m., in longitude 59 deg. 40 min. west of Greenwich, and latitude 22¼ deg. south. The Central Eclipse begins 31 minutes after noon, in 65 deg. west longitude and 52 deg. south latitude. The Annular Eclipse ends at 50 minutes after 1 p.m. in 8 deg. west longitude and 66½ deg. south latitude. The Eclipse ends at 37 minutes after 3h. p.m. At the Cape of Good Hope a Partia Eclipse will be visible.

The Moon is near Saturn during the morning hours of the 1st. She is near Venus on the 7th; but this is the day of New Moon. She is near Mercury during the evening hours of the 9th, and near Mars during the evening hours of the 10th; she is near Jupiter during the late hours of the 27th and morning hours of the 28th, and near Saturn during the morning hours of the 29th. She is nearest the Earth at noon on the 20th, and most distant from it on the morning of the 5th. Her phases or times of change are:—

New Moon	on the	7th	at 21	min.	after	1h. in the afternoon.
First Quarter	,,	15th	,, 16	,,	6	,, morning.
Full Moon	,,	21st	,, 2	,,	9	,, afternoon.
Last Quarter	,,	28th	,, 41	,,	11	,, afternoon.

Mercury is an evening star, setting on the 5th at 9h. 34m. p.m., or 1h. 20m. after sunset; on the 10th at 9h. 20m. p.m., or 1h. 8m. after the Sun; on the 15th at 9h. 0m. p.m., or 51 minutes after sunset; on the 20th at 8h. 37m. p.m., or 34 minutes after sunset; on the 28th the planet and Sun set nearly together; and from this day till Sept. 10 he (Mercury) sets in daylight. He is in his descending node on the 6th, at his greatest eastern elongation (26 deg. 21 min.) on the 8th, near the Moon on the 9th, at his greatest distance from the Sun on the 16th, and stationary among the stars on the 21st.

Venus rises on the 9th at 3h 46m. a.m., or 11 minutes before sunrise; on the 17th she rises with the Sun, and after this day she rises in daylight. She sets at sunset on the 8th; at 8h. 16m. p.m., or 11 minutes after sunset, on the 19th; and at 8h. 9m. p.m., or 19 minutes after sunset, on the 29th. She is due south on the 1st at 11h. 49m. a.m., on the 15th at 0h. 8m. p.m., and on the last day at 0h. 27m. p.m. She is near the Moon on the 7th, in superior conjunction with the Sun on the 13th, and at her least distance from the Sun on the 25th.

Mars is an evening star, setting on the 9th at 9h. 54m. p.m., or 1h. 42m. after the Sun; on the 19th at 9h. 27m. p.m., or 1h. 22m. after sunset; and on the 29th at 8h. 58m. p.m., or 1h. 8m. after sunset. He is due south on the 1st at 2h. 43m. p.m., on the 15th at 2h. 22m. p.m., and on the last day at 1h. 57m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 10th.

Jupiter rises on the 8th at 11h. 25m. p.m.; on the 18th at 10h. 47m. p.m., or 2h. 41m. after sunset; and on the 28th at 10h. 9m. p.m., or 2h. 18m. after sunset. He is due south on the 1st 6h. 27m. a.m., on the 15th at 5h. 37m. a.m., and on the last day at 4h. 37m. a.m. He is in quadrature with the Sun on the 10th, and near the Moon on the 27th.

Saturn rises on the 8th at 11h. 51m. p.m., on the 18th at 11h. 12m. p.m., and on the 28th at 10h. 34m. p.m. He is due south on the 1st at 7h. 7m. a.m., on the 15th at 6h. 15m. a.m., and on the last day of the month at 5h. 14m. a.m. Is near the Moon on the 1st and again on the 29th, and in quadrature with the Sun on the 21st.

The Duke of Sutherland distributed the prizes to the successful students in the medical and surgical college of St. Thomas's Hospital yesterday week.

The Directory of Stationers, Printers, Publishers, Booksellers, and Paper-makers, of which Messrs. Kelly and Co. publish a third edition, is serviceable to all who have business concerns with the trades belonging to literature. It extends to the whole of England, Scotland, and Wales, containing the names and addresses of more than sixty thousand persons. But we learn from the census statistics mentioned in the preface that, in 1871, nearly 400,000 persons were employed in various occupations connected with the making and selling of books, newspapers, and other printed matter. There are nearly two thousand newspapers and a thousand magazines in this country; and it is probable that the number will continue to increase.

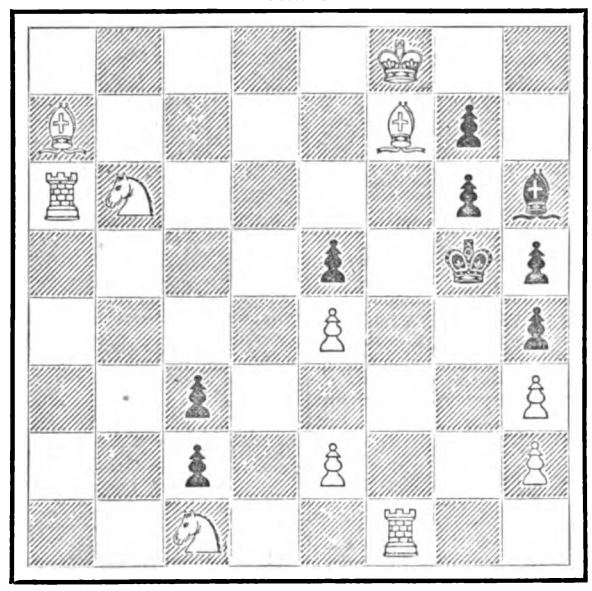
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1895.



WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to Q Kt 6th	K to B 4th*
2. Kt takes Q P	B takes Kt
3. Q to K Kt 6th (ch)	K takes Q
4. Kt to K 7th. Mate.

* If Black play 1. B to Q B 2nd, 1. B takes Kt, 1. B to Kt sq or R 6th, or 1. K to K 2nd, White continues with 2. Q to B 8th, mating in two more moves. If, in the main variation, Black play 2. K to K 3rd, the answer is 3. Q to B 8th (ch); if 2. K to K 5th, then 3. Q takes P (ch); and if 2. P to B 6th, then 3. Q to B sq (ch), mating in each case on the fourth move.

PROBLEM No. 1898.

By W. GRIMSHAW.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played at the Divan between Mr. JAMES MASON and an Amateur.

(Ruy Lopez).

WHITE (Mr. A.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)	WHITE (Mr. A.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	17. B to K B 4th	B takes B
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	18. Q takes B	Kt takes Kt
3. B to Kt 5th	P to Q R 3rd	19. Q takes Kt	Q R to Q sq
4. B to R 4th	Kt to B 3rd
5. Castles	Kt takes P	Black initiated the exchange of pieces with the view of gaining a little time by this move.
6. P to Q 4th	B to K 2nd
7. P takes P	Castles	20. Q to K B 4th	R to Q 2nd
8. B to Kt 3rd	Kt to Q B 4th	21. R to K 2nd	K R to Q sq
9. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q 3rd	22. Q R to K sq	P to Q B 3rd
10. P takes P	B takes P	23. Q to K 5th	Q takes Q
		24. R takes Q	R to K 7th
As is usually the case when this opening is carefully played on both sides, we have here an equal, but, unquestionably, a dull game.		25. K R to K 2nd
		White moves the wrong Rook. 25. Q R to K 2nd would have given him an even game.
11. B to K Kt 5th	Q to Q 2nd	25.	B to B 4th
As Black can capture the K B at any moment, 11. Q to K sq, followed by B to K 3rd and P to K B 3rd, seems also a safe line of play.		26. R to K 8th (ch)	R takes R
		27. R takes R (ch)	K to R 2nd
12. R to K sq		28. R to K 7th	R takes Q B P
Played according to the general principle of taking possession of the open file, but it is lost time, notwithstanding. We should have preferred 12. Q to Q 2nd.		29. P to K B 3rd	R takes Kt P
		30. R takes Kt P	B to K 3rd
12.	Kt takes B	31. P to Q Kt 4th	P to Q B 4th
13. R P takes Kt	Q to B 4th	The winning move, for White cannot now avoid the loss of another Pawn.
14. Q to Q 2nd	P to K R 3rd
15. B to K 3rd	B to K 3rd	32. Kt to R 4th	R to Kt 8th (ch)
16. Kt to Q 4th	Q to K R 4th	33. K to B 2nd	P takes P, and White resigned.

Played at Purssell's Coffee-House between the Rev. S. W. EARNSHAW and another Amateur.—(King's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. E.)	BLACK (Amateur).	WHITE (Mr. E.)	BLACK (Amateur).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	12. Q B takes P	B takes Q P
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P	Plausible enough, although it loses the game immediately.
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th	13. Q takes B	B takes Kt
4. B to Q B 4th	B to Kt 2nd	14. Q to R 8th	K to Q 2nd
5. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3rd	His only move. 14. K to B sq would have been followed by 15. B to R 6th (ch).
6. P to K R 4th	P to K R 3rd
7. P takes P	P takes P	15. Q to R 3rd (ch)	K to B 2nd
8. R takes R	B takes R	16. Q takes B	Kt to K 2nd
9. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q B 3rd	17. Castles (Q R)	Kt to Q B sq
10. P to K Kt 3rd	B to K Kt 5th	18. P to K 5th	P to Q 4th
10. P to Kt 5th is stronger.		19. B takes Q P, and wins.
11. P takes P	P takes P

From a number of inquiries lately addressed to us we infer that a demand for American chess literature is springing up in this country, and, in the interests of the game, we are glad to make a note of it. As practised in the States, even in the public rooms, chess is a wholesome and inexpensive pastime, and in its literature the somewhat dry details of matches and tournaments are always enlivened by flashes of the peculiar national humour. So far as public record goes, Franklin was the first American chessplayer, and his famous "Morals of Chess" was the first American work about the game. The earliest chess column of America appeared in the New York Spirit of the Times in March, 1845, and in 1858, a year after the first Congress, there were no fewer than thirty papers in the States devoted either wholly or in part to the cultivation of chess. All the American chess journals of the present time can be obtained in London at the American Exchange, 449, Strand; and we add, as our correspondents desire us to do so, that the most important of these are the Turf, Field and Farm (New York), the New York Clipper, the Hartford Times (Connecticut), the Free Press (Detroit, Michigan), and the Globe-Democrat of St. Louis.

Mr. Max Judd's enterprise of yielding the odds of a Knight to eight of the strongest amateurs of the St. Louis Chess Club is likely to turn out successful. When the score stood at 5½ to the amateurs, ½ to Mr. Judd, the latter contrived to throw away a game in twelve moves to one of the amateurs, after which he appears to have become aroused to some purpose, for he then scored four games in succession, and thus brought his score up to 7½ against 6½ for the Allies. Among the defeated players in this battle royal are Mr. Aarunsberg, of Chicago, to whom Mr. Hosmer yielded only the comparatively small odds of Pawn and move. The St. Louis Globe describes this match as one of the most interesting of the series and praises the play of both parties, Mr. Judd's especially.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated June 7, 1877) with four codicils (dated June 7, 1877, and March 9 and 30 and May 5, 1880) of Mr. Joseph Burrell, late of the Middle Temple and of Wimbledon, barrister-at-law, who died on May 14 last, was proved on the 10th ult. by William James Farrer and Joseph Arthur Burrell and Godfrey Burrell, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator gives to his son Henry the law books and furniture at his chambers in Lincolns Inn, and there are other legacies to his children; to his clerk, Benjamin Riches, an annuity of £50; to his executor, Mr. Farrer, 100 guineas; to his brother-in-law, Mr. Green, and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Lake, 50 guineas each; to his indoor and outdoor servants, 19 guineas each; and the residue of his estate, real, and personal, to all his children in equal shares as tenants in common.

The will (as contained in papers A, B, and C, executed respectively on June 20, 1862; Sept. 6, 1867; and Sept. 7, 1878) of Mr. John Barber, late of Parkhill, Derbyshire, who died on April 27 last, at No. 21, Irongate, Derby, was proved on the 21st ult. by John Thomas Barber, the son, the surviving executor, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Mathilde Barber, £100, with an annuity of £1000 and his furniture and effects for life; to his daughter Emily Catherine, £100, and upon trust for her, her husband, and children, £10,000; to his brother Henry, an annuity of £200; and some other bequests. All his real estate and the residue of the personalty he gives to his said son.

The will (dated Feb. 26, 1880) with a codicil (dated April 9 following) of Miss Sophia Anne Robertson, late of No. 22, Lowndes-square, who died on May 3 last, was proved on the 11th ult. by Edward Vaughan Richards, Q.C., the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testatrix bequeaths £20,500 to Mrs. Hornyold; £15,000 Consols upon trust for her sister, Mrs. Frances Eliza Buckland, and her (testatrix's) niece, Louisa Sophia Buckland; and other legacies, pecuniary and specific. The residue of her property is to be held upon trust for her said sister for life, and then for her children.

The will (dated Oct. 17, 1877) of Mrs. Martha Whitchurch Aldridge, late of Throop, Southampton, who died on May 1 last, was proved on the 4th ult. by the Rev. William Wheeler Aldridge, the nephew, James Read, and Samuel Bemister, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testatrix bequeaths £300 to the Congregational Church, Endless-street, Salisbury; £200 each to the British and Foreign Bible Society, the London Missionary Society, the London City Missionary Society, the Society for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of Dissenting Ministers, the Pastors' Retiring Fund, and Muller's Orphanage Society, Ashley Down, Bristol; £100 to the Hampshire Congregational Union; £2000 upon trust to pay the income to the minister for the time being of the Congregational Church at Throop, in addition to the provision made for him by the said church; £500 upon trust, to apply the income in the repairs of the said church; and a large number of legacies to relatives, friends, and others. The residue she leaves to her nephew, the said Rev. William Wheeler Aldridge.

The will (dated Nov. 23, 1867) with two codicils (dated Feb. 27, 1872, and July 17, 1873) of Mrs. Ellen Belfield Gauntlett, late of High-street, Southampton, who died on April 27 last, was proved on the 5th ult. by George Atherley, the Rev. Arthur Bradley, and the Rev. William D. Harrison, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. There are numerous legacies to relatives and others; and £300 Consols each, free of legacy duty, to the Southampton Dispensary, the Southampton Infirmary, and the Female Orphan Asylum, Southampton. The residue of her real and personal property the testatrix gives to the said George Atherley and Mrs. Selina Forrest.

The will (dated Feb. 14, 1877) with a codicil (dated Oct. 9, 1878) of Mr. Tilden Smith, late of Knelle, in the parish of Beckley, Sussex, who died on April 6 last, was proved on the 5th ult. by James Smith, the brother, Francis Smith, the nephew, George Jenner and Hugh Boxall, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. After making some bequests, the testator leaves the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust for his six children.

The will (dated April 29, 1878) of Mr. John How, late of Woodville, Northam, Cornwall, merchant, who died on Feb. 21 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by Miss Mary Jane Evans How, Miss Ann Evans How, and Miss Bessie Helena How, the daughters, the acting executrixes, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000.

The will (dated June 16, 1876) with two codicils (dated June 24, 1878, and Aug. 12, 1879) of Mr. Robert Hesketh, late of Earlswood Mount, Redhill, who died on April 25 last, was proved on the 4th ult. by Robert Lempriere Hesketh and Everard Hesketh, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The legatees under the will are testator's five children.

The will (dated July 11, 1879) of Mr. Henry Thomas Raikes, formerly of the Bengal Civil Service, and late of the Mall, Clifton, Bristol, who died on May 24 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by Charles Raikes, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator, after leaving legacies to his children, leaves the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust for his daughter, Augusta Caroline, for life, or until she shall marry, and then for all his five children.

The will (dated July 13, 1874) with three codicils (dated June 20, 1876, and July 23 and Nov. 4, 1878) of Mrs. Katherine Elizabeth Streatfield, late of No. 45, Brompton-crescent, South Kensington, who died on May 8 last, has been proved by Sir Archibald Keppel Macdonald, Bart., and Francis Charles New, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testatrix, among other legacies, bequeaths £100 to his Eminence Cardinal Manning for St. Thomas's Ecclesiastical Seminary, Hammersmith; and £50 to the Rev. George Bampfield, of Barnet, Herts, for the charitable works under his direction at Barnet, at his discretion.

Earl Cowper, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, was on Thursday week entertained at a banquet in the Mansion House, Dublin, by the Lord Mayor, Mr. E. D. Gray, M.P. A large company sat down to dinner in the Oak Room, and his Excellency was most heartily received.

A meeting of the sub-committee of the Sir Rowland Hill Memorial Fund was held yesterday week at the Mansion House, Mr. Walter Gilbey presiding. The fund was reported to amount of £16,700. In answer to the Committee's request for permission to erect a statue of Sir Rowland Hill beneath the portico of the General Post Office, Mr. Fawcett, the Postmaster General, said their wish should receive immediate consideration, and it was stated that nine sculptors of position had consented to compete for the erection of the statue. It was agreed to ask Dean Stanley's permission for the Committee to provide a memorial of an inexpensive character near the tomb of Sir Rowland Hill in Westminster Abbey.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER

THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandruff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post-free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—ROBARE'S AUREOLINE produces the beautiful Golden Colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Prices 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., of all Perfumers. Wholesale, HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough-street, W.; and 93 and 95, City-road, E.C. London. Pinaud and Meyer, 37, Boulevard de Strasbourg, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; 44, Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Florline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

"AND TEETH LIKE ROWS OF PEARLS."
JEWSBURY and BROWN'S Exquisite Compound,
THE ORIENTAL TOOTH-PASTE.
The celebrated original and only genuine Oriental Tooth-Paste is signed "JEWSBURY and BROWN, Manchester. Established 50 years." PEARLY WHITE and SOUND TEETH, a healthy action of the gums, producing that firmness and rosy brightness of colour so essential to beauty, and fragrant breath, are all insured by the use of this most perfect Dentifrice. Pots, 1s. 6d.; double, 2s. 6d. All Perfumers and Chemists.

KEATING'S POWDER is now sold in vastly improved Tins (holding a considerably increased quantity); it is perfectly unrivalled in destroying Bugs, Fleas, Beetles, Moths, and all insects. All furs and woollens should be well powdered before putting away. Beware of imitations. Price 1s. and 2s. 6d., of all Chemists.

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark, "Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 219 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly,
"GEORGE BOYD."

THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.

"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 29, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Snedeker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 219 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."

Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1880.

The condition of Ireland has occupied, and seems likely to continue to occupy, no small proportion of the time and the labours of Parliament during the semi-Session left at its disposal by the recent General Election. Whilst most of us may lament this, few will think themselves justified in complaining of it. The fact is not due to the choice of any political party; it is due almost exclusively to the course of events which may be fitly described as lying altogether out of the range of human power. The present Government cannot be held responsible for it; the late Government did not create it; it is one of the shadows projected from the past with which the present generation is called to deal, and which, however it may be lessened in its extent by the ascendancy of political justice, will yet cast Ireland into a somewhat exceptional state from that of other portions of the United Kingdom. We cannot get away from the misdeeds of our forefathers. We cannot, at will, break the sequence of effects from their causes. Ireland has undergone exceptional treatment, and many of the remedies of the evils to which she is now exposed must also be exceptional. Our duty seems to be to accept this position of affairs and, accepting it, honestly and boldly to adopt the line of action which, in our judgment, is best adapted to meet the necessities of the case. If, in doing so, we should feel ourselves compelled to resort to measures which, in the abstract, we should condemn as abnormal—more especially if, under a visitation afflicting to all of us, Ireland should suffer more severely than England or Scotland—this need occasion no surprise. We are called upon only to deal with the case as it is presented to us by overwhelming necessity, and, as a medical man must, occasionally, in the course of his practice, set aside hard and fast rules for the sake of saving life, so the Imperial Parliament must be guided as to the measures to which it will give its sanction by the exceptional circumstances which require its legislation.

The two measures of the Government introduced into the House of Commons with a view to the mitigation of present distress—namely, the Relief of Distress (Ireland) Bill and the Compensation for Disturbance Bill—contravene, in some respects, the principles of economic science. The chief argument in support of either of them is drawn from the extreme necessity of the case they have been framed to meet. They may be regarded as experiments in legislation; but, on the other hand, they may be justified by the allegation that no other alternative remains but such as humanity shudders to contemplate. True, the whole of Ireland is not, as we may say, in extremis. Three bad seasons—the last the worst of all—have not equally affected all parts of that almost exclusively agricultural nation. There are, however, considerable areas of distress in the Sister Isle, occasioned by the exceptional badness of the seasons, which verge close upon a state of famine, and which call aloud, we may even say irresistibly, for instant succour. What is to be done? We cannot fairly answer the demand made upon us without, in some degree, overstepping the principles which in ordinary circumstances we believe should govern legislative action. The governing power of the Empire cannot commit itself to maintain intact in Ireland all the axioms which are applicable in other parts of the United Kingdom. A drowning man is not to be treated on the same rules as a man in health. There are some districts of Ireland at the present moment all the information respecting which, authoritatively given, conduces to the conclusion that if we would save we must save by exceptional methods. Now, every one knows that this kind of action, whatever may be its justification, is open to reproach. We can always taunt a man for swerving from a direct line of progress, more especially if it be a line the superiority of which over others in all ordinary circumstances he has himself commended, but we may find ourselves, in the end, far wrong in having done so, because we have not taken into account the circumstances that have compelled him. We are all of us bound to act conformably to the conditions that are imposed upon us by superior power; and in so doing it is quite possible that we should here and there run athwart lines both of conviction and motive, which, in the usual affairs of life, would, and still do, command our reverent loyalty.

It is thus, and thus only, that the judgment of sound politicians, freed, of course, from the influence of political party, can reconcile itself to the measures proposed to Parliament by the Chief Secretary for Ireland. They cannot be indicated on any ground but that of necessity; and if the necessity be made out their vindication seems to us to be complete. But they must not go beyond the case which call for their enactment. They must not disturb the general run of affairs. What is required in parts of Ireland would be utterly inapplicable to other parts—monstrously so, to Scotland and England. The remedy, therefore, should not be more than commensurate with the disease, either in extent or duration. We speak in abstract terms, conscious as we are of the danger of entangling ourselves in mere party controversies. We are anxious, however to take into our account, as we think it behoves us to do, the history of the relations which this country has sustained to Ireland for two centuries at least. We have already undone much that our Fathers did, although we are pursued by the unhappy consequences of their work. We are now engaged in grappling with evils for which, not we, but those who went before us must be held responsible. But if we would do efficiently the duty that has devolved upon us, we must act boldly as well as warily; must do things we do not like to do, in the way of concession, in order to neutralise the effect of things done before our time, in the way of oppression.

On the whole, it seems to us that the spirit, motive, purpose, and proposals of the Government, with regard to Ireland, are such as fairly represent the predominant mind and will of the country. The cry of "plunder," "spoliation," and "confiscation" finds no general echo from the population of these realms. The attempt made by her Majesty's Ministers to meet the emergency with which they are bound to cope seems to us to be an honest attempt; and if it prove to be a mistaken one it will not be for want of accurate information, or of painstaking care to adapt the measures they propose to the case they have in hand. Some provisions in them excite our anxiety—but, satisfied that their drift is to good, we can but hope that they will realise in practice the expectations of their promoters.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

That was a curious discussion the other afternoon in the House of Peers arising from Lord Fortescue's proposal that there should be competitive examinations in athletics, as well as in mathematics, and other branches of learning ending in "ics" and "ology," in the case of candidates for commissions in the Army. If Lord Fortescue's scheme were to be adopted, a young gentleman desirous of serving his country in a military capacity would have the option of exhibiting his abilities either as a proficient in ancient and modern tongues, a geometrician, a historical essayist, and so forth; or he might win golden opinions—that is to say, examination marks—by exhibiting his skill in running, jumping, playing at the "tug of war," punching the "Saracen's Head," "tossing the caber," or "putting the stone." On the whole, the proposition amounts to a frank and loyal effort to help the young gentlemen with "Plenty of Pluck, no Brains."

Lord Dorchester thought that officers, not only in the Line, but in the Navy, should be taught to ride. At this some of their Lordships laughed. I fail to see anything to laugh at in the suggestion. Lord Dorchester repeated that equitation was very useful to naval officers who occasionally might have to carry despatches. It might also be pointed out, however, to his Lordship that sailors, like the "gens de qualité" cited by Mascarille in the "Précieuses Ridicules," "know everything without having been taught it." Most sailors are expert with their needles; yet who taught them to sew? And the art of riding seems to come quite as naturally to Jack. His performances in the manège might not meet with the approval of the riding master of a crack cavalry regiment; but he will manage to "stick on" his horse somehow or another.

I admire athleticism when it does not degenerate into mere brutish animalism; but I confess that I should not like to see the subaltern grades in the British Army filled with resuscitations of Fielding's Ensign Northerton. It would never do for our sub-lieutenants (and generals in embryo) to be largely composed of brawny young gentlemen who imagined that the Iliad was written by one "Homo," and who, like the Ensign just mentioned, entertained the profoundest contempt for the "Homo" in question. It is my business to have brains. If I had not some, I should be in St. Pancras Workhouse. And so I would give my humble vote to the officer with brains, in preference to the officer who could leap a five-feet water-jump or play polo, as William in "Black-Eyed Susan" played the fiddle, "like an angel." Look at Alexander: he was Aristotle's aptest pupil. Look at Cæsar. Did he not write the "Battle of Dorking" and "Lady Lee's Widowhood"?—I mean the "Commentaries." Look at Napoleon. Was he not the author of "Le Souper de Beaucaire" and the "Earl of Essex—a Tragedy"? To come down to our own times. What was it that the American visitor to Walmer Castle noticed by the bedside of the Great Duke? It was a Spanish grammar. He was close upon eighty; but he was still learning, like Michael Angelo at ninety. And Sir Garnet Wolseley—to what does he owe his success? To Pluck plus Brains—and plenty of them.

The gentleman who wrote "Illustrious Abstainers," and whose excellent little book I noticed last week, is still of opinion that Milton, Johnson, and Franklin were, habitually, total abstainers; and he is apprehensive that my reference to gluttonous abstainers may bring me some letters of reproach from water drinkers who may feel that my experience is a singular one. I am not under any apprehension in the matter. Let them reproach me. I stick to my text. It is quite time that the people who are so fond of proclaiming from the housetops that they drink nothing stronger than water, and who would bring, if they could, all humanity down to the pump, were reminded that total abstinence from alcohol is far from being an infallible guarantee that the abstainer possesses all possible human virtues. I repeat that (in the course of a long life) I have known a great many total abstainers who were immoderate eaters; and I look upon gluttony as a detestably selfish, hypocritical, and Pharisaical vice.

If you wish to find a thoroughly abstinent man "all round," look upon the Trappist. He is abstinent in everything. In food, in drink, in apparel, in pleasure, in speech, in sleep. But one need not be a monk to be strictly temperate. Consider that Napoleon the Great, of whom I spoke anon, was no total abstainer; a single glass of champagne or of chambertin sufficing him at his principal meal; and he dined on one course. Remember good old Monsieur Thiers. At his midday breakfast he took a single bumper of sound Bordeaux, and another at dinner. And yet these non-abstainers but strictly abstinent men did some work in their time.

Mem.: It was in a poem of holy Mr. Herbert that I lighted upon what I have always held to be the most truly philosophic advice touching habits of temperance. "Drink not the Third Glass," says holy Mr. Herbert. It may be "Touch not," instead of "Drink not;" but I am quoting from memory.

What would you think of "John Everett Millais, R.A. (Limited)"? What would you say to the "Joint-Stock E. Burnes Jones Company;" or to the "United Alma-Tadema Association"? I ask because, according to M. Albert Wolff, writing in the Paris Figaro, it appears to have occurred to some adventurous Belgian financiers to turn the illustrious French painter, Jean-Louis-Ernest-Meissonier into a joint-stock speculation. A syndicate of Flemish "operators" waited, it would seem, on M. Meissonier in Paris, and offered him the comfortable sum of two millions of francs, say sixty thousand pounds, if he would paint for purposes of public exhibition a large military panorama. The work was to be completed in two years. M. Meissonier declined to paint a panorama; but he proposed, instead, to execute two colossal pictures, over the ordonnance of which he had been long meditating, to be entitled, respectively, "Peace" and "War."

So terms were mutually agreed upon; and M. Meissonier set about making the sketches for his two grand pictures, when, to his horror, he received one morning a voluminous prospectus of a Société Anonyme to be called the "Paris-Meissonier Company," and the object of which purported to be the exhibition, engraving, and general exploitation all over the world, not only of the pictures of "Peace" and "War," but of sundry "panoramas," which were to be tacked on to and floated by the works of M. Meissonier, who was respectfully requested to become a shareholder in the enterprise. Fancy a man taking shares in himself!

A very attractive and instructive exhibition of the latest technical novelties brought forward by printers, stationers, and others connected with the kindred trades of which the Final Cause is the dissemination of knowledge, was opened on Monday at the Agricultural Hall. I read, anent this exhibition, in the Daily News—

Messrs. Bertram and Co. show a knotter or strainer designed to take the place of the ordinary flat jog knotter, consisting of a set of machine-cut brass plates, which are fixed in the vat and remain stationary. The action is caused by the simple application of an air-pump, which keeps in constant motion an india-rubber disc or flap below the plates, thus causing a perfect action.

Surely this is caviar to the general. I am not ashamed to confess that the whole of it is Chaldaic to me. I do not even know what an "ordinary flat jog knotter or strainer" may be. Do you, my General Reader? "Does one man in a million," asks Archdeacon Paley, "know how oval frames are turned?"

Wednesday the Fourteenth of July is the anniversary of the capture of the Bastille by a Parisian mob in the year 1789; and on this memorable Fourteenth instant the Great National Fête of the French Republic is to be celebrated. Touching the gloomy fortress into which John Howard tried in vain to penetrate, M. Albert Lassalle states in the Charivari that a large portion of the archives of the Bastille found their way, somehow or another, to St. Petersburg, where they still remain, and where they were copied, on account of the French Government, by a certain M. Jean Gustave Bertrant, lately deceased.

M. de Lassalle quotes two painfully interesting extracts from the Bastille dossiers. The first is a letter from the Lieutenant of Police to the Governor:—

I send you, my dear Delaunay, a certain F . . . . He is a bad lot (un mauvais sujet). You will keep him eight days, after which you will get rid of him (vous vous en déferez).

This is business-like. The laconic death-warrant is endorsed in equally business-like style by M. Delaunay, who observes—

The 13th of June was admitted the man F——, and at the expiration of the time fixed application was made to M. le Lieutenant de Police to ascertain under what name he would like to have the man buried.

Exit F. Now for the second letter, which is dated September, 1771, and signed "Chevalier":—

The head of the Sieur Larivière is still in a feverish condition; and I despair of his being completely cured unless the remedy be applied to him (sans qu'on lui fasse le remède).

This is endorsed by the Lieutenant of Police, or some other ministerial personage, with "the two narrow words" "A Pendre." So I suppose the hot-headed Sieur Larivière was completely strangled in his neat little Bastille cell; and the Lieutenant of Police went tranquilly to the Comédie-Française that evening to see Sophie Arnould.

Mem.: Mirabeau, writing about the same time to Sophie from the donjon of Vincennes, has a very humorous story to tell about strangulation. He remarks that when the unhappy son of Philip II. of Spain was seized by the assassins sent to dispatch him, he resisted them with cries and struggles; whereat observed, in a soothing and respectful voice, one of the murderers, "Calle, calle!—Hush, hush! Señor Don Carlos; all that we are doing is for your good" (para su bien). Yet while Mirabeau was thus jesting the Lieutenant of Police might have been revolving in his mind the expediency of writing to M. de Rougemont, the Governor of Vincennes, to apply "the remedy" to the very hot-headed young gentleman who had given his family so much trouble—para su bien.

I noted some weeks since that the excellent People's Entertainment Society were in need of the sinews of war to carry on a fresh campaign next winter and provide laborious people in the very poorest districts of the metropolis with weekly Saturday nights of rational, innocent, and enjoyable entertainments in the way of vocal and instrumental music and recitations. In pursuance of this laudable object, the Society have organised a grand evening concert, which, by the kind permission of Sir Coutts Lindsay, will be given at the Grosvenor Gallery on Thursday, the Fifteenth inst. The Viscountess Folkestone, Mrs. Ronalds, Miss Wakefield, Mrs. D'Egville, Mr. Lionel Benson, Mr. C. Wade, and Mr. Charles Bethune, are among the ladies and gentlemen who have promised their valuable assistance. The Grosvenor on the evening of the Fifteenth will probably be thronged by rank and fashion. Tickets for the concert are a guinea each, and are obtainable at the principal music warehouses.

I am, myself, not partial to concerts, and would go some miles to avoid a matinée or a soirée musicale. I had a surfeit of concerts, both morning and evening, when I was young. Still, I hope that the estimable gentleman who writes the musical criticisms in this Journal will not think that I am intruding on his special domain when I mention that I went to Her Majesty's Theatre the other evening, and witnessed with great delight the rentrée of that gifted and fascinating prima-donna Madame Etelka Gerster as Amina in the "Sonnambula." Rarely have I heard this accomplished artiste in better voice; and never have I seen her act more archly and more vivaciously.

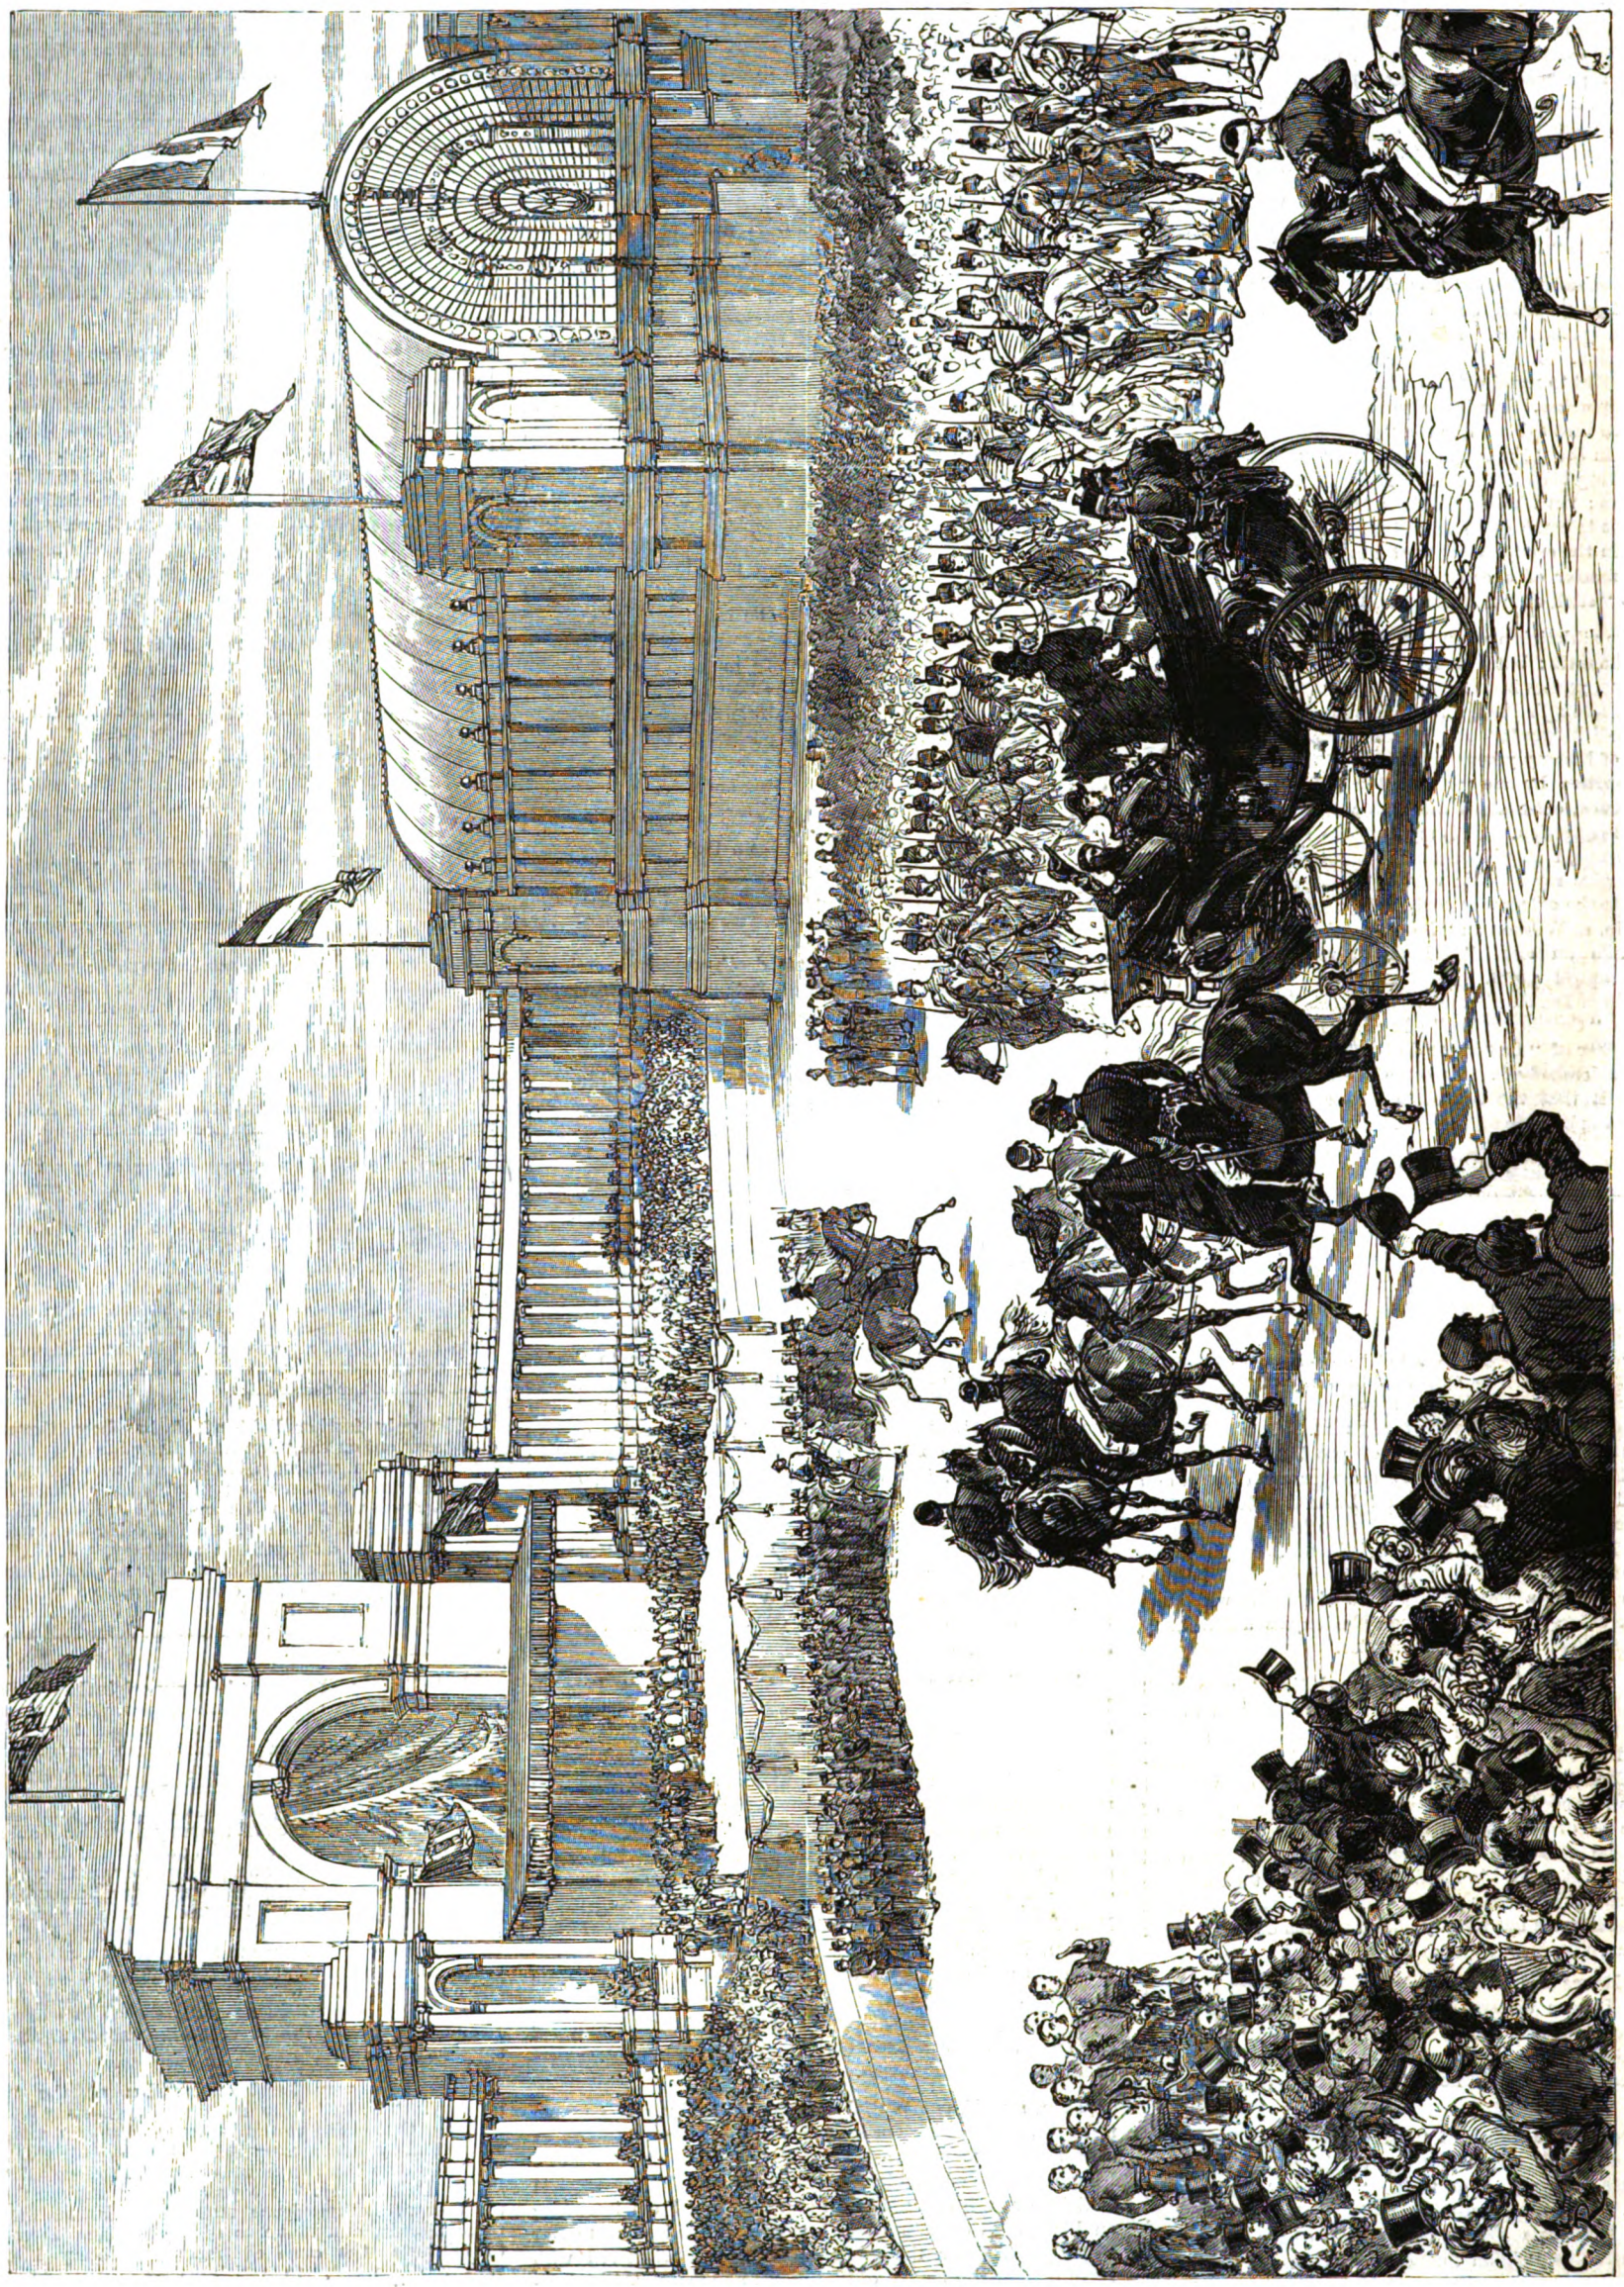
I went to Her Majesty's quite accidentally, and under somewhat peculiar circumstances. I happened to be in the neighbourhood of Pall-mall at half-past eight in the evening; and, for a wonder, I had nothing to do for the next two hours and a half. I had been domestically commanded not to return home before eleven; I cannot read by lamplight; there was nobody in the club smoking-room; I had no friends to call upon (at least I could not recall the names of any just then); I am a bad "walkist;" and, in fact, I did not know what to do with myself. So, "remote, unfriended, melancholy, slow," I was pacing through the Opera arcade, when I beheld an open door, and a printed placard with "Gallery, two shillings" printed thereon. So I toiled up the gallery stairs and had two shillings' worth of the "Sonnambula." It was like climbing to the top of the Monument; but you were amply rewarded when you reached the summit. Seldom have I enjoyed myself so much as in that lofty eyrie. The gallery was very cool and not inconveniently crowded with very nice people. German and Italian professors of music I should say, Swiss couriers and French chefs, young lady pupils from the Academy, Moldo-Wallachs, Albanians, Montenegrins, and emigrants from Lazistan: que sais-je? They were very agreeable, and they seemed to enjoy Madame Gerster's performance intensely. I shall have another two shillings' worth soon.

History—I fancy that you will have heard the observation before—has an odd way of repeating itself. Just fifty-seven years before the occurrence of the Bradlaugh imbroglio the Portuguese Legislature were sorely exercised with what may be termed the Great Braganza Swearing Case. It seems that in the year 1823 a new Portuguese Constitution was framed, to observe which the King more or less reluctantly swore. But the Lusitanian Queen, Doña Carlota, flatly refused to take the required oath; whereupon the exasperated Cortes obtained a Royal decree ordering her Majesty to quit the kingdom, and declared her rights forfeited, both as a Portuguese citizen and as the Consort of the Sovereign. Subsequently the Queen condescended to explain. She declared that she had declined to take the oath to the Constitution, not "through haughtiness or hatred of the Cortes," but because she had made a promise "never to take an oath, for good or for evil, during her whole life."

Mem.: The British Army, we have Corporal Trim's word for it, "swore terribly in Flanders." Does not Southey, in his "Life of Wesley," tell a very curious story about a Sergeant who never swore?

Fourth of July day, the wires tell us, was celebrated with its usual enthusiastic energy all over the United States on Monday for Sunday last: that is to say, there were thirty accidental deaths directly due to the patriotic festivities of the day. Nineteen persons met their deaths by drowning during boating excursions; eleven more were shot; and a large number more had their limbs blown off or their heads crushed, or were to some measure seriously injured by pistol-balls or by the fireworks which, with appalling recklessness, it is customary to explode at every street-corner throughout the day. The "Glorious Fourth" is the carnival of the big rowdy and the small boy, arcades ambo—blackguards both; but its annual recurrence is regarded with dread and aversion by the majority of law-abiding American citizens.

Mem.: Somebody was so obliging as to send me a very grandiose and "spanglorious" card of invitation to a Fourth of July banquet at the Criterion, and at which, so far as I could make out, I was to meet George Washington, Martin Van Buren, Daniel Webster, Edwin Booth, P. T. Barnum, Ethan Allen, Henry Clay, James Fiske, jun., Professor Agassiz, Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, Ralph Waldo Emerson, "Orator Pop," and old Dr. Jacob Townsend. At all events, it was a most imposing list of celebrities. But at the last moment I received a post-card briefly informing me that the banquet was not to come off. I am sorry. I should have liked to meet the celebrities.



The only further light which has been thrown by my correspondent on the "Apples of King John" is afforded, first by a gentleman writing from Oldham, who informs me that when his good mother was reproving her children for selfishness she was wont to tell them that "King John had two apples, one of which he ate, and the other he saved for himself." Next, a distinguished antiquary, "J. H.," suggests the possibility of the inversion of the "Apples of King John" as "John-Apples," or, by compression, into "Apple-John." It will be remembered that Prince Hal knighted these at the Boar's Head, Eastcheap; and that Sir John Falstaff could not endure an Apple-John.

But all this will scarcely help my original inquiring correspondent. I can only, in semi-despair, put him on a fresh scent, which, it is remotely possible, might help him to start the desired game. In the fourteenth century there was another King John, who was long resident in England—King John of France, indeed, the Black Prince's prisoner, who was detained in the ancient palace of the Savoy. His captivity was a very splendid one. He had as many as one hundred and forty butts of Bordeaux wine sent him as a present in one consignment, and was altogether a most expensive détenu. One of the costliest items in his outgoings was sugar, immense quantities of which were used in his kitchen for making confectionery. In this King's household books are frequent entries of eggs used to clarify sugar, roses to flavour it with, and cochineal to colour it. Special mention is also made of a large silver-gilt box or bonbonnière, in which the King used to carry his comfits. Now old French folklore should be fertile in stories of "Le Roi Jean." Perhaps there are some anecdotes about apples among them.

Here is a very lucid explanation of the "Boston" mystery. "G. N." (who I beg will accept my best thanks) tells me that some five-and-twenty years ago, while staying at a country house near Boston, Massachusetts, his host pointed out to him two islands in the Bay, called "Great" and "Little Misery." He proceeded to explain that during the War of Independence there was a British garrison on these islands, and that two of the officers there devised, to alleviate the ennui of inactive military life, a new variety of whist, to which they gave the name of "Boston:" the two islands doing duty for the terminology which the French render as "Grande" and "Petite Misère," and that the French "chelm" or "chelem" and the English "slam" are, in all probability, merely a corruption of the German "schlemm," meaning the taking of all the tricks. There is one very obvious way of testing the authenticity of this story. Is "Boston" mentioned in the first edition of Hoyle? If it be, there is an end of the legend of the two British officers and the two islands; for "Hoyle's Games" were first published in 1743, more than thirty years before the outbreak of the American War of Independence.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, July 6.

After such an eventful week as the past, the place of honour in any record of events in France naturally falls to politics. Last Wednesday the Jesuits ceased to exist as a society in France, and in all parts of the country they were expelled from their establishments by force, or rather by the semblance of force, for no credit is to be placed in the wild narratives which represent the Jesuits as having been subjected to violence. The passing of the decrees of March 29 for the expulsion of the Jesuits and the dissolution of unauthorised religious congregations left open to the Jesuits two lines of conduct. They could either elude the decrees, for nothing was easier than to put their establishments in the names of others, or they could place themselves on the sacred ground of the inviolability of the domicile and of property. They preferred the latter course, which entitled them to the aureole of martyrdom and of persecution. The word of order was given, and followed with admirable discipline. Everywhere they waited for the arrival of the gendarmes before they abandoned their establishments. Whether the Jesuits be dangerous to the State and whether it be legal to expel them or not are questions too complicated to be discussed within the space of a few lines. I may remark, however, that the policy which the Republican Government has followed has permitted the friends of the Jesuits to raise the cry of Vive la liberté! While the friends of the Government could only reply Vive la loi! In answer to the interpellation of Mgr. Freppel in the Chamber on Friday the Government accepted the responsibility of the manner in which the decrees had been executed, and now, the first and opening act having been played, we must wait patiently for the dénoûment. Everywhere the Jesuits have addressed applications to the Tribunals to be reinstated in their property, and there is some talk about their bringing criminal actions against the Ministers of the Interior and of Public Worship. Meanwhile, more than two hundred magistrates of different grades have sent in their resignations in order to avoid pleading against the Jesuits. This question of the magistracy is a long and knotty one. It suffices to say here that in France magistrates are appointed for life, and as a body they have always been hostile to the Republic, which nevertheless they have hitherto served in return for a stipend. Most of those who have resigned are Orleanists, some are Legitimists, and some are Bonapartists. The Government finds no difficulty in filling up the vacancies, and as it has not yet dared to abolish the irremovability of the magistracy, it is rather glad of this opportunity of making a clean sweep of hostile functionaries.

As was to be expected, the Committee of the Senate, on the ground that the question of principle and of national morality dominates all considerations of policy and of persons, invited their colleagues to reject the Amnesty bill as passed by the Chamber. The bill runs as follows:—"Amnesty is granted for all crimes and misdemeanours connected with the insurrections of 1870 and 1871, as well as for all political crimes and misdemeanours committed up to June 19, 1880." The debate on the question took place in the Senate on Saturday, when M. Jules Simon made a brilliant speech against the Amnesty, and carried the House with him to reject the bill proposed by the Chamber. The Senate then adopted by 143 votes against 138 a proposition for a bastard Amnesty conceived by M. Bozérian, which excepts from the Amnesty assassins and incendiaries.

The Committee appointed by the Chamber to report upon the Senate's amendment to the Amnesty Bill, after hearing to-day the views of the Ministers and of delegates from the different groups of the Left, adopted M. Labiche's amendment, which proposes to grant an amnesty to whomsoever the Government shall pardon within the next three months. The Committee, however, appended a proviso that all those who previous to the Commune had undergone sentences for common-law crimes shall continue to be deprived of their political rights. The Committee subsequently held a second sitting, when its former decision was, after a long discussion, partially reversed, and it was resolved to adopt M. Labiche's amendment in its original form, but limiting the period assigned for the granting of pardons by the Government to the interval between the present date and the 14th inst., instead of fixing it at three months. The report will be discussed to-morrow.

The Chamber to-day voted a grant of 500,000f. for the purposes of the national fête to be held on the 14th inst.

The two most powerful men in the French political world to-day, the two poles, are M. Gambetta and M. Jules Simon. The three parties in the State are the party of moral order, including Legitimists, Orleanists, Bonapartists, clericals, and others; the Republican party, and the Socialist revolutionary party, which is far more important than people think. Since May 16, M. Jules Simon has seen that he was lost in the eyes of the democracy; since the Presidency of M. Grévy he has seen that the future no longer belonged to him, and that M. Gambetta had definitely acquired the domination of the Republicans. Being unwilling to remain in the background, M. Jules Simon has changed his flag; he has taken the leadership of the Conservatives or Reactionaries, who have received him with transports, and on Saturday, by causing the rejection of the amnesty in the Senate, he inflicted a defeat on his adversary, M. Gambetta. I say M. Gambetta, for no one takes account of the Government itself. M. Jules Simon intends to "run for" the leadership of the Right in case there should take place a reaction against the Republic.

The panorama fever has not yet worn itself out. The other day I received the prospectus of a "Paris-Meissonier Company," offering a certain number of £20 shares. It appears that a group of Belgian financiers have induced M. Meissonier to agree to paint two large pictures, eight mètres long and five mètres high, "Paris during the War" and "Paris during the Peace." The pictures are to be finished at the end of 1882, and M. Meissonier will receive a million and a half of francs for his trouble.

Apropos of pictures, I hear that the famous d'Espagnac collection of old masters is for sale. This collection, which is hidden away in the D'Espagnac Hôtel in the Rue de Clichy, contains two pictures which ought to figure in the British National Portrait Gallery. One is a portrait of Milton, by Van der Hebst, and the other a wonderful portrait of Cromwell by Cuyp. This portrait, about the authenticity of which there can be no doubt, is dated 1650; and in the "Recueil des Lettres Secrètes de Christine Reine de Suède aux personnages illustres de son siècle" is a letter in which she thanks Cromwell for this "image fidèle du héros que l'univers admire et pour lequel j'ai une vénération éclatante." The portrait, as I remember to have seen it some time ago, is very striking, and by no means flatters Cromwell.

A retrospective exhibition of the paintings of the late Thomas Couture will be opened at the Palais de l'Industrie in August. M. Couture's self-satisfaction went beyond all ordinary limits. He worshipped himself so much that someone said of him, "He never descends from his pedestal. He even sleeps on it." Posterity, however, has sadly shaken this pedestal.

Pilgrimages to Paray-le-Monial have been organised because a "très grand outrage a été fait au sacré cœur de Jésus, le 29 Juin," the night of the expulsion of the Jesuits. Some pilgrims started last night, and others will start to-night and to-morrow.

The first performance of "Garin" at the Comédie Française has been put off until Friday. On Aug. 25 the Comédie Française will celebrate the second centenary of its foundation, on Aug. 25, 1680. The Comédie proposes to play "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" on that occasion, with the ballet, and Lulli's music. On Thursday the "Bouquetière des Innocents" will be revived at the Porte Saint Martin with the splendid tragédienne Marie Laurent in the rôle which she created in 1862.

EXPULSION OF THE JESUITS IN PARIS.

By the decrees of March 29, the Government of the French Republic ordered all the Jesuit Congregations, not being employed in the work of education, as well as the convents of Dominicans, Franciscans, Observantins, Carthusians, Trappists, and others, to break up their corporate establishments and disperse. The period of three months was fixed for them to obey this arbitrary requisition, and to get rid of the buildings and furniture which they occupied, as well in Paris as in many provincial cities and towns.

As they declined to comply, on the eve of Wednesday, June 30, the Government proceeded to a forcible execution of the decrees, beginning with the Jesuit Chapel and house of that Society in the Rue de Sèvres. Two Commissaries of Police, M. Clement and M. Dulac, each wearing his official scarf, attended by three notaries or secretaries, came at nine o'clock in the evening. They were met by the Rev. Father Pitot, the Superior, to whom they read an order of the Prefect of Police that the chapel should be closed and the doors sealed up. This was done, in spite of the earnest protests of Father Pitot, who complained that the consecrated wafer, then lying in the chapel, was to be shut up there, an act which would amount to sacrilege. A ribbon with a large red seal was affixed to the chapel doors. The Jesuits were at the same time warned that they must quit the building at an early hour next morning. They stayed all night in expectation, joined by many Catholic friends, amongst whom were eminent laymen, and two or three Senators, M. Ernoul, formerly Minister of Justice, and Baron de Ravignan, chairman of the board of managing trustees for this Jesuit community.

The police Commissaries, with a large force of policemen or gendarmes, came again at four o'clock in the morning. They rang the bell at the outer door, and were admitted; but Father Pitot was in the porter's lodge, and would not allow the inner door to be opened. Baron de Ravignan also declared himself the legal proprietor of the house, and protested against their forcible entry as a trespass. A locksmith was then sent for, and the door was broken open. The police had to force the door of every cell in which the fathers, thirty-eight in number, were seated. In each case the decree of expulsion was read, and the reply was invariably the same—"I protest. I shall only yield to force." Hereupon two policemen laid hands on each priest, when he walked out. Two of the fathers—the Abbé Forbes and the Abbé Martinoff—claimed their foreign nationality, one being English and the other a Russian subject, but the police had their orders, and carried them out. One father, the Rev. Father Hus, an invalid, seventy-eight years of age, was thrust out like the rest.

A long consultation between the police and M. de Ravignan led to the Father Superior, two other fathers, and three lay brethren being left in the place to take charge of it. The fathers did not go out all at once. The breaking open of the doors took up time, and each left the building accompanied by a civilian friend. The moment they appeared in the doorway there were loud cries of "Vivent les Jésuites!" "Vive la Liberté!" and some few cries of "A bas la République!" the utterers of which were immediately seized by the police and removed in custody.

It was nine o'clock when the last of the expelled left the house. The crowd then gradually thinned, and at four o'clock in the afternoon, except for the unusual force of police, the street in front of the Jesuits' establishment had resumed its everyday aspect. Similar acts and scenes took place that day at the Jesuits' houses in the towns of Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Toulouse, Amiens, Nantes, Angers, Lille, Bourges, and Grenoble; and a day or two later at the convents of some monastic orders.

FATAL GAS EXPLOSION IN THE STREETS.

A singular accident, unhappily attended with some loss of life, happened on Monday evening in Tottenham-court-road and the neighbouring streets west of that thoroughfare towards Fitzroy-square. The contractors for a gas company were engaged in laying a new line of service-pipes from the corner of Percy-street, in Tottenham-court-road, opposite the Bedford Hotel, along Percy-street to Charlotte-street, which leads northward into Fitzroy-square. The pipes had been laid and covered with earth, and the air was about to be drawn out of them preparatory to charging them with gas. By some mistake, it is supposed, they became filled with a mixture of air and gas, which is highly explosive. The gas at the end in Tottenham-court-road was ignited, by whatever means, and the pipes blew up along the whole line, tearing open the ground in several huge chasms, hurling the stones of the pavement and masses of earth into the air. Two of the gas-contractor's workmen—Alfred Davis, an elderly man, and William Burr, aged twenty-one—were killed as they were at work closing the pipe; another, Richard Wadlake, was so injured that he is not expected to recover. They were severely burnt, and had limbs fractured, or their heads crushed by the stones and pieces of iron. Passengers going along the street were much hurt; and inmates of the neighbouring houses, which had their ground-floor rooms or shops blown into, windows and doors smashed, and stones cast in upon them, were among the sufferers. At the corner house of Charlotte-street, where it meets Percy-street, Mr. George Trite, and his maid-servant Emma Bryant, who was serving him with his tea, were blown quite out of the house, falling in the road. Each had a compound fracture of the leg, and Mr. Trite of the arm, with severe scalp and face wounds. Five houses in Percy-street had their basements and lower floors entirely wrecked; and most of the windows are shattered. The pipes along Charlotte-street, as far north as Howland-street, likewise blew up. The houses Nos. 1, 3, and 5, on the east side; and, further on, Nos. 27, 29, and 31, had their front cellars torn open, as is shown in our Illustration. The explosion was seen by many persons, who describe the outburst of volumes of flame from the openings in the road as a very startling sight. About twenty of the sufferers were immediately received in the Middlesex Hospital, which is close at hand.

FINE ARTS.

Another colossal picture by Mr. Gustave Doré has been added to the gallery bearing his name in Bond-street. The subject is Moses and Aaron appearing before Pharaoh on the destruction of the firstborn of Egypt. A leading element of the composition, or rather its basis, is a flight of steps (as in the picture en face in the gallery of "Christ Leaving the Prætorium"), which lead to a temple-palace such as figures in the artist's illustrations to the Bible. On these steps stands the future Lawgiver and Highpriest of Israel; to right and left of them are scattered groups of mothers in varied contortions of grief over their slain offspring; and on the platform above are assembled the Egyptian King, together with his sphinx-like Prime Minister, and courtiers, his wives, priests, guards, and others—these forming a striking mass, on which the light in the picture and the artificial lighting of the gallery are focussed. There is a curious apparent error in the steps: they look so steep that Pharaoh and his Court seem in danger of falling headlong down them. The error would appear to be real, for three of the steps are occupied by the small body (with outspread hand and foot) of an infant; although one of the same steps is made to receive the form of an adult Egyptian lying prone on his stomach, with considerable space to spare! But the positions of several figures on these steps are wholly impossible. Apart, however, from this pictorial license—of no great consequence in itself—the picture evinces the usual ability and shortcomings of M. Doré's art. Testifying as this picture and its fellows do to wonderful fertility and activity of mind, to astonishing facility and command of picture-making resource, on an uncommonly large scenic scale, they yet belong merely to the class of works produced by the machinisti in the decline of Italian art. Though of sensational aim in all respects, they are almost devoid both of true and high imaginative originality and of sound valuable technical qualities that will live. That such works should have enjoyed so much and so long popularity, not only with the multitude, but with so-called critics in this country (not in the artist's own land), does not say much, we fear, for artistic culture in England.

Mr. Herkomer's celebrated picture "The Last Muster" is on view at Messrs. Dowdeswell's new gallery, 133, New Bond-street. Some of our readers may like to renew acquaintance with the painter's masterpiece, and to which, since it was exhibited in the Lecture-Room of the Royal Academy, was awarded one of the Médailles d'Honneur in the Paris Exhibition of 1878. There are also some water-colour drawings by Mr. Herkomer in the same gallery.

A return has been made to the House of Lords of copies of the resolutions passed by the trustees of the National Gallery, with their explanatory remarks, on the question of keeping the gallery open throughout the year and the admission of the public on students' days. The resolutions, which were passed at a meeting held on June 4, 1880, were to the effect (1) that the trustees and director recommended that the present system of closing the gallery for several weeks in the autumn should be abandoned or greatly modified; (2) that they saw no objection to extending the hours of admission during the summer months, provided in this and the first case the Treasury would defray the expense of an increased staff; (3) that they were of opinion that the indiscriminate admission of the public on students' days might be attended with injury to the collection, and would cause great inconvenience to the students. To the actual resolutions are added some remarks on them by the director, Mr. F. W. Burton. He represents the questions involved in the first and second resolutions mainly as financial ones, though he disbelieves that any beneficial results would attend an extension of the hours of admission in the summer. In regard to the third resolution respecting the admission of the public on students' days, the director remarks that one of the two main objects in the formation of the National Gallery was to afford to professional students of painting a direct means of study and improvement. He says that the students need quiet for their work; that there would be a risk of accident to the pictures if the public were moving about among easels and other painting apparatus; that in foreign galleries there are neither so many students nor so many visitors as in the National Gallery; and that, as a matter of fact, the public would gain but little, as visitors to foreign galleries know, by being admitted when many pictures must necessarily be hidden from them by the easels. The students' days are utilised, too, for work which must be done by daylight, such as freeing the pictures from dust, &c., which could not be properly done with visitors present. For these and other reasons he strongly deprecates any change in regard to the reserved days.

The School of Practical Fine-Art at King's College, established by the aid of the City Guilds Institute, and placed under the direction of Professor Delamotte, which has been open to students since January last, was formally opened by the Duke of Connaught on Saturday last. This school was established for the purpose of giving technical instruction in various branches of practical art and designing for art manufacture. Among the useful and special subjects coming under the former class may be mentioned architecture, drawing on wood, lithography, etching, and painting on china and glass; while the latter embraces book-binding, textile work, wall-papers, metalwork of all kinds, including jewellery, and furniture, constructive and decorative. The classes are open six mornings in the week and on two evenings. There is a special class for ladies, and the system of teaching also includes practical lectures on various branches of art. To give due effect and support to the purpose of the promoters of the school, instruction in Art in its highest phases is also given; a subsequent grant, in addition to the original endowment from the City Guilds Institute, enabling the council of the college to supply accommodation for the study of the antique. Facilities will shortly be given for the purpose of studying from the living form, a most essential part of art-education for all purposes. To illustrate the principles which the school is established to teach, a special loan exhibition of pictures and objects of art was formed in the rooms devoted to the school. Various processes of practical art, such as wood-carving, etching, with the tools and appliances used in each, were also shown; and the proprietors of the Illustrated London News contributed a series of wood blocks in various stages which thoroughly illustrated the process of drawing and engraving on wood.

The Mayor of Birmingham (Alderman Richard Chamberlain) read to the Town Council on Monday a communication from Messrs. Richard and George Tangye, the well-known engineers, offering, if the Council will make provision for a permanent art-gallery, to contribute £5000 for the purchase of specimens of art for exhibition. Should an equal sum be subscribed by other persons, Messrs. Tangye offer to give a further sum of £5000 for the same purpose. A resolution was adopted thanking Messrs. Tangye for their generous offer and expressing the desire of the Council to comply with the conditions; and the General Purposes Committee were instructed to confer with the Free Libraries Committee and report on the subject.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

By the death of Garrick, according to Dr. Johnson, the "gaiety of nations" was eclipsed. The nations, however, soon recovered their spirits: and fresh generations of players strutted and fretted their hour on the stage as "little Davey" had done before them. As for the London theatres at the present time, they may be described as being almost deliriously gay in their performances. There is among them, it is true, very little novelty, and still less is there anything dramatic, between Charing-cross and Temple Bar, in which a high standard of art is attained, or even sought to be attained; but there are plenty of old friends in the shape of plays about, which are as droll, and make you laugh as heartily as ever. The theatres have, as a rule, this week, been well supported. That portion of the public which wears a white tie, is addicted to the use of a crutch stick, and is not quite complete without the aid of a toothpick, has as yet shown no signs that it thinks ten shillings too much for a stall; and I suppose that the managers are all making fortunes, and that actors and actresses are building twelve-roomed houses in the Early English style of architecture out of the savings from their salaries.

I was at the Adelphi on Saturday night last to witness the first performance in this country of a farcical comedy in three acts, by Mr. Dion Boucicault, called "Forbidden Fruit." The new piece was prefaced by that good old Adelphi melodrama, the lamented Buckstone's "Wreck Ashore." For this fine old crusted entertainment the very modern audience on Saturday failed to show any partiality. Perhaps they thought the "Wreck Ashore" old but not good. At all events, the venerable piece, in its earlier scenes, was hissed. Everybody and everything is liable to the risk of sibilation at some time or another. Do you remember Charles Lamb's story of the pert little ballet-girl who indignantly complained to Manager Elliston that she had been hissed? The Olympian Jove, formerly of Drury-Lane, and afterwards of Wych-street and the Surrey Theatre, Blackfriars-road, drew himself up to his full height, annihilated (morally) the pert little ballet-girl with one awful look, and, with inimitable dignity of mien and articulation, replied: "They have hissed Me."

"Forbidden Fruit" was not by any means hissed. It was received throughout with shouts of uproarious laughter, and at its close Mr. Henry Neville, the stage manager, announced, amidst enthusiastic manifestations of approval, that the comedy would be performed every evening until further notice. There were loud cries for Mr. Boucicault; but that clever gentleman, who was "over the hills and far away," somewhere, had written to Mr. Neville to express his regret that he could not be present. With touching modesty, he also wished it to be known that the new play was not quite his own; but that he had been indebted for some of its incidents to an old French vaudeville. Ingenuous Mr. Boucicault! Most deftly did he take the wind out of the sails of those malicious persons the critics who were prepared to show that "Forbidden Fruit" was a very free and easy version of "Le Procès Veauradieux," and that it had many scenes in common with "The Great Divorce Case," "His First Peccadillo," and the "Pink Dominos." Playgoers may well be perfectly indifferent as to whether the author was indebted to the sources just mentioned or to the "Gesta Romanorum," the novels of Florio, or the "Contes de la Reine de Navarre." The object of a farcical comedy is to make people laugh; and Mr. Boccaccio—I mean Mr. Boucicault's comedy-farce, is very laughable indeed.

The plot is "Decameronically" simple, and yet full of the most ingenious equivoques and "situations," none of them new, but all very well remembered, and dexterously adapted to modern use. Two husbands, both barristers, one a profligate Sergeant, the other a meek but errant stuff-gownsman, who are bent on deceiving their spouses, playing truant from their homes, and entertaining a brace of lady riders from the circus at supper in a "cabinet particulier" at "Ranelagh Gardens;" two spouses, one clear-headed, strong-minded, and handsome, the other sentimental, jealous, and pretty; a Captain in the Royal Artillery, whose views on ethics are of imperfect nature; a railway porter, a lawyer's clerk, a German waiter, and the loquacious barmaid at a refreshment buffet. These are the dramatis personæ. Stay; a real four-wheeled cab and a real horse are introduced in the refreshment-room scene. In the first and third acts the stage is partitioned off into two compartments, so that a double action can be obtained and the fun can be made faster and more furious. In the "cabinet particulier" scene the interests of hilarity are helped by the German waiter having got a black eye and by the meek and errant husband assuming the waiter's jacket and apron, with the eye-bandage and a false pasteboard nose to boot, and so waiting on his wife, who is supping with the imperfectly ethical officer in the Royal Artillery. The scheme of the play involves the telling of innumerable fibs, and the adoption of a host of mean, cowardly, and immoral tricks and subterfuges; but they are very funny fibs and very facetious frauds, and the audience roared at them just as they roar at Christmas when Mr. Clown in the pantomime picks pockets, empties tradesmen's tills, frightens old ladies into fits, sits upon babies, and assaults the police. Mr. J. G. Taylor was most vivacious in the rakish Sergeant, Mr. Pateman gave very amusing interpretation to the character of the meek but errant stuff-gownsman, Mr. Cato Dove; Miss Helen Barry and Miss Pateman, as the two spouses, were everything that could be farcically desired; and Miss Clara Jecks was very spirited as the talkative married barmaid. Real humour and grace were shown by Miss Marie Williams, who played the ambiguous character of one of the ladies from the Circus—Zulu, otherwise the "Female Cartridge." That "Forbidden Fruit" had been played in the United States prior to its production in England was oddly manifest by the incident of the "Female Cartridge" calling on Mr. Cato Dove at his chambers (which Mr. Boucicault calls his "apartments") and entreating the barrister to "Beecherise" her by calling her as a witness in a notorious lawsuit in which he is engaged with a view to enhance her popularity with the Circus-going public. In this there is an evident allusion to the morbidly-sensational libel case of the Rev. Mr. Beecher and Mr. Theodore Tilton.

To me the most amusing feature in this undeniably successful piece was its utter unreality as a picture of contemporary English manners. The "cabinet particulier" was a direct importation from Paris, and might have been a private room at Vachette's or the Moulin Rouge. English Sergeants-at-Law and stuff-gownsmen do not share the same chambers or "apartments." English "Female Cartridges" are not ambitious to be put into the witness-box. They are usually the most retiring as they are the most hard-worked of quasi-dramatic womankind. Nor have we any longer any places of public entertainment answering to "Ranelagh Gardens," which at the Adelphi is a pale phantom of the defunct Cremorne, with an unmelodious twang of the Parisian Mabille superadded. I like "Forbidden Fruit" all the better for these absrud anomalies. Were it a realistic piece, the fundamental frivolity of the piece would make it not funny, but objectionable.

I have been laughing quite as heartily, but in an entirely different key, at the performance of Mr. Byron's "Upper-crust" at the Folly Theatre. This is also a "farcical comedy," if you choose to call it so; but the farcical elements are all of a wholesome and hearty nature. If the principal character be a vulgarian, his vulgarity is thoroughly English and thoroughly true to nature, and is not strained through a French or an American "tammy." It is a great deal too late in the day to criticise the "Upper-crust," else would I descant at length on the rich and rare humour of Mr. J. L. Toole (whose part of Mr. Doublechick, the manufacturer of the celebrated "Diaphanous Soup," fits him as a Houbigant glove might do, and whose leonine roar of "Apologise!" when he is in a passion is a thing to dream about and to laugh at in your dreams) in the singularly effective "make up" and exquisitely patrician bearing of Mr. Billington as Lord Hesketh; on the verve and comely ease of Miss Emily Thorne as Lady Boobleton; the graceful repose of Miss Cavalier as Doublechick's daughter, and the airy sprightliness, agility, and aplomb of Miss Roland Phillips as Lord Hesketh's sharp-sighted niece—the "bradawl," as the irate Doublechick calls her. This young and clever actress has evidently been working very hard; and hard work, when combined with natural talents, must in the end command a bright recompense.

The indefatigable Mr. Howard Paul, who for more than a quarter of a century has been endeavouring to dispel the eclipse of "the gaiety of nations," is giving a Comic and Musical Entertainment every evening at half-past six in the lecture-hall of the Alexandra Palace. Mr. Howard Paul has carried his entertainment over almost every rood of the United Kingdom; but it has lost nothing of its attractive qualities either from a comic or from a lyric point of view. The famous Hanlon-Lees have also been this week among the "stars" of the Alexandra Palace; and the theatre has been crowded by spectators of the picturesque National Dances, as performed by Mdlle. Palladino, Miss Clara Fisher, Miss Lillie Howard, and other clever members of Mr. Augustus Harris's brilliant ballet company from the Theatre Royal Drury Lane.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

M. Jules Cohen's "Estella" was produced here on Saturday, being an Italian version of "Les Bluets," which was originally brought out at the Paris Théâtre Lyrique in 1867, when the principal character (Estelle) was sustained by Madame Christine Nilsson. The action takes place in Spain, during the reign of Juan the Second. The story turns on the love of Fabio for Estelle, the sister of Mengo, a wealthy farmer, their union being forbidden by Fabio's father, Don Juan, King of Castille. This monarch, on his assumption of kingly power, had been compelled to put away his wife, the mother of Fabio—a girl of humble origin—and to marry a lady of Royal lineage, by whom he has a son who grows up in habits of dissipation that bring him to the point of death. The King, wishing to secure the succession to the throne, arranges a marriage between his cousin Dorothea and Fabio, who has been brought up as a soldier, in ignorance of his parentage. The lady, summoned to the Court, arrives accompanied by Estella, who had been secluded by the King in a convent where Dorothea was dwelling. Mengo and Fabio, who had sought the King's aid to recover Estelle, are surprised to encounter her at Court; and the lover, refusing to obey the Royal order to marry Dorothea, follows Mengo and his sister to their home. The death of the Infant causes the King to place all his hopes on Fabio, to whom he then makes known the fact of their relationship. The King abdicates in favour of Fabio. Estella is broken-hearted, and takes religious vows. There is not much interest in the story, which is a mere vehicle for a series of pieces for solo voices and choruses that are distributed through four acts.

The music is generally of a light and unimportant character—neither original nor impressive. It is lively and melodious, and were there about half as much of it—in a two-act piece of the opéra-comique class—it might be accepted; but four acts, dealing with incidents of a romantic kind, require a stronger setting than that of M. Cohen. The concerted music is deficient in constructive power, the best piece of that description being the finale to the third act, which is really effective. The whole interest, musical and otherwise, centres in Madame Patti, who sang the music of the title-character with splendid vocalisation. The principal points were Estella's air "Ah! que la plaine est belle" (we give the original French titles), her ballade "Tandis que l'étoile," the "Bluette Valse" (enthusiastically encored), and the "Elégie" in the last act—all which, as well as some incidental solo passages, were given with rare brilliancy and charm. As to the music for Dorothea, Fabio, the King, and Mengo, there is little to specify. Mdlle. Mantilla gave Dorothea's "Couplets de l'Abbesse" so as to obtain some applause, as did M. Vidal the "Couplets du Cid," and Signor Cotogni Mengo's Romance in the last act. Signor Nicolini, as Fabio, sang carefully, but with his usual excess of tremolo. The little music assigned to the character of Dinarba, a peasant, was well rendered by Mdlle. Cottino; other characters having been efficiently filled by Madame Corsi, and Signori Scolara, Manfredi, Fille, and Raguer. Some incidental passages for solo instruments were finely played by Mr. Radcliff (flute), Mr. Carrodus (violin), and Mr. E. Howell (violoncello). The opera has been well placed on the stage, the costumes being rich and appropriate, and the scenery (by Messrs. Dayes and Caney) beautiful, particularly the view of the corn-field, with Penafiel in the distance, and the splendid interior of the cathedral at the close of the opera. The stage arrangements include some effective ballet action, with the clever dancing of Mdlle. Zuliani and the three Mdlles. Reuters. Signor Bevignani conducted the performance. "Estella" was announced for repetition on Tuesday. The season closes on July 17.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Signor Boito's "Mefistofele" was brought out, for the first time in England, on Tuesday, the performance having been suddenly postponed from the previous Saturday. The opera was originally produced at La Scala, Milan, in 1868, and soon afterwards obtained great success there, and elsewhere in Italy. The composer would appear to have been strongly influenced by the style of Wagner, like whom, moreover, he is his own librettist. The original book begins with the "Prologue in Heaven," the first three acts consisting of Easter Sunday, the garden-scene and the Walpurgis night, and Margaret's death—these belonging to the first part. The second part, constituting the fourth act, comprises the "classical Walpurgis night," and the epilogue, Faust's death. The music consists largely of declamatory passages, with characteristic and figurative orchestral surroundings. There is much that is wild and weird in the scenes dealing with the supernatural; while, in other instances, especially in the music of the garden-scene, there is considerable grace of style.

A special feature in the representation was Madame Christine Nilsson's charming impersonation of Margherita, which may compare with her well-known embodiment of the same character in Gounod's "Faust." The music of the part, in Signor Boito's opera—different in style from that of the French composer—was finely rendered by Madame Nilsson, not only in the love music of the Garden-scene, but also in other instances, particularly in the third act, in which the death of Margaret takes place. The music of this scene was very finely declaimed, and several recalls of the artist testified to the powerful impression produced. Madame Nilsson also sang finely as Helen (of Troy), in the second part. The character of Martha in the first part, and that of Pantalis in the second part, were excellently sustained by Madame Trebelli. Signor Campanini, as Faust, sang with good effect, especially in the cantabile passages; and Signor Nanetti, as Mephistopheles, acted picturesquely, and gave the eccentric music of the part with good realisation of its character. The cast was completed by Signor Grazzi as Wagner in the first part, and Nereus in the second part. Some of the concerted music proved very effective, particularly that of the Walpurgis-night with its strongly marked contrasts in the vocal and orchestral writing. A fine quartet in the Garden-scene and a pleasing duet for Helen and Pantalis in the fourth act had to be repeated. The opera has been produced with great splendour; the scenery, by Signor Magnani, being very beautiful, and the costumes rich and varied. The spectacle in the scene of the Brocken is truly splendid. The incidental ballet action, here and elsewhere, is well arranged, all the stage accessories, indeed, being efficiently realised. Signor Arditi conducted with great skill, and he and the composer were called before the curtain at the close of the opera.

Madame Etelka Gerster made her first appearance this season on Thursday week as Amina in "La Sonnambula," and met with an enthusiastic reception. Her singing was characterised by the same brilliancy and refinement as heretofore, with enhanced vocal power. Amina's opening cavatina, "Come per me sereno," and the final bravura, "Ah! non giunge," were special displays of artistic execution. The cast included—as heretofore—Signor Campanini as Elvino and Signor del Puente as Count Rodolfo.

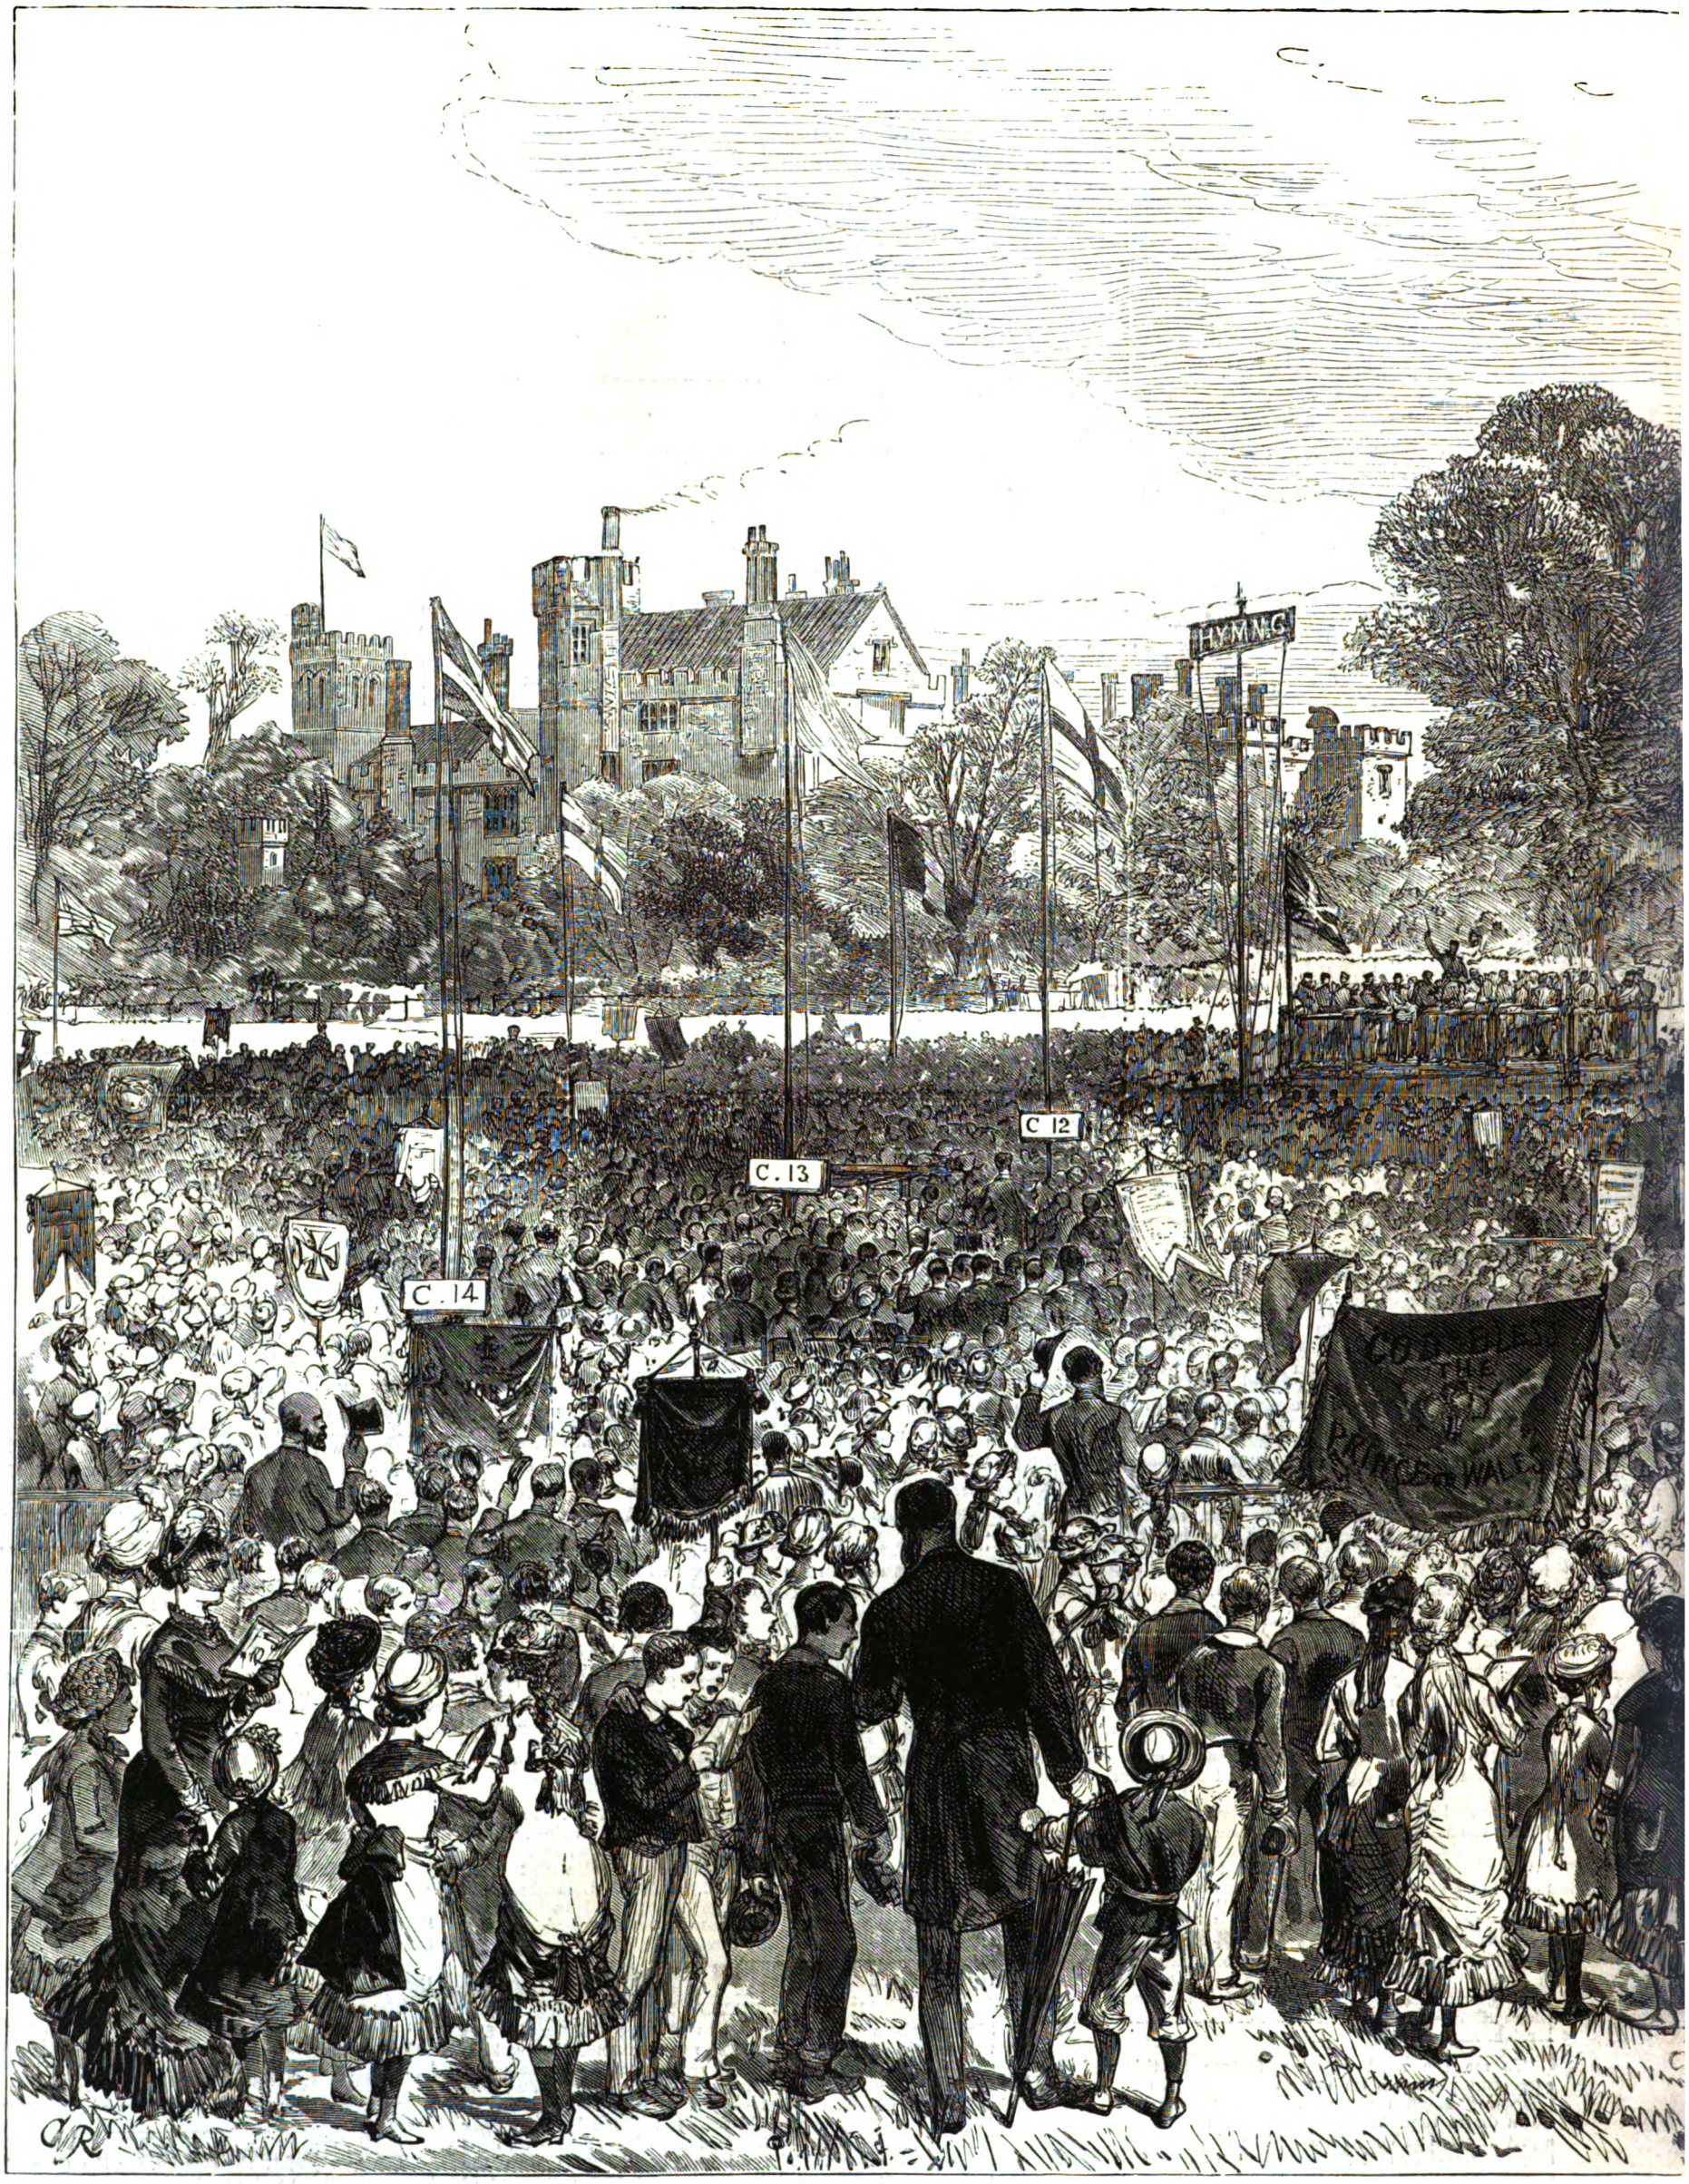
On Monday a great and unexpected success was achieved by Signor Ravelli, who appeared, at only a few hours' notice, as Edgardo in "Lucia di Lammermoor," in lieu of Mr. Maas, the reason of whose refusal to sing has been explained in his letter published on Tuesday. Signor Ravelli's fine voice and good style were displayed with marked success in the duet with Lucia, "Sulla tomba," and in the scene of the "Malediction," his delivery of the final aria, "Fra poco," having elicited an enthusiastic demonstration of applause. Madame Gerster was the Lucia, a part in which she had before been heard in past seasons. "Linda di Chamouni" was announced for Thursday, "Mefistofele," for the second time, on the following night, and "Lucia di Lammermoor" (cast as before) for this (Saturday) evening.

The Philharmonic Society closed its sixty-eighth season last week with the eighth concert of the series. The occasion brought forward Sir J. Benedict's new overture, composed expressly for the society. It is entitled "Twelfth Night," and is intended to be suggestive of the leading features of Shakspeare's comedy. The overture contains much graceful writing, with some very effective contrasts; the orchestration being—as might be expected from such an experienced master—highly skilful. The work was much applauded, and the composer called forward. Mr. A. H. Jackson's very clever Pianoforte Concerto in D minor had before been heard at one of the concerts of the Royal Academy of Music, where he was a student. His concerto was finely played last week by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, and Madame Norman-Néruda executed the adagio and rondo from Vieuxtemps' Violin Concerto in E with great effect. Madame Antoinette Sterling sang Bach's air, "Erbarme Dich" (violin obbligato by Herr Straus) and two songs by Mr. Cusins and Mr. C. H. H. Parry, and Mr. Santley was much applauded in his delivery of a new canzonet, "I prithee send me," by Maude Valerie White. The programme included Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Weber's "Jubilee" overture, with which, as usual, the last concert of the series terminated.

Mr. Lindsay Sloper's Pianoforte Recital was given on Thursday week at Messrs. Kirkman's, Soho-square.

The twentieth season of Mr. Charles Hallé's Recitals closed yesterday (Friday) week, when an interesting selection of classical music was performed by himself, Madame Norman-Néruda, and Herr Franz Néruda.

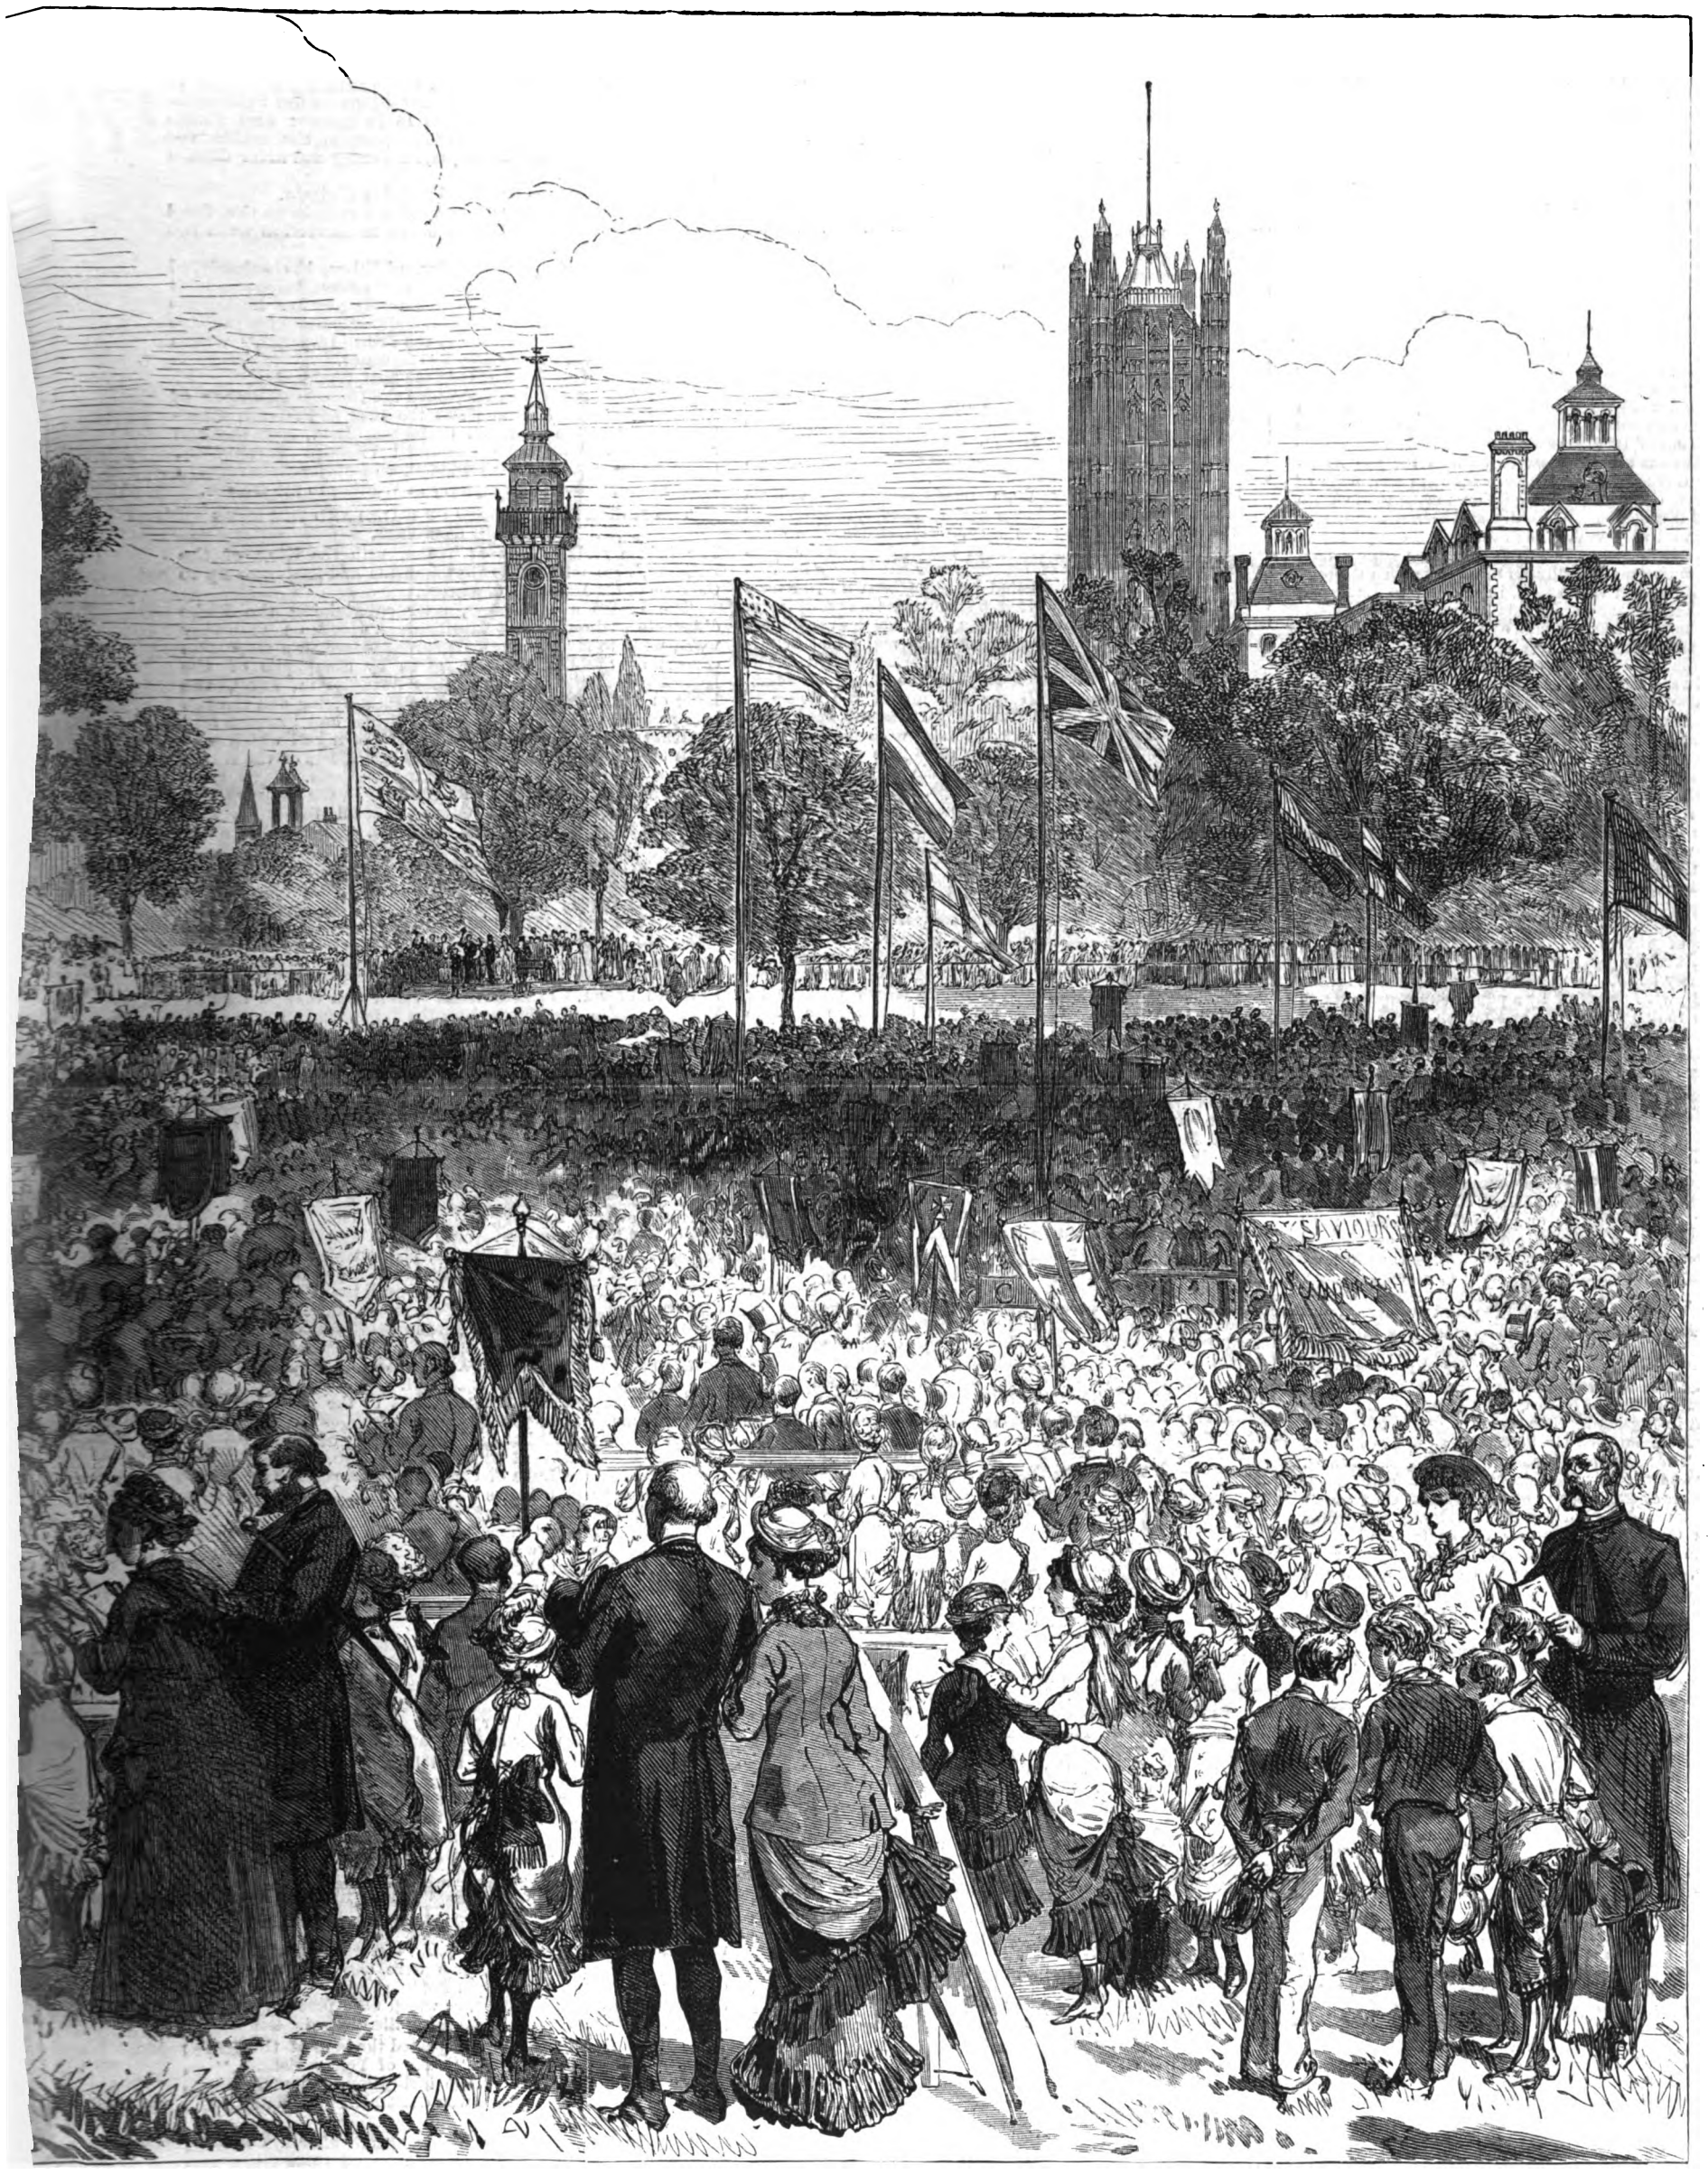
Miss Helen Meason—favourably known as a concert vocalist—gave a Matinée Musicale at Steinway Hall on Monday. The other miscellaneous concerts of the week have included those of Mr. Edward Platter at St. George's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, of M. J. Niedzielski at Steinway Hall on the same evening, and of Mdlle. Leona Fabre at Grosvenor Hall yesterday (Friday) afternoon. A vocal and orchestral concert, including Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," was given on Wednesday evening, by the Kensington Amateur Orchestral and Choral Society, at the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street. The second of Signor Guido Papini's Pianoforte Recitals for this season took place on Wednesday at 6, Inverness-terrace; and the third is announced for Wednesday next, at the same place. Mdlle. Castellan, by permission of Mrs. Owen Lewis, gave a morning concert at No. 1, Lancaster-gate, Hyde Park, on Thursday. Sir Julius Benedict conducted. Herr Otto Leu's first evening concert took place on Thursday at the Art and Literary Circle, 7, Argyle-street.



The annual performance of "The Messiah" by the Royal Society of Musicians takes place this (Saturday) afternoon at St. James's Hall.

Mr. Randegger has been appointed successor to Sir Julius Benedict as conductor of the Norwich Musical Festivals.

The competition for the Sterndale Bennett prize (purse of ten guineas) was competed for on Monday, the 5th inst., at the Royal Academy of Music. There were twenty-four candidates, and the prize was awarded to Dinah Shapley. Two additional prizes (five guineas each, presented by Messrs. Dorrell and C. Hallé) were awarded to Amy Hare and Maud Willett.



The new yacht, the Livadia, for the Czar of Russia was launched at high water on Wednesday from the yard of John Elder and Co., on the Clyde, in the presence of a distinguished company and an immense crowd. The Grand Duke Alexis, accompanied by Prince Sahahoskoy, Admiral Popoff, and Captain Soulaceff, arrived at Glasgow in the morning from London. They were received by Lord Provost Collins, Mr. William Pearce, builder of the yacht, and others. After a Russian service the ceremony of christening was gracefully performed by the Duchess of Hamilton.

THE CENTENARY OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The week of conferences and public festivities to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the opening of the first Sunday School at Gloucester concluded last Saturday. There was a great assemblage of London Sunday-school children, invited by the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the gardens of Lambeth Palace. The statue of Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, in Charing-Cross Gardens on the Victoria Thames Embankment, was unveiled at an earlier hour. A concert, in which five thousand children sang, took place the same afternoon at the Royal Albert Hall.

Our Illustrations show the scene in Lambeth Palace Gardens, and the incident of Sunday-school children presenting Bibles to the children of the Prince and Princess of Wales. Their Royal Highnesses, the whole family, including two sons and three young daughters, came to this interesting celebration, accompanied by the King of Greece. The Duke of Cambridge and his sister, Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, were also present. The Archbishop, with his three daughters, Mrs. Davidson, Miss Tait, and Miss Agnes Tait, received their Royal visitors. Unhappily, the weather that day was very bad. It had been raining violently whilst the Sunday-school children, more than twenty thousand in number, were arriving and taking their places. We sadly fear that a great many of them have suffered in health, as no kind of shelter was provided. They were collected in a circular open space on the lawn, around which a clear road was kept, like a race-course, marked by a barrier of stakes and cords. In the centre was a platform for the Grenadier Guards' band. Opposite this, at the outer side of the course, was the raised platform or dais for the Archbishop and his distinguished visitors. Banners and flags of different nations, displayed on Venetian masts, made up a pretty show of decoration. With dry and bright weather, it would have been all very well. The rain indeed ceased for an hour or two, at which time the ceremonial proceedings took place; but the multitude of children must have been exposed to wet long before and afterwards, in coming to Lambeth, conducted by their teachers, and again in going home.

The Archbishop was accompanied by the Bishops of London and Rochester, the Dean of Westminster, the Bishop of Meath, the Bishops of Mauritius and Antigua. The Duchess of Marlborough and Mrs. Gladstone came with the schools under their individual patronage. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress and Mr. Sheriff Bayley were present; also the Japanese Ambassador. An address to the Archbishop was presented by the Church of England Sunday School Institute, with a gold medal to commemorate the centenary. The Archbishop spoke in reply. Then Jackson's "Te Deum" was sung; and the Archbishop, followed by the Lord Mayor and other visitors in their carriages, passed all round to inspect the schools, of which 320 were on the ground. It was soon after this that the Prince and Princess of Wales, with their children and King George of Greece, arrived in two carriages, and were ushered to seats on the dais.

Then followed the presentation of a bouquet to the Princess of Wales, and of Bibles and Prayer-books to the young Princes and Princesses by Sunday-school children. These books, handsomely bound in maroon morocco, with massive silver mountings, were provided by a penny subscription from every child who took part in the celebration. The children who presented these memorial gifts did their duty very creditably, and their offerings were graciously accepted.

Another hymn was then sung, and then came a march past of the whole body of children. The bands formed up opposite the dais, taking it in turns to play stirring quicksteps whenever their aid was needed, but giving place to the juvenile bands, which marched at the head of many of the schools, playing with good effect. The schools went by in double columns of fours, so that two schools were always passing at the same time. When the defile had fairly commenced it flowed on continuously, with only two or three short checks, until the whole of the large body of children had passed, each school making direct for one of the exits, and so clearing the grounds.

The ceremony of unveiling the statue of Robert Raikes, erected in the gardens of the Thames Embankment by the Sunday-School Union, took place in presence of a large company of ladies and gentlemen. The chair was taken by the Earl of Shaftesbury, supported by M. Paumier, President of the Sunday-School Union of Paris; Dr. Prochnow, the leader of the Berlin Sunday schools; Dr. Vincent, Dr. Murphy, and Dr. Todd, of the United States, and the principal leaders of the movement in England. The statue, which is of colossal size in bronze, was designed by Mr. W. Brock, a pupil of the late Mr. Foley, R.A. The model is in the Royal Academy Exhibition. The figure was cast by Messrs. Drew and Son, of Thames Ditton. It represents Raikes apparently in the act of expounding something from a book which he holds in his right hand. It stands on a pedestal of Cornish grey granite, eleven feet in height, on which is the inscription, "Robert Raikes, Founder of Sunday Schools, 1780. This statue was erected under the direction of the Sunday-School Union, by contributions from teachers and scholars of Sunday schools in Great Britain, July, 1880." The conferences to discuss the best methods and means of Sunday-school work took place during several days at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, at Exeter Hall, and in the library of Lambeth Palace. There were evening meetings at Exeter Hall, and special services in the Metropolitan Tabernacle and other places of worship, as well as in St. Paul's Cathedral, which were mentioned in our last.

The Birmingham centre of the Sunday-School Union, embracing Coventry, Cradley, Barslem, Kidderminster, Tamworth, Banbury, Burton-on-Trent, Stafford, Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, Walsall, Leamington, and many other places, celebrated the centenary this week by a conference at the Birmingham Townhall. Mr. George Dixon, ex-member for the borough, and chairman of the Birmingham School Board, presided.

BELGIAN JUBILEE FESTIVAL EXHIBITION.

The Jubilee or fiftieth anniversary of the independence of the Kingdom of Belgium was celebrated recently in the capital city of Brussels. On Wednesday the King and Queen opened the National Exhibition, which is in a building erected at the end of the Rue de la Loi, on the ground formerly used for parades and horse-races. It is a large semicircular building, with two glass wings similar to our Crystal Palace, and surrounded by gardens and fountains. In the centre was a raised platform for the Royal family and the authorities. The galleries were crowded with spectators. Twenty-five thousand persons were present, including seven thousand exhibitors with their families. Behind and around the seats for the Royal family were the members of the diplomatic body in full dress, headed by the Papal Nuncio; the Cabinet Ministers and members of the Senate and Chamber of Representatives; and the surviving members of the Congress of 1830, amongst whom was the venerable M. Rogier, one of the founders of Belgian independence. The gardens were full of people. At two o'clock the King and Queen arrived with the Count and Countess of Flanders and their suite. Their Majesties were addressed by M. Rolin Jacquemyns, Minister of the Interior; Count de Merode, President of the Jubilee Fêtes Committee; and M. Vanderstraeten, Burgomaster of Brussels and President of the Exhibition Committee. The King graciously replied to each speech. Then followed the performance of a triumphal march and patriotic hymn, under the direction of M. Benoit, a Flemish composer. There were 400 musicians, civil and military, and 1000 singers, 500 of each sex. Great applause followed this performance. A procession of several thousand workmen and workwomen, with bands of music, marched before their Majesties. After this the Royal family visited the Exhibition.

THE COURT.

The Queen has been actively engaged at Windsor during the week both in State duties and in hospitalities.

M. Challemel-Lacour, French Ambassador, arrived at the castle yesterday week and presented his credentials to her Majesty.

The Queen held a Court the same day to receive the Siamese Ambassador, who arrived at the castle with his suite at half-past one o'clock, luncheon being served for her Majesty's guests in the Waterloo Gallery. The Yeoman of the Guard were on duty in the castle, and a guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards, with the band of the regiment, was mounted in the Quadrangle. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and attended by the ladies and chief officers of state, entered the Throne-Room at three o'clock.

His Excellency Chow Phya Bhanuwongse Maha Kosa Tibodi ti Phraklang, the Siamese Ambassador, accompanied by the members of the Embassy, were introduced to her Majesty's presence by the Master of the Ceremonies and presented by the Secretary of State. After presenting his credentials his Excellency presented to the Queen a letter from the King of Siam and delivered a short address expressive of the King's attachment to her Majesty and his desire that the amicable relations existing between Siam and Great Britain might be perpetuated, to which the Queen replied. The Ambassador then, in the name of the King of Siam, presented her Majesty with the insignia of the Order of the White Elephant, and the Queen was invested with the ribbon, badge, and star, which were placed upon her Majesty by Princess Beatrice. The Queen then invested his Excellency with the insignia of a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George, and knighted him; and also conferred the companionship of the said order upon Prince Prisdang, the secretary of the Embassy. The other members of the Embassy were presented to her Majesty, together with Mr. W. A. Cockerell, who is specially appointed to attend upon the Embassy. Phya Ratna Kosa, first secretary of the Embassy, was prevented by indisposition from being present, but the Queen has conferred upon him the companionship of St. Michael and St. George.

The same day her Majesty received a deputation from the Convocation of Canterbury to present an address. The members of Convocation were introduced to her Majesty's presence by the Lord in Waiting. The Secretary of State for the Home Department presented the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Prolocutor to the Queen, and the Archbishop presented the address to her Majesty, who returned a reply, after which his Grace and the Prolocutor kissed hands; Princess Beatrice being present. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Beatrice, the Archbishop of Canterbury and Miss Tait, the Duchess Dowager of Athole, the Right Hon. Sir A. H. Layard and Lady Layard, the Right Hon. Sir R. A. Cross and Lady Cross, Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, the Earl of Zetland, and the Master of the Household.

Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales arrived at the castle on a visit to the Queen on Saturday. Lord Kensington had an audience of her Majesty to present an address from the House of Commons. Madame Albani sang before the Queen and Princess Beatrice in the afternoon. The Lord Chancellor and Lady Selborne, the Dowager Duchess of Athole, the Hon. Horatia Stopford, the Hon. Caroline Cavendish, Sir C. L. Wyke, Lord Kensington, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. W. Carington, dined with the Queen and Princess Beatrice. The Right Hon. W. E. Foster was prevented from dining with her Majesty by his duties in the House of Commons.

The Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales, attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Henry Scott Holland, Senior Student and Tutor, Christ Church, Oxford, officiated. Princess Christian lunched with her Majesty.

Princes Albert Victor and George took leave of the Queen on Monday and returned to London. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught lunched with her Majesty.

Mr. Henry Leslie's choir, numbering some 200, by command of the Queen, gave a concert at the castle in the afternoon. The entertainment took place in St. George's Hall in the presence of her Majesty, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice. The ladies and gentlemen in waiting were present. The Hon. Lady Ponsonby and the Misses Ponsonby, Lady Cowell, Mr. Victor Biddulph and Miss Biddulph, were invited to the concert; and the servants of the household were present. The choir was afterwards entertained at luncheon in the Waterloo Chamber, and subsequently shown over the state and private apartments. By desire of the Queen, the choir was photographed in a group on the terrace before leaving the castle. The members of the choir were conveyed to and from Windsor by special train upon the Great Western Railway. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Windsor for London. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, the Duchess Dowager of Athole, the Countess of Caledon, the Earl of Zetland, Captain Lord Charles Scott, Lieutenant-General Sir Francis and Lady Seymour, and Captain F. I. Edwards, R.E.

The Queen held a private investiture of the Order of the Bath on Tuesday in the Audience-Room, when the undermentioned Knights Grand Cross of the Order were severally introduced to her Majesty's presence, and were invested by the Queen with the ribbon and badge of the Military Division of the First Class:—Admirals Sir George Rose Sartorius, Sir Thomas Matthew Charles Symonds, and the Hon. Sir James Robert Drummond, and Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, who was knighted. Admiral George Greville Wellesley and Major-General Frederick Alexander Campbell were also knighted, and were invested by her Majesty with the insignia of the Military Division of the Second Class of the order. Princess Beatrice was present. Luncheon was served in the dining-room. Levée dress was worn by the gentlemen in waiting.

Mrs. Fleetwood I. Edwards was presented to the Queen in the afternoon, on her marriage.

Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice came to London and visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace, returning to Windsor to dinner.

The Queen, with the Princess, has taken her usual daily out-of-door exercise.

Princesses Victoria and Elizabeth of Hesse, who have passed some weeks on a visit to the Queen, left Windsor on Thursday week upon their return home. Princess Beatrice accompanied them from the castle to the railway station. The Princesses were attended by Miss Jackson and Baron von Riedessel, and Colonel the Hon. H. Byng, Equerry to the Queen, and attended them to Flushing, whence they proceeded to Darmstadt. On the day before their departure the Princesses of Hesse accompanied the Queen to Frogmore; and Baron von Riedessel joined the Royal dinner party at the castle, the band of the Grenadier Guards playing during and after dinner in the Quadrangle.

Mdlle. de Perpigna has dined with her Majesty.

The Queen has sent a donation of 100 guineas to the fund now being raised at the Mansion House in connection with the loss of the Atalanta.

Mr. F. J. Williamson, sculptor, of Esher, has submitted to the Queen his statuette in marble of "Elaine," also the bust of Prince Alamayou, which he is executing by her Majesty's command; and Monsieur Protais has also submitted his picture of "The Finding of the Body of the Prince Imperial," which he has painted for her Majesty by command.

The Court is expected at Osborne next Wednesday.

Lady Abercromby has succeeded the Duchess Dowager of Athole as Lady in Waiting; and the Earl of Zetland, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. W. Carington, M.P., and Colonel the Hon. H. Byng have succeeded Viscount Torrington, Colonel the Hon. Augustus Liddell, and Major-General Du Plat as Lord, Groom, and Equerry in Waiting to the Queen.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES AND THE KING OF THE HELLENES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with the King of the Hellenes, were busy with entertainments and festivities up to the time of his Majesty's departure.

The Prince and Princess, after entertaining the Duke d'Aumale at luncheon at Marlborough House on Thursday week, went to Mr. and Mrs. Richardson-Gardner's afternoon concert at St. James's Hall, given by the pupils of the Institution Nationale des Jeunes Aveugles in Paris, the King of the Hellenes and Princes Albert Victor and George being present. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the King of the Hellenes were present at a ball which was given by Colonel Owen Williams and the officers of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) at the Hyde Park Barracks.

Their Royal Highnesses, with the King of the Hellenes and Princes Albert Victor and George, visited the Duke and Duchess of Bedford at Woburn Abbey the next day, and, after lunching with their Graces, returned to town in the afternoon.

The Prince received the Siamese Ambassador and the members of his suite at Marlborough House on Saturday, and was invested by his Excellency, on behalf of the King of Siam, with the insignia of the Royal Order of the White Elephant of Siam. In the afternoon his Royal Highness and the Princess, with the King of the Hellenes and their children, were present at the centenary gathering of Sunday-school children at Lambeth Palace. Princes Albert Victor and George went to Windsor Castle. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the King of the Hellenes and Prince Louis of Battenberg went to a fête given by the Ranelagh Club, where they dined, and remained until the close of the entertainment, which consisted of a polo-match by electric light, and a donkey race, together with a general illumination of the grounds.

The Prince and the King of the Hellenes met the Grand Duke Alexis of Russia at Charing-cross Station on Monday, upon his arrival from the Continent. The Grand Duke came subsequently from Claridge's Hotel to Marlborough House to visit their Royal Highnesses and the King of the Hellenes.

In the evening the King of the Hellenes left Marlborough House for the Continent. The Prince and Princess, with Princes Albert Victor and George, accompanied his Majesty to Charing-cross Station, and there took leave of him. Colonel A. Ellis, Equerry to the Prince, attended the King to Dover, whence he crossed for Paris and Berlin en route to join the Queen of the Hellenes at Copenhagen.

The Prince left town on Tuesday for Newmarket, travelling by the midday train from St. Pancras to Cambridge, and thence by special train to Newmarket.

The Prince presided at the latest meeting of the Governors of Wellington College at Marlborough House. The Duke of Connaught and the Duke of Cambridge were present.

The Prince and Princess will have an afternoon party at Marlborough House on Tuesday next.

The Prince has had submitted from Mr. Streeter specimens of the Japanese native art-work in gold and silver, which he has recently introduced into this country. His Royal Highness purchased several articles.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein distributed the prizes to the successful pupils at the British Orphan Asylum, Slough, last Saturday.

The Duke of Edinburgh, in command of the Reserve Squadron, left Portland for Bantry Bay on Tuesday to join the Channel Fleet, under Rear-Admiral Hood.

The Duke of Connaught and Strathearn presented the prizes to students of the departments of General Literature, Science and Engineering, and Applied Science, at King's College, on Saturday; and also inaugurated the new Schools of Art, under Professors Delamotte and Glenny. The Duke and Duchess went to the Haymarket Theatre on Tuesday.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck, with their children, were present at the summer exhibition of the Richmond Horticultural Society in the Old Deer Park. The band of the 1st Surrey Militia and that of the Civil Service Volunteers, which regiment was encamped in the park, performed selections of music. The Duke and Duchess were also present at the evening fête given by the Royal Botanic Society of London at the gardens in Regent's Park, at which 8000 persons congregated, the gardens and the lake being illuminated.

The Duke of Cambridge inspected the boys of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, the "Duke of York's School," on Tuesday, in the grounds of the institution, and afterwards presented the principal prizes won during the past year in the various departments.

The Grand Duke Alexis of Russia, shortly after his arrival at Claridge's on Monday evening, received visits from the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught, and afterwards dined with his Excellency Prince Lobanoff at the Russian Embassy. On Tuesday the Grand Duke received visits from Prince Louis of Battenberg and various Ambassadors; and in the evening left by the mail-train for Glasgow, in order to be present on Wednesday at the launch of the Emperor of Russia's new steam-yacht, which has been built by Messrs. John Elder and Co.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

Many of their Lordships must have been late at dinner on the 1st inst. The vexed question of the Mar Peerage was the cause of their detention. The Earl of Galloway moved that effect should be given to the resolution adopted on June 14. But Lord Redesdale introduced an amendment to the effect that the resolution of the House on Feb. 26, 1875, ought not to be rescinded. And the issue was that Lord Galloway's motion was negatived by a majority of 28—80 against 52; and the Earl of Kellie's right to answer to the name of the Earl of Mar at the election of Scotch peers was confirmed by the tacit agreement to the Earl of Redesdale's amendment, which received the support of the law lords.

The report made by their Lordships' Select Committee on Intemperance was the subject of a conversation on the 2nd inst.; and the Earl of Onslow and the Bishop of Carlisle (the latter of whom favoured the Gothenberg system) were informed by the Earl of Fife that the Government would introduce a measure to reform the licensing laws at the earliest opportunity after the present Session. The Earl of Ravensworth then drew from Lord Northbrook a statement that, in view of the loss of the Eurydice and the Atalanta, no more training-ships would be built until the Atalanta Commission had issued its report. With a little business—the passing of the Great Seal Bill, Oxford and Cambridge Limited Tenures Bills, and the Universities Estate Act Amendment Bill—the sitting closed.

Earl Fortescue on Monday returned to his pet notion that literary examinations in the Army should be supplemented by physical competitions, but the idea found no favour with the Earl of Morley, the Duke of Cambridge, or Lord Bury, and there appeared to be a general agreement with the dictum of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief that it would be difficult to produce a finer body of young men than the young officers of Woolwich and Sandhurst. Earl Spencer then secured the second reading of his Elementary Education Bill, the Duke of Richmond becoming a Ministerial advocate for the nonce, and replying to the objections raised by the Duke of Somerset to the Government by-laws.

Elementary Education was also the theme of a desultory conversation on Tuesday. Lord Norton opened the ball by inquiring whether almost all the inspectors of the Education Department had not reported against grants to elementary schools for results in examination on specific subjects, as leading to the neglect of primary instruction. Although Earl Spencer deprecated a debate on the matter, several noble Lords expressed diverse opinions, the Duke of Argyll and Earl Granville contending that something more than "the three R's" might well be taught, and Lord Sherbrooke, Lord Winmarleigh, and others arguing that it would be unwise to encourage teachers to neglect the general body of children in order to advance the quicker learners.

COMMONS.

The Ministerial measures for the relief of the distress in Ireland, Mr. Bradlaugh's subsidence into a quiet member, and an important financial statement by the Secretary for India have been the salient features in the Lower House during the past week.

Mr. Bradlaugh made his affirmation of allegiance to her Majesty, and took his seat, on the 2nd inst., in accordance with the following resolution, which, on the motion of Mr. Gladstone, was sanctioned at the previous sitting by 303 to 249 votes:—"That every person returned as a member of this House, who may claim to be a person for the time being by law permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration instead of taking an oath, shall henceforth (notwithstanding so much of the resolution adopted by this House on June 22 last as relates to affirmation) be permitted, without question, to make and subscribe a solemn affirmation in the form prescribed by the Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866, as altered by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, subject to any liability by statute." The junior member for Northampton voted the same day with the Government in the division upon the motion to issue a new writ for Tewkesbury, carried by 238 ayes to 53 noes.

A stout fight has been made to prevent the Employers' Liability Bill from getting into Committee. Some time was occupied yesterday week in discussing Mr. Macdonald's amendment adverse to the "common employment" question; and, the debate being adjourned till Tuesday, the amendment was then withdrawn, only to be succeeded by a motion to refer the bill to a Select Committee. This was negatived by a majority of 129—259 against 180 votes, but even then the House could not go into Committee on the measure.

Dr. Cameron's motion for an Address to her Majesty to restrain missionaries from resolving themselves into judges and executioners, as he implied had been the case with the Blantyre Mission and with Mr. Brown's expedition in New Britain, was withdrawn by the hon. member upon explanations being offered by Sir Charles Dilke and Mr. Grant Duff.

Many hon. members were deprived of their usual Saturday holiday last week by the desire of the Government to make progress with the Bill for the Relief of Distress in Ireland. Yielding to pressure from Mr. Parnell, Mr. Forster sanctioned a proposition empowering the Local Government Board to make grants to the amount of £200,000; but the Ministry felt bound to oppose Mr. Synan's amendment to throw the loss of 2½ per cent on loans upon the Imperial Exchequer in lieu of the Irish Church Fund. In a brief and quietly delivered speech, Mr. Bradlaugh recommended that the distress in Ireland should be relieved with a generous hand, and therefore supported the amendment, which was rejected, however, by 184 to 58 votes. For an hour or so longer did Irish members contend, but vainly, in the hope of increasing the grants.

Nine Millions! The Marquis of Hartington had on Monday to state that this was the sum total of the Afghan war expenditure in excess of the estimate of the late Government. His Lordship added that the actual excess to be met in the current year would be £3,370,000.

In view of the failure of the scheme of Confederation in South Africa, Sir Wilfrid Lawson on Monday asked the Prime Minister whether the Ministry still intended to retain Sir Bartle Frere at the Cape. Mr. Gladstone had learnt with "very great concern" that the promotion of Confederation amongst the Colonies had been frustrated; but would rather not answer the question until fuller reports had been received.

Advocated by Mr. Gladstone in a great speech, and stoutly supported by the Marquis of Hartington, the bill for granting Compensation for Disturbance in Ireland was on Monday subjected to keen criticism by Lord Randolph Churchill and Mr. Gibson (who has become the most vigorous debater on the front Opposition bench), but was read the second time by a majority of 78—295 to 217 votes.

The Supplementary Budget of Mr. Gladstone was explained afresh by the right hon. gentleman in a short speech on Tuesday, and the changes in the excise duties and beer licenses described in detail.

Mr. Childers's mild and amiable mode of disarming assailants prevailed with Mr. Trevelyan on Tuesday evening. The hon. member having made a powerful speech, studded with statistics, in favour of the following motion, ultimately consented to withdraw it—"That steps should at once be taken to reduce the active list of Generals to the point at which it is adequate, and no more than adequate, to the actual requirements of the service of the country. That no appointments should henceforward be made to honorary colonelcies, due regard being had to the interests of existing officers."

The second reading of the Sea Fisheries (Ireland) Bill was moved by Mr. Collins on Wednesday. He said its object was the establishment and organisation of a Board of Unpaid Commissioners in Ireland, who by devoting time and attention to this subject might revive and restore an important industry. The existing Commissioners had restrained some abuses and issued some valuable reports; but their powers were too limited and the means at their disposal too inconsiderable for them to accomplish much good. The result of the establishment of the Scotch Fishery Board had been very satisfactory, and it was a similar arrangement which this bill would provide for Ireland. The Irish Reproductive Loan Fund would be transferred to the proposed Conservancy, and the bill asked that £30,000 should be added to it. Finally, the bill would transfer the fishery piers to the new board, and allow them £20,000 a year for their maintenance. After considerable discussion, the House divided, and the bill was negatived, the ayes being 125, and the noes 175. The Agricultural Holdings (England) Act (1875) Amendment Bill, the second reading of which was moved by Mr. Chaplin, was talked out.

NOVELS.

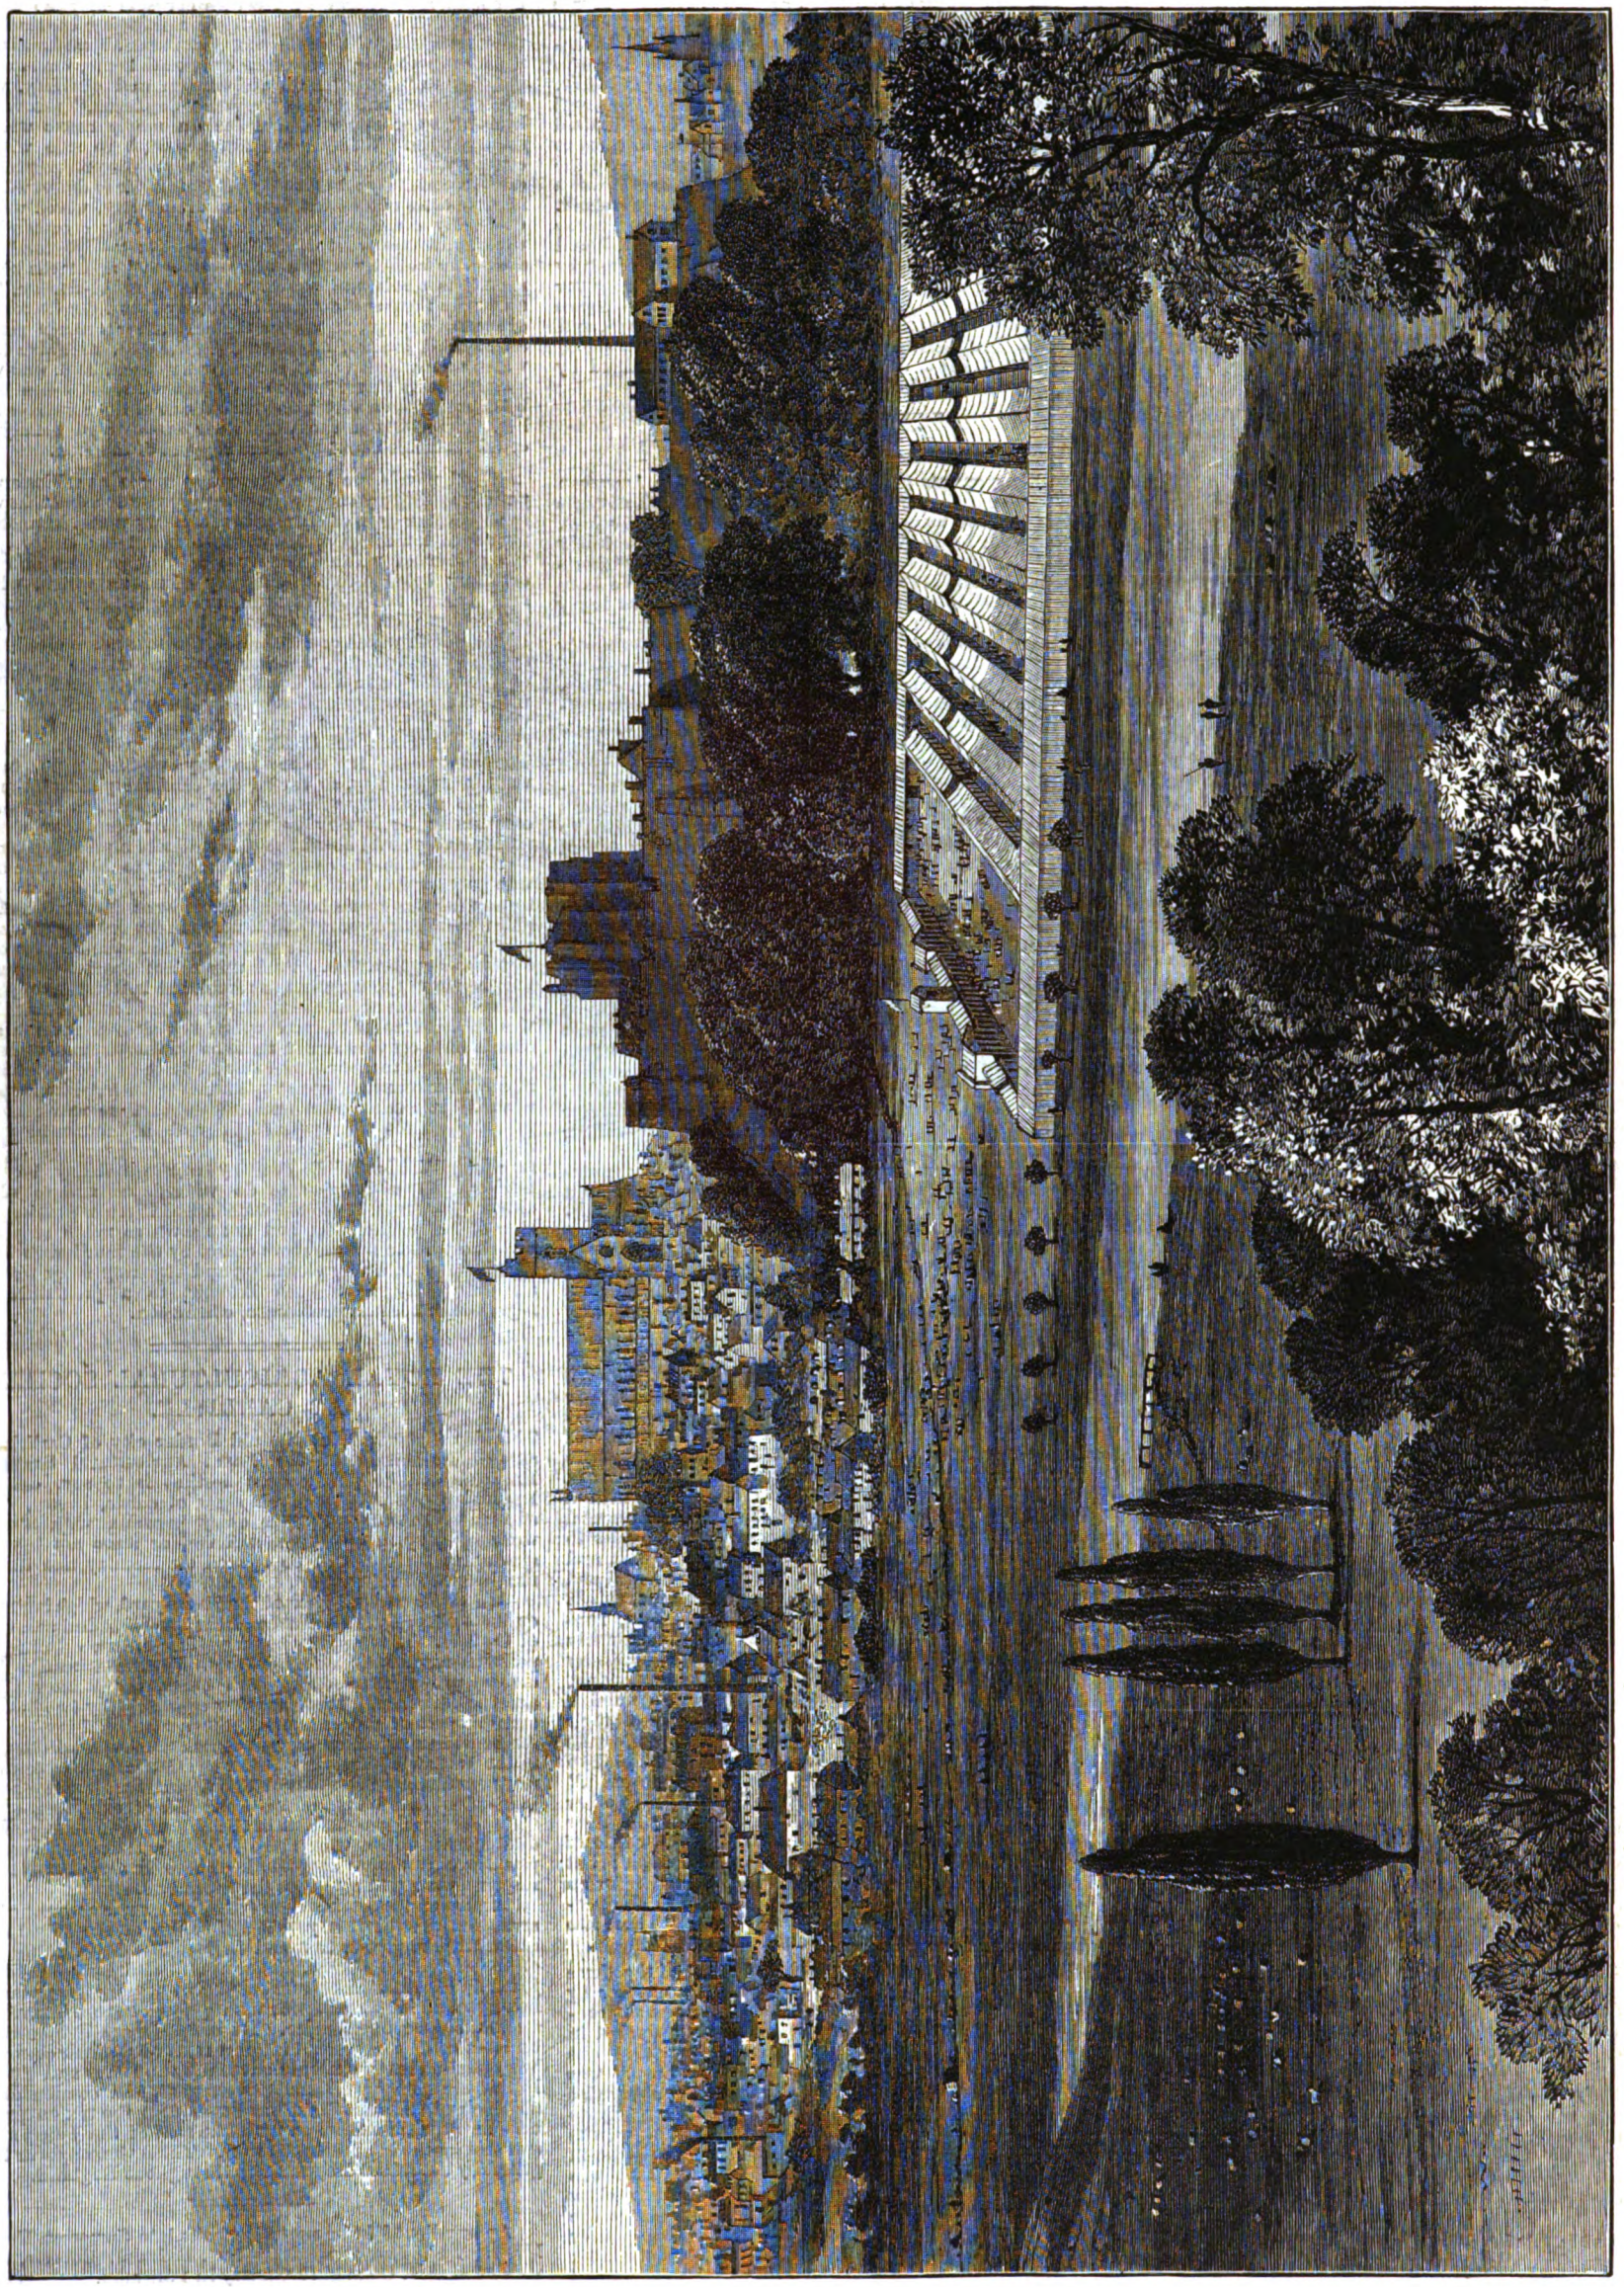
American life, manners, and characters, described in American English, may be studied to no little purpose and with no little pleasure in the two volumes entitled Odd or Even? by Mrs. Whitney (Ward, Lock, and Co.); but it should be distinctly understood that honest study will be required, if the author's elaborate production is to be properly appreciated. We have brilliant and popular American writers who give us lively pictures of the fashion in which their fellow-countrymen conduct themselves upon their travels, whether in Europe or any other division of the globe; and very diverting, exhilarating, and even exciting are the sketches. Mrs. Whitney, however, photographs her countrymen and country-women, their boys and girls, as they are at home; and her stories differ from those of the writers to whom allusion has been made in many respects, and especially in point of solidity, as widely almost as an excellent plum-pudding from a bottle of effervescent wine. In the present instance her tale is likely to afford but scanty gratification to the reader who takes up a novel for the sake of easily as well as pleasantly tiding over an interval of leisure, or of being thrilled with moving incidents, or of getting an introduction into grand society, or of catching a glimpse of forbidden scenes and dipping into a chronicle of scandalous adventures. The story is pure and moral in the highest degree, idyllic, Arcadian, and almost Utopian, and it is told in a plain, straightforward style, which, though picturesque enough from time to time, becomes somewhat prolix and wearisome on the whole from the care bestowed upon the most insignificant details, and from the inordinate length at which illustrations, not very interesting in themselves, are worked out for the enlightenment and edification of the reader. Many pages are devoted to remarks concerning Professor Piazzi Smith's "wonderful book," as it is truly called, about the Great Pyramid, and many pages also are devoted to quotations from Scripture and from sermons which are supposed to have been composed and delivered by an eminent minister, who is one of the principal personages in the novel, but which there is reason to believe were really written, if not delivered, by Mrs. Whitney herself. Now, a very little of this sort of thing is as much as the ordinary novel-reader can bear; and there is considerably more than a little. There is something so excessively mean and contemptible, moreover, in the parts played by Mrs. Pemble and by the "deacon," and they are themselves persons of so little account as representatives of human nature, that the space allowed to them and the ability exhibited in delineating their characters and in describing their petty manœuvres appear to be thrown away upon objects utterly unworthy of the importance assigned to them. And, indeed, the whole narrative, excellent as it is in tone and purpose, as well as in many of its scenes and situations, is spun out with a reckless disregard of the strength inherent in the fundamental material. How a city-bred miss, clever, original, superior to the general run of city-bred misses, fell in love with and courageously married a "ploughman," of a higher moral and not much lower mental type than the Scottish Burns, this is all there is to tell. And the true love, be it added, runs smoother than is its wont; so that the story might reasonably have been shorter. In telling it, however, at unnecessary length the author has found the opportunity of portraying, with a fulness which no patient reader will regret, a number of beautiful characters, not the less beautiful because of their lowly condition; and among them a prominent place must be given to the faithful Sarell, a jewel of womankind, and to the Rebekah-like mother of the peerless "ploughman," Rebekah-like from the housewifely point of view, but in other respects as far above Rebekah as the spirit of the New Testament is above that of the Old. As for the queer title of the novel, it is not easy to explain in a few words; but perhaps an inkling of the meaning may be obtained from an observation attributed to the heroine's father, when she persisted in marrying her "ploughman" at all risks: "Those two are odd ones," said he, "but they 've made it even."

A commendable practice is revived in the case of the three volumes entitled With a Silken Thread and Other Stories: by E. Lynn Linton (Chatto and Windus), a preliminary note forewarning the reader that the stories have already appeared in various papers and magazines, duly named, and that one of the stories, the story with the title of "For Love," was expanded into the novel so widely and favourably known as "The World Well Lost." It can scarcely be necessary to state that the stories are all readable; though, of course, the author's powers could not be put forth to the full extent in the comparatively confined area which was all that was available for the very longest of the tales. They show that the author is at home in nearly every style, except the humorous, from the tender and pathetic to the ghastly and horrible. There are playful touches also, no doubt; but of wit, as distinguished from good sense and wisdom, and of humour, as exhibited by the famous Sydney Smith and others, there is small, if any, trace. This is not mentioned as a reproach, but as a bare fact; there are diversities of gifts, and not even Mrs. Lynn Linton can be expected to prove possession of them all, being well content to lack just one. At any rate, she possesses to a marvel the feminine gift of telling a story apparently at almost any length, having at command the means of distributing over five chapters and a hundred pages of small print, without discernible effort on her part or any sense of having had too much of a good thing on the reader's, so meagre a tale as that which is called "With a Silken Thread," and which is a new version of the old story about King Cophetua's infatuation. In this instance his Majesty does not marry the "young person," though his intentions are strictly honourable; but he is rescued from what his mother considers degradation by the diplomatic cruelty of that mother, who, insidiously pretending to forward his views, invites the "young person" to the "palace," and then so overwhelms her with magnificence, persecutes her with ladylike airs and graces, and exposes her to such mortifying contrasts with the "real quality," that the poor girl, in her abject humiliation, runs away to her own more congenial home, confesses her inability to "abide" rank and fashion and gentility, voluntarily releases and even dismisses "Cophetua," recovers her heart and her appetite, and finds a manly rustic who will satisfy both. Whether we are intended to side with the cruelly judicious mother or not, it would be presumptuous to declare positively; but it may be permissible to doubt whether, in nine cases out of ten, her line of conduct, which was undoubtedly cruel and even brutal, would be successful, and whether, therefore, it would be judicious: "Cophetua" is not always to be led "with a silken thread," and "the beggar-maid" is sometimes one of "Nature's noble-women," with an innate taste and delicacy above any that long descent and education can produce, and sometimes, far oftener perhaps, a conceited, brazen, ambitious, determined, imitative hussy, whom no contrast would permanently abash, and who would be sufficiently clever and self-confident to transform herself by degrees into a very tolerable likeness of the creatures about her. Especially if she were their superior in beauty, and could therefore count upon the support of the men.

Good novels are by no means so scarce as critics and the public, spoiled by the plentiful supply nowadays of that which in the former days of comparative scarcity would have seemed far above the average, are wont to maintain; and Enga, by the author of "The Harbour Bar" (Macmillan and Co.), certainly belongs to the category of novels which, without attaining to the highest rank, are emphatically good. The two volumes contain a story as healthy as the air of the Highlands in which or near which the scenes are chiefly laid; and the workmanship, whether employed in the delineation of character or in the description of places and incidents, with the accessory and supplementary matters connected with various habits and customs, modes of thought and peculiarities of dialect, is of a very high order. The weakness, if there be any weakness, is in the want of originality, so far as the cardinal point of the plot and the machinery whereby the development is effected are concerned; for it may be urged with reason that there is nothing very novel about the conception of a property usurped by a villain who has caused the true heir to be spirited away, who puts a spoke in the wheel of the true heir's love, who tries to buy the true heir's betrothed from her impecunious father, and whose dark secret is all the while in the keeping of a somewhat mysterious masculine woman, made in the likeness of the famous Meg Merrilies. And this secret the man-woman is burning from the very first to reveal, but is restrained by some fantastic notion about the binding nature of an oath which she was induced to take, and which her strong common sense should have convinced her that she was not bound under the circumstances to keep. She should have gloried in breaking it, and should have become "splendidè mendax," like Hypermnestra. It is time that encouragement were withheld even in novels from the pernicious and ludicrous idea that the sanction of the Good Spirit, whereby alone an oath is rendered inviolable, can by any possibility be conferred upon a promise to do wickedness and to abet a crime. However, if the old woman had taken a philosophical view of her position and had not shown as much respect as was shown, with a little more cause, by the murderous Herod for a rash oath, a very charming and touching story would in all probability have been brought to a premature and regrettable, because premature, conclusion.

THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY AT CARLISLE.

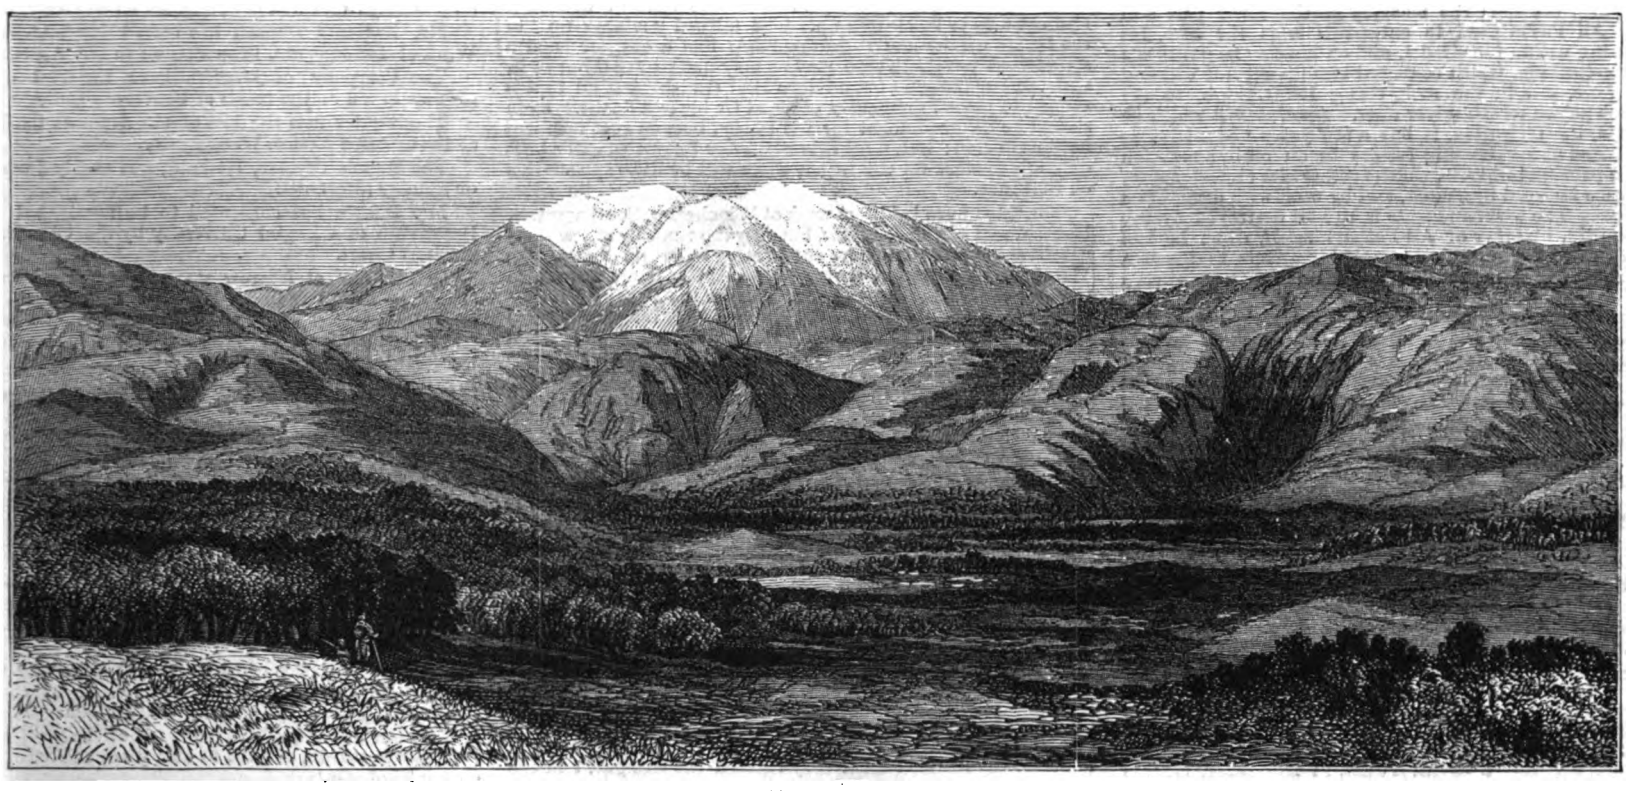
This day (Saturday), at the old Border city of Carlisle, the annual Exhibition of the Royal Agricultural Society of England will be partly opened—that is to say, only the Implement-yard. The entire show of cattle, horses, sheep, and pigs, butter and other dairy produce, with a model working dairy in operation, and two or three novelties and specialties besides, will be opened on Monday and through next week to Friday.



We give a general view of the Show-yard, which is situated on the banks of the river Eden, near the Cathedral and Castle of Carlisle. It is approached by Dacre-street, opposite Corporation-road. A stream named the Caldew, flowing to the Eden, divides two meadows from each other, the Willow Holme and the Sancerics. These are now connected by two bridges; and one part of the exhibition, the agricultural implements, machines in motion, seeds, and other collections, will be found in the Willow Holme, just below the Castle Hill, close to the railway offices. The sheds of this department have an aggregate extent of 9781 ft., and the number of exhibitors is 269. On the further ground, that of the Sancerics, are the pens for different live-stock, with rings in which the animals will be paraded at the times appointed. There is a spacious horse-ring, with a grand stand for the spectators.

A plan of the entire show-yard, and some account of the arrangements for this year's Exhibition of the Royal Agricultural Society, will be found in last Monday's publication of the Mark Lane Express. That useful and long-established journal of British agriculture has this week made its appearance in a new and improved form, with pages of more convenient size, and at a reduced price. Its contents are lightened also by some articles of general interest and of a popular character. We observe that it strongly advocates the Hares and Rabbits Bill of the present Liberal Government, and commends the abolition of the Malt Tax, but holds that the tax on private brewery should be assessed upon the rent of the house alone, and not of the land attached to it. These views appear to be generally entertained by farmers throughout England.

An excellent lifesize portrait of the late Somerset Herald, Mr. J. R. Planché, painted by Mrs. Laura J. Roberts, is on view at Messrs. Colnaghi's Gallery in Pall-mall.



A singular discovery was recently made in Paris during the alterations which are being carried out at the General Post Office. In a panel near one of boxes was found a letter, which had been posted exactly fifty years ago, and which by some mischance had got stuck in the panel instead of finding its way into the box. The letter was duly forwarded to the party to whom it was addressed, who, still more strangely, was alive, and who received it safely. The writer, however, had been dead many years.

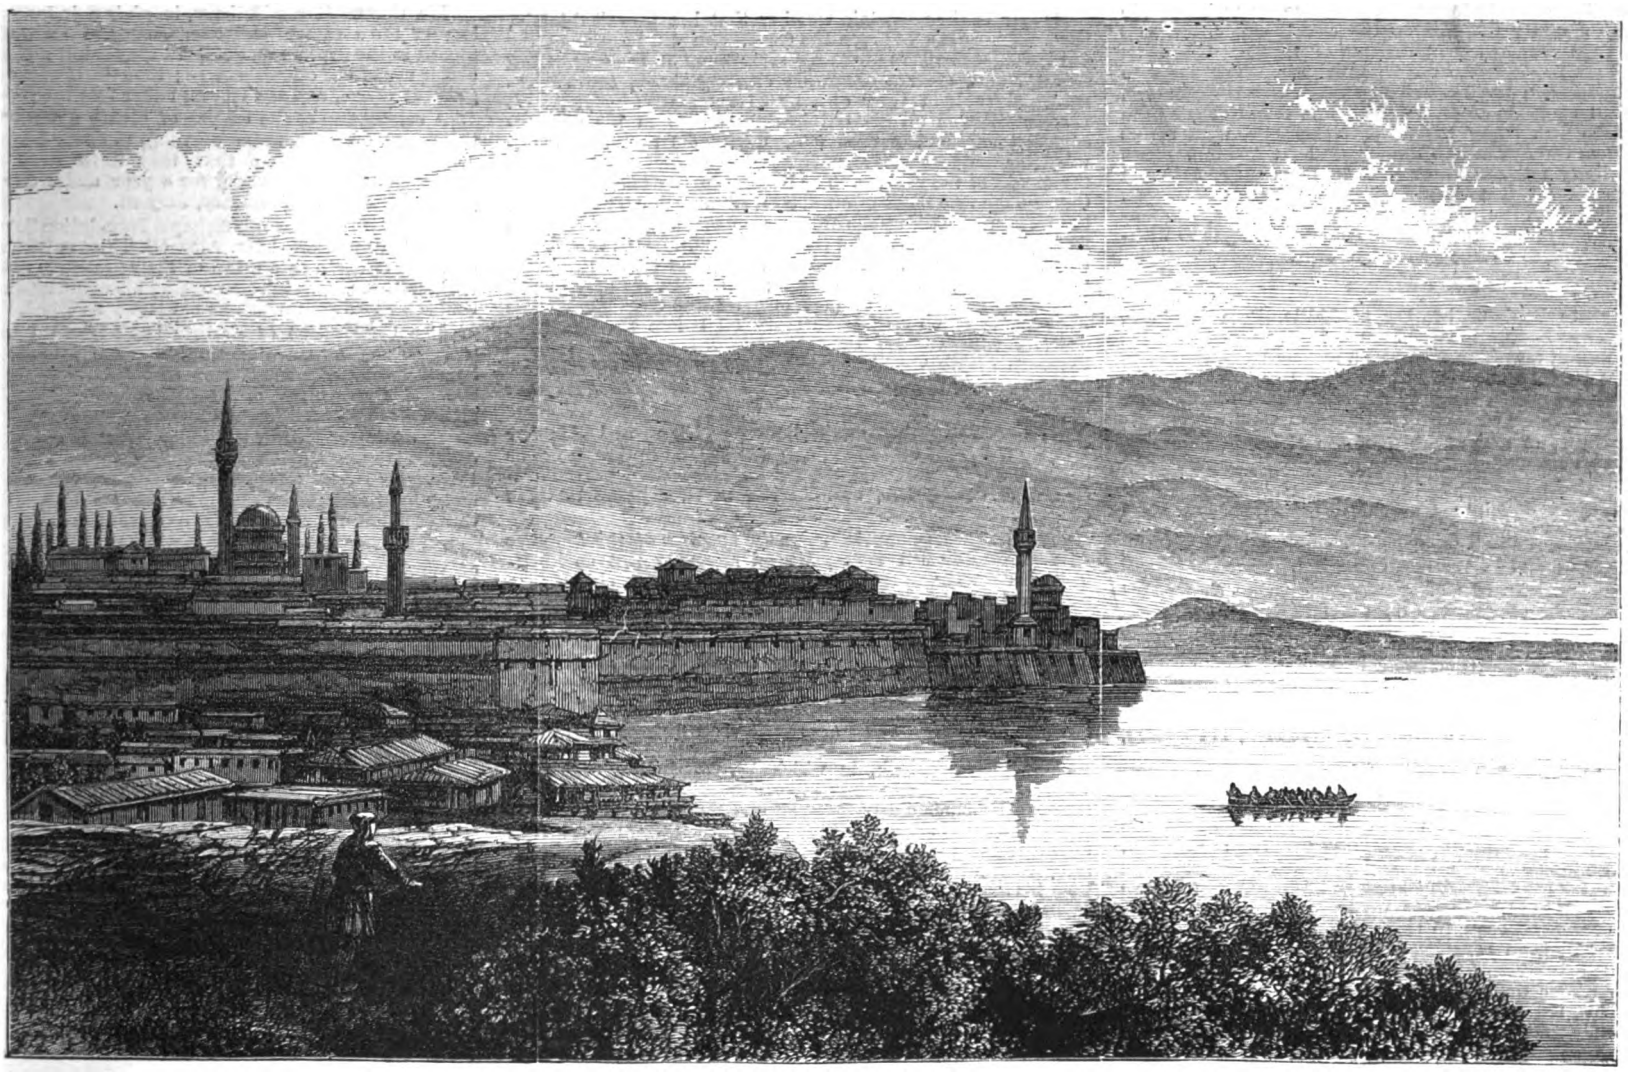
THE NEW GREEK FRONTIER: MOUNT OLYMPUS, IN THESSALY, SEEN BETWEEN LARISSA AND BABA.

JANNINA AND THE GREEK FRONTIER.



The diplomatic Conference of the six European Powers at Berlin has decided that the Sultan of Turkey shall cede nearly all Epirus and Thessaly to the Kingdom of Greece. Epirus and Thessaly, divided from each other by the Pindus mountain range, occupy that part of the south-eastern European peninsula between the Adriatic and Ægean seas. Epirus is the southern portion of what has usually in modern times been called Albania, a province of the Turkish Empire. It is situated on the east coast of the Adriatic, just opposite Corfu, which, together with the more southerly Ionian Islands, was given up to Greece by the British Protectorate some fifteen years ago.

The town of Jannina, in Epirus, is the seat of Turkish provincial government for Epirus and Thessaly together. It owes this political supremacy partly to its central position, not far from the dividing range of mountains, and partly to the great influence and renown obtained early in this century by the famous Ali Pasha. He was an Albanian feudal chief of Tepeleni, who raised a military force among his wild fighting Highland neighbours, destroyed or despoiled his rivals in Albania, and did much service to the Porte in its war with Napoleon I., when the French garrisons were driven out of Prevesa and other seacoast towns, formerly belonging to the Republic of Venice. Readers of Byron's "Childe Harold" will remember the spirited description of Ali Pasha's motley host of barbaric warriors at Tepeleni, visited by the poet in 1810. The dance and song of the ferocious Suliotes is quite in character.

When Ali Pasha had got from the Sultan the Pashalik of Epirus and Thessaly—that is to say, of Jannina—to which he added the greater part of Northern Greece, as far as Thebes, he became a considerable Eastern potentate. He finally rebelled against the Turkish Empire, to make himself an independent Prince, but this brought him to ruin. Being defeated in the field by the Janissaries of the Sultan, he sought refuge in his Castle of Jannina; but was refused admittance by his own people. He then shut himself up in a convent on a small island in the adjacent lake; and there, while negotiating for a pardon, the cruel old Pasha was assassinated, in the eighty-second year of his age. This was in February, 1822.

The name Jannina, pronounced and often written Yannina, is a corruption of Joannina, and means St. John's Town. We present a view of this city, which is now to be handed over to our late guest in London, King George I. of Greece. It is in a fertile elevated plain, twenty miles long and seven miles broad, with a lake, the ancient Pambotis, at the foot of Mount Metzikeli, or Tomarus, which rises to 2500 ft. The lake is six miles long and two miles wide. At its south end is Kastritza, which was the ancient Greek city of Dodona. But the classical temple, grove, and seat of the renowned oracle of Dodona were on the western shore of this lake, probably just where the Castle of Jannina stands, upon a rocky peninsula jutting forth into the water.

The town was probably of Byzantine foundation, but was of no great historical importance before Ali Pasha's time, from 1798 to 1822. It then had 50,000 inhabitants, besides a large military garrison. There were sixteen mosques, eight

Greek churches, two colleges, the Seraglio and other palaces, and several castles or forts. One of these was the Koulia, with five storeys of fortified building, and a palace of two storeys on the top; the masonry of the lower part still remains. Ali Pasha used to enter this from the lake, his barge passing within the citadel, and on landing he got into a small mule-carriage, which conveyed him up a spiral winding inclined plane, cut in the rock, rising 100 ft. high, to the doors of his palace on the upper floor. Another fort which he constructed, the Litharitza, is but a few yards distant. The Turkish Pasha now governing resides in an official mansion within the principal fortress, which is otherwise almost empty, a large space inclosed by a moat, and by walls with dismantled battlements. The town and forts were half destroyed by fire in 1821 or 1822, by order of Ali Pasha himself, when he had to leave them to the Sultan's army, being unable to stand a siege. The present number of inhabitants cannot exceed twenty thousand.

There are places of some historic interest in the neighbourhood of Janniua. Twelve miles north-west of this town is "Monastic Zitza," the romantic scenery of which delighted Childe Harold, or Byron, as we read in some fine stanzas of his second Canto. To the north-east, up in the mountains, is Metzovo, a most commanding post, which closes the Pass of Zygos and the only convenient road between Epirus and Thessaly. Here is the key to the defensive frontier of Northern Greece, as it will be with the proposed considerable extensions, taking in the lowlands, both east and west; on the one hand stretching to the Peneus, the Vale of Tempe, and the Gulf of Volo; on the other to the Gulf of Arta, and bounded northward by the river Kalamas. Both that river and the Peneus rise in the mountains not far from Metzovo. A colony of industrious Wallachians is settled at that place.

To the southward or south-west of Jannina, where the Acheron, the fabled river of Pluto's infernal regions, descends to the Adriatic, are many famous battle-fields. Suli, the stronghold of that formidable marauding clan, which, not being Moslem, joined the Greeks in their national insurrection of Byron's time, is perched on a rock overhanging the Acheron; it has witnessed frightful acts of human butchery. The capture of Prevesa by Ali Pasha, in November, 1798, is alluded to in Byron's Suliote war-song, and was indeed a hideous affair. All the townsfolk were either slaughtered or carried off into slavery. That seaport is not very far from the promontory of Actium, where Antony and Cleopatra were defeated in a naval battle, as everybody knows, by Octavius Cæsar Augustus, and the Roman Empire was made that day. All these notable places will henceforth belong to the Greek Kingdom, as well as Parga, the Christian inhabitants of which, in 1819, were cruelly driven out, and the town given up to Turkey, by the British foreign policy of that period. Times are changed, it appears; but let us hope that those Albanians will not prove troublesome, and even dangerous, whether as neighbours or subjects, to the Government of young King George.

We also present a View of the authentic Mount Olympus of Homeric mythology, in the north of Thessaly. There is a Mount Olympus in Asia Minor, and another in Cyprus; but this is the imaginary abode of Jupiter and Juno and the other gods of the Iliad. Thessaly, extending west of the Pindus range to the Gulf of Salonica and the Gulf of Volo, is a plain of great fertility, with the towns of Trikala, Larissa, and Ambelakia, in good situations for trade. Larissa, the capital, thirty miles south of Mount Olympus and twenty miles from the sea, has 30,000 inhabitants, with some cotton and silk manufactures. Olympus rises to the height of 9754 ft.; our View was sketched between Larissa and Baba. Nearer the eastern sea rise two other mountains of classic renown, Ossa and Pelion, which are now called Mounts Kissovo and Zagora. A proverbial metaphor or comparison used to speak of "piling Ossa upon Olympus, and Pelion upon Ossa," as a rhetorical note of excessive accumulation. The battle-field of Pharsalia, where Pompey was defeated by Julius Cæsar, is to be found in Thessaly.

There is less cause to fear any reluctance or resistance to being placed under the rule of the Greek kingdom in this province than among the Albanians of Epirus. The total number of the population, in both provinces, who are now to be transferred from the Turkish to the Hellenic Government, is estimated at 400,000. The territory is much larger than Wales; its length being 150 miles, from east to west, across the land from the Adriatic to the Ægean sea; and its breadth sixty or seventy miles, northward from the Gulf of Arta and the Othrys range, which form the present boundary of Greece. It is believed that the Sultan and Abeddin Pasha, at Constantinople, are preparing with the Albanian League to withstand annexation to Greece by force of arms.

M. Auguste Bonheur, brother of Mdlle. Rosa Bonheur, died recently at Blois. He was born in 1824, studied painting under his father, and from 1845 was a frequent contributor to the Salon. He painted chiefly landscapes, but executed some portraits, among which those of his father and of his sister (two years his senior) attracted most notice.

The portraits of new members of the House of Commons published this week are from photographs by Messrs. Barraud and Jerrard, the London Stereoscopic Company, Lock and Whitfield, of London; P. Devine, of Edinburgh; Brown, Barnes, and Bell, of Liverpool; Appleton and Co., Bradford; J. and T. Spencer, of Leicester; Russell and Sons, of Worthing and Chichester; and L. Werner, of Dublin.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the fourth week in June was 84,137, of whom 46,371 were in workhouses and 37,766 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1879, 1878, and 1877, these figures show an increase of 3933, 6521, and 5931 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 931, of whom 714 were men, 174 women, and 43 children under sixteen.

A telegram from Brisbane, Queensland, on Wednesday informs us that Parliament has been opened by the Governor, who, in his speech on the occasion, referred to the return of the Premier, Mr. McIlwraith, from England, and the proposals which he had submitted to the Home Government for the establishment of an improved mail service and the transport of immigrants viâ Suez and Torres Straits. The Governor proceeded to state that the last Queensland loan issued had been completely successful. The settlement of land, and especially for the cultivation of sugar, was increasing. The discovery of tin in the northern rivers showed that the settlement of the country was progressing very favourably. The estimates of expenditure had been framed with the strictest economy compatible with the efficiency of the public service. A small temporary increase of taxation would be necessary. Various bills would be submitted relating to works for the storage of water, local loan works, the prevention of the influx of foreign criminals, and the issue of post-cards. The revenue of the colony for the year showed an increase of £20,000.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The "Bend Or mystery" has engrossed the attention of racing men during the past few days, and at the time of writing it still remains to be cleared up. The alleged "mixing up" of the Derby winner and Tadcaster reads like a chapter from a sensational novel. There may or may not be anything in it, and the production of the Eaton Hall stud-book is all that is needed to place the identity of Bend Or beyond doubt. Even should he be disqualified for the Derby, bets on that race will not be affected; but, until it is positively known whether he is qualified to start for the Leger, there will be little speculation on that race.

Meetings were held last week at Winchester, Southampton, Halifax, and Alexandra Park, but only the running at the first-named place is likely to have any bearing on future events. The Winchester Foal Stakes derived considerable importance from the fact of Sir Charles—the favourite for the Derby of 1881—putting in an appearance. Chelsea and Montrose represented the pick of a weak opposition. The crack looked well, but a little above himself, having doubtless been eased since his hard work at Ascot, and when he reached the top of the very stiff hill, Glover had to shake him up before he came away and won cleverly. For once, a Queen's Plate brought out a really good field—Inval, Discord, Westbourne, and Favo being among the seven runners. Of course, after his capital performance in the Northumberland Plate, Inval started a strong favourite, but, though he won, it was clear that he would have had no chance with Westbourne but for the latter's abominable temper. For three parts of the distance Mr. Gretton's colt refused to make the least effort, and, when they had gone a mile, he was fully a hundred yards behind the leaders; while Cannon, who was evidently afraid to use his whip for fear he should stop altogether, was doing his best to coax him along. Then, all on a sudden, he took it into his head to gallop in earnest, made up his leeway in remarkable style, and forced Inval to do all he knew to win by a neck. It is easy to understand the numerous disappointments over a horse like this, who constantly wins great trials at home, but can never be relied upon in public. Discord made all the running until they entered the straight, and the course was too severe and the pace too good for Favo, who is slightly affected in his wind.

Nothing but fine weather is needed to make the Newmarket July Meeting one of the pleasantest of the year. Unfortunately, the elements just at present do not seem inclined to be propitious, and there is not much in the programme to compensate the enthusiastic sportsman for being constantly exposed to heavy showers of rain. In the Trial Plate on Tuesday Attalus proved just too good for Favo at 10 lb., and, to the best of our recollection, this is absolutely the first race that has fallen to Mr. Houldsworth this season. Let us hope that such a thorough sportsman may soon introduce us to a second Springfield! Valentino (7 st. 10 lb.), who evidently possesses a brilliant turn of speed, cantered away from Warrior (9 st. 10 lb.) and a large field in the Visitors' Plate; and then came the July Stakes, for which a field of eleven—the largest for the last ten years—appeared at the post. In spite, however, of this strong numerical opposition, odds of 5 to 4 were laid on Bal Gal, a "dark" filly belonging to Lord Falmouth, and she managed to beat Iroquois by a head, after a very punishing struggle. This form does not appear to be very brilliant, as, judged through Tristan, Iroquois is fully 10 lb. behind Sir Charles; still great allowance must be made for the greenness naturally attendant on a first appearance, and Bal Gal is so good looking, and so well bred—by Adventurer—Cantinière—that she is pretty sure to win some of the many rich stakes in which she is engaged.

The sales of blood stock, which form so important a feature of the July week, began on Tuesday with the dispersal of Mr. Beddington's stud. Sabella (820 gs.) is by no means dear for a brood mare; but we think that Brotherhood (1050 gs.), Alchemist (770 gs.), and The Chirper (650 gs.) were very well sold.

Owing to the uncertain weather that has prevailed lately, the first meeting between the Gentlemen and Players at the Oval did not result in anything sensational in the way of tall scoring, and, after a somewhat exciting finish, the Players managed to hold their own by 37 runs only. Mr. A. W. Hornby showed all his old hitting powers in his rapidly-acquired 71; and Barnes (63), Ulyett (36 and 30), Lockwood (31), and Emmett (25, not out) were the chief contributors to the success of the Players. The Derbyshire Gentlemen gave the Canadians a rare leather-hunting on Monday and Tuesday last, the former running up the high total of 473, and winning by an innings and 229 runs. For the home team, Messrs. Curgenven (102), Evershed (85), Maynard (81), and the Rev. A. R. Goldie (71) played really brilliant cricket; whilst Mr. Pinkney played a masterly innings of 67 (not out) for the Canadians. The Australians still continue to carry all before them in their contests with various local teams. In a match against Eighteen of Newcastle, Murdoch played a wonderfully fine innings of 117, to obtain which he was at the wickets for over three hours.

The fifty-eighth match between Eton and Harrow began on Friday at Lord's, and will (weather permitting) be concluded this (Saturday) afternoon. Eton have proved successful in twenty-five, and Harrow in twenty-two of these contests.

The first championship under the auspices of the Amateur Athletic Association took place on Saturday last at Lillie-bridge Grounds, West Brompton. We cannot chronicle a success, however, as not only were the elements very much against it, but the arrangements generally were far from perfect, and they will require proper revision next year. W. P. Phillips, of rowing fame, won the 100-Yards', beating C. L. Lockton and H. M. Massey; W. G. George, of Worcester, secured both the Mile (4 min. 28 sec.) and the Four Miles (20 min. 45 sec.), and S. K. Holman the Half-Mile in the fast time of 2 min. ¾ sec.

The billiard-match, in which W. Mitchell conceded T. Taylor a start of 200 points in 1000 for £400, proved too one-sided to be particularly interesting. Taylor made one very fine break of 127 almost entirely by all-round play; but he was all abroad at the spot, while Mitchell rattled the red in time after time with the accuracy of a machine. He was level with his opponent at the half distance, and after the interval Taylor did absolutely nothing, and was beaten by 477. Mitchell's chief breaks were 144 (37), 87 (28), 131 (41), and 221 (63). The figures in brackets denote the number of consecutive spot strokes. As soon as the game was over Mitchell was matched with J. Roberts, jun., and W. Cook, each of whom will try to give him a start of 400 in 2000. Each match will be for £200 a side.

The formation of a small squadron of steam-vessels capable of cruising under sail is, the Standard hears, in contemplation by the Admiralty, and to these ships young seamen will be draughted for the purpose of training them, there being no seagoing sailing-ship left for training purposes.

Yesterday afternoon the magnificent range of deep-water docks, extending between Hartlepool Old Harbour and West Hartlepool Docks, was opened on Tuesday without public ceremony by the admission of the Norwegian barque Sognadalen, timber laden, from Pensacola, a vessel 625 tons register.

On Tuesday evening the members of the Metropolitan Board of Works were entertained by the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House. Among the guests was M. Challemel-Lacour, the French Ambassador, who received a cordial welcome. He took a very hopeful view of the relations between England and France.

The Court of Common Council has resolved that it is desirable that Blackfriars Bridge should be completed in accordance with the designs and provisions of the engineer by the addition of appropriate groups of statuary to be placed upon the pedestals provided for that purpose at the extremities of the structure.

On a little bonheur du jour table to which he succeeded, the Duke of Portland, it is stated, recently paid probate duty at a valuation of 10,000 guineas. The table is 2 ft. wide, 2 ft 9 in. high, and 18 in. deep; the top, frieze, and back are overlaid with old Sèvres plaques, and the mounts are very highly chased and gilt. This, the Artist states, is for its size the most valuable piece of furniture extant.

Some elections to the House of Commons took place last week. Mr. P. Ralli, the Liberal candidate for Wallingford, was returned by 567 votes, against 548 given to Mr. R. W. Hanbury, the Conservative candidate. The Gravesend election resulted in the return of Sir Sydney Waterlow, the Liberal candidate, by a majority of 220 over Sir Robert Peel. The figures were:—Sir Sydney Waterlow, 1504; Sir Robert Peel, 1284. The polling for Buteshire took place last Saturday, when Mr. Charles Dalrymple, the Conservative member for the county in the last Parliament, was returned by a majority of forty-five votes over Mr. Thomas Russell, the Liberal member returned at the general election, but unseated on an informality.

NEW BOOKS.

Lancastrians may be expected to feel more than the interest which will be generally taken in A Caralier's Note-Book: edited by the Rev. T. Ellison Gibson (Longmans), a stout volume, of quaint and ancient appearance in some respects, although perfectly new in others; belonging, it may be presumed, to a series of "Crosby Records." And the reason why the volume should be more interesting to Lancastrians than to other folk is that it contains "notes, anecdotes, and observations of William Blundell, of Crosby, Lancashire, Esquire;" and that, although Blundell is widely known as a good old Catholic name, the Blundells of Crosby, Lancashire, have probably a local fame and consideration beyond the wildest conceptions of the world in general. However that may be, the William Blundell who kept the "note-book" was a "Captain of dragoons under Major-General Sir Thomas Tildesley, Knt., in the Royalist Army of 1642;" and, to judge from the notes he left behind him, which, by-the-way, have a certain historical and antiquarian value of their own, he must have been a man of more than ordinary shrewdness, judgment, ability, humanity, and, for all his ignorance of Shakspeare and Milton, enlightenment, intellectual and moral. The cavalier of the note-book, hight William Blundell, whose family "have been seated at Little Crosby, Lancashire, from very remote times," was born at Crosby Hall on July 15, 1620, and "ended his days peaceably at Crosby Hall on May 24, 1698." This peaceful conclusion of his career was, no doubt, due to the fact that at a very early portion of his military service he was totally disabled by a grievous wound, which caused him to lose "three inches in height." If, however, he could no longer expose his life in the field, he suffered in many other ways, as will appear from the following summary, drawn up by himself:—"A.D. 1643, all my goods and most of my lands were sequestered for being a Papist and delinquent, as the prevailing party call the King's partakers. In the year 1645 my wife farmed my demesne at Crosby, and, all her quick goods being lost, she bought one horse and two oxen to make up a team. A.D. 1646, November 13, I valued all my goods, and, comparing them with my debts, I found myself worse than nothing by the whole sum of 81*l.* 18*s.*, my lands being all lost. A.D. 1653: Till this year, from 1646 inclusively, I remained under sequestration, having one fifth part allowed to my wife, and farming only from the sequestrators my demesne of Crosby and the mill. About Midsummer, 1653, my whole estate was purchased and compounded for with my own money, for my use; so that in the month of February, 1653-4, I was indebted £1100 7*s.*, after which time I was so overcharged with care, debts, business, and imprisoments that I think I took no account of the value of my goods till the year 1658." To some persons it may appear curious that, although the cavalier was prevented by his hurt from active military service, it "does not seem to have prevented him from riding, or from following the diversion of hunting, of which he was particularly fond;" but there was most likely a long interval of helplessness before the amusement was resumed, when military employment was no longer within his reach. His notes would be well worth reading, if only for the sake of correction: they reveal a character as different as anything could be from that of the popular cavalier represented in favourite romances; they disclose a prudent, virtuous, religious gentleman, with a perfect horror of duelling. Yet readers brought up upon a diet of Sir Walter Scott would suppose that an occasional duel was as necessary as daily bread for a true cavalier. In fact, the notes will lead to the very reasonable and desirable belief that, save on doctrinal and political points, there was little or no difference of opinion and custom between a good Puritan and a good cavalier, as indeed there is always between really good men of all parties, especially when the distinction of party involves some distinction of religious tenets.

A mixture of the autocrat and the cheesemonger is suggested by the tone and spirit of Plain English: by John Hollingshead (Chatto and Windus), a volume in which the author, whose book has about as much relation to literature as a bill of lading to epic poetry, combines a dictatorial style with the sordid ideas and sordid arguments of a smart commercial traveller. It might easily be believed that the author is a lineal descendant, with a double portion of the spirit, of some one among those Englishmen who inspired the first Napoleon with his famous declaration: the English are a nation of shopkeepers. And yet the book is amusing from its very cynicism, from the barefaced confession of faith contained in it. The author is a theatrical manager, and he holds that it is his duty, in that capacity, to make his theatre pay; and, as regards the public, "his business is to open his shop, and to serve them with what they want, and not with what he probably would like to give them." This language may, at the first blush, seem plain, open, manly, sensible talking; but a little reflection will cause it to wear a very different appearance. If such reasoning were admitted without qualification a man might not only justify himself in helping the public to debauch their souls, minds, and bodies, but he might positively condemn himself for not doing so. The author appears quite to revel in the idea of putting himself and his vocation on a par with him and with the business of him who panders to a tyrant's appetite, or at any rate tickles a tyrant's palate, to gain a livelihood. That may be a perfectly honest, but it can hardly be called a highly honourable, way of living; certainly not more honourable than that of a cook, which, even in the case of a better than Soyer, is essentially menial, and lacks dignity. This is the author's definition of a theatrical manager:—"A licensed dealer in legs, short skirts, French adaptations, Shakspeare, taste, and the musical glasses." And he further adds that the manager "must have no theories and no prejudices." If this be so, and the author's dogmatisms be pushed home, he would, according to his own showing, see no reason why a manager should not adopt both the practice and the shameless avowal of Bordenave in M. Zola's "Nana." However, there can be little doubt about the author's real meaning, notwithstanding his reckless talk. He would probably rather shut up his theatre altogether than fill it night after night by the means which Bordenave unblushingly employed and cynically admitted to be of such a character that a much worse name than theatre should be used to describe the place where they were so very successful. But it is unnecessary to dwell upon this subject. It is much pleasanter to acknowledge that the book deserves its title, testifies, in parts, of sound sense and practical views, and offers to its readers a great deal of useful information relating to theatrical matters, especially as regards licenses and the danger of fires. The author's satirical turn of mind is exhibited in a collection of "definitions," the style whereof may be inferred from the statement that "drunkenness" is playfully defined as "the most profitable vice that a Chancellor of the Exchequer has to deal with." But when a "Tory" is defined as "a rich Liberal," and a "Liberal" as "a poor Tory," the reader who bears in mind that the Liberals count among them a great many, if not most, of the wealthiest men in the country, is not likely to be impressed with the justness of the definition, or to accept the definer as more than a smart and flippant utterer of specious assertions. Of course he would say that it is "only his fun," and, in fact, he merely pretends to have submitted for examination a bushel of "chaff" in the hope that there may be found in it "one grain of wheat." Some people may think that a "funny" paper rather than a practical man's book is the proper place for such slight specimens of facetiousness.

M. Guizot's "Tales of a Grandfather," or "History of France told to my Grandchildren," did not extend beyond 1789, and the work in which those "tales" were told was translated from the French and published in five large and handsome volumes, entitled History of France: Related for the Rising Generation, by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. A sixth volume, uniform with its predecessors, to be followed, it seems, by another, or others, bringing the history down to 1848, has since been issued by the same publishers. It appears to have been constructed upon lines laid down by the late illustrious statesman himself, and to have been brought out in fulfilment of an intention which he cherished, but which he did not live to accomplish. His daughter, Madame Guizot de Witt, undertook the pious duty of carrying out what may be fairly concluded to have been his wishes. In the absence of explanation, then, either upon the titlepage or elsewhere, it may be assumed that the noble volume under consideration, with its numerous illustrations, amounting to more than a hundred, is the English representative of a French original. It is almost certain, from the forms of expression here and there, that the text is a translation; but whether the version is to be attributed to Madame Guizot de Witt herself or to another there is no indication, nor does it much matter. The volume is perfectly readable, and that is enough, so far as the style is concerned. As regards the matters set forth, it is important to know that Madame Guizot de Witt had collected and preserved the instructive lectures, if they may be so termed, which M. Guizot from time to time delivered to his family and which he "constantly elucidated and supplemented by his conversation," and that she has built up her edifice upon this foundation; for from the date of the Revolution to 1848 the personality of M. Guizot, "intimately connected" as he was "with some of those who witnessed and played a first part" at the revolutionary epoch, and prominent as he afterwards became among the makers of French history, grows more and more inseparable from the record of events, and acquires more and more of weight and authority. For this reason it is probable that the last volumes of the history will be even more interesting and more worthy of study than their predecessors. This sixth volume has for frontispiece a portrait of Napoleon Bonaparte, which gives a more flattering idea of him than will have been formed from the description to be found in the "Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat;" but wherever he appears in the other illustrations, which are for the most part executed with great spirit, his personal appearance is neither in accordance with the generally received representations of him, nor very far short of ruffianly when it is not unrecognisable.

Mr. Alderman Fowler, M.P., presided at a meeting at the Mansion House yesterday week on behalf of the fund being raised for the extension of University College. Resolutions were unanimously agreed to in furtherance of the scheme, amongst the speakers being the Earl of Kimberley, Sir John Lubbock, M.P., Mr. Alderman Cotton, M.P., and Lord Reay. A letter from Lord Derby inclosed a subscription for £500.

Yesterday week the first coffee tavern of the United Kingdom Coffee Taverns Company was opened at No. 122, Euston-road, situated on the north side of the road, and about midway between Euston-square and the Midland Railway terminus. Canon Spence, Vicar of St. Pancras, presided at the opening at three o'clock, which was followed by the opening to the public at five in the evening.

Last week 2493 births and 1300 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 100, whereas the deaths were 80 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 13 from smallpox, 37 from measles, 45 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 44 from whooping-cough, 15 from different forms of fever, and 64 from diarrhœa. The cases of measles considerably exceeded the numbers in recent weeks, and were higher than those returned in any week since the middle of January. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 230, 198, and 176, in the three preceding weeks, were 177 last week, and were within one of the corrected weekly average. Different forms of violence caused 60 deaths.

METZLER'S AMERICAN ORGUINETTE (as supplied to H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice).
The American Orguinette is a musical instrument, constructed somewhat on the principle of the American Organ, and adapted to be automatically worked by simple strips of perforated paper, each strip representing one or more tunes. There is no limit to either kind or quantity of music. It will play hymn tunes, popular airs, sets of quadrilles, polkas, waltzes, reels and hornpipes, with a clearness, accuracy, and degree of execution which but few performers can equal. A mere child can play it.
Style A, with Six Pieces of Music, price £1 10s.
Style E, with Six Pieces of Music and Attachment, price £3 10s.
Cabinet Style, with Selection of Music, price 10 guineas.

SILVER PLATE EXHIBITION, AMSTERDAM.

This is the most interesting loan exhibition which has ever been held in Holland, and the efforts of the club of Dutch artists to make it complete have been crowned with success. Ecclesiastics, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, have for the time denuded the "treasuries" of their respective churches in order to aid a national work in which all were concerned, and whatever they possessed that was precious, in books, missals, church furniture, and the like, was placed freely at the disposal of the club.

Nor has the hearty assistance of other countries been wanting. Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, of the South Kensington Museum, has sent a large case of electrotyped shields, vases, cups, caskets, spoons, plaques, &c., which form by no means the least imposing group in the exhibition; and Professor Lessing has sent a kindred collection of electrotypes from the Gewerbe Museum in Berlin. Prince Frederick of the Netherlands and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha are also distinguished by the value of their contributions. A small volume in the book-binding section, lent by the latter, is peculiarly precious. It is only about two inches square; but its tiny covers are rarely enamelled with figures and literally incrusted with diamonds, rubies, and emeralds. The volume is valued by experts at a hundred thousand guilders, which in British money would be equivalent to eight thousand three hundred and thirty-three pounds sterling—a rather remarkable price for a volume which lies easily within the palm of a lady's hand.

But by far the most numerous and, perhaps, most characteristic contributions come from churches, town corporations, and private individuals. Among the last is Dr. J. P. Six, a descendant, we believe, of the Burgomaster Six of Rembrandtish renown. The memory of the connection of the two names he is careful to keep green by maintaining intact the finest private collection known of the works of the great master of chiaroscuro. With the aid of other contributors, he has furnished a dinner-table just as it would have been set forth a hundred years ago. The soup-tureens are of silver, and the plates of Nankin blue of the Lange Lijsen pattern, so much prized in London during the last few years. At the side of each plate lie a blue Delft-handled knife, a fork, and a spoon; and the look of the appointments is at once rich and quaint.

One curious collection of objects was to be found in childrens' toys and playthings, all of which, it would appear, were, two or three generations ago, made of silver. The articles represented were such familiar objects as boats and sails, sledges, horses, goats, coaches, barrows, spinning-wheels, rope-dancers, boys and hoops, tea-things, chairs and tables, and, of course, windmills and milk-maids. They were all of miniature size, and such as a lady of our own time might almost wear among the nick-nacks attached to her girdle.

Another very characteristic portion of the collection consisted of a set of silver-mounted whips of a portentous size, with great knobbed handles, looking just like the staves of state carried by English beadles on high parish occasions, only the bulbed end was the handle end, and to the other was attached a lusty whip-thong. Such whips used to be given, particularly in Friesland, as prizes to the winners of trotting-matches, on which occasions the trotter was harnessed to a high, old-fashioned chaise, and so driven. During the present century, however, winners have preferred for their prizes silver teapots or teakettles, tobacco-pots, and often money, and the grand whip is known only now but in museums.

We do not know whether the arrangement of the catalogue is in harmony with Dutch tradition; but we were rather struck with the circumstance that drinking-vessels take precedence of everything else in the museum, and with the variety of names under which such vessels are classified. There are, for example, five different kinds of Bekers, then come Drinkhoorns, Drinkschalen, Drinkkroegen, Koppen, and Drinkkannen. These are followed by other objects pertaining to the table and by various miscellaneous articles, including coins, medals, badges, armorial shields, watches, seals, and trinkets of all kinds. Then comes a section devoted to book-binding, so far as it embraces the goldsmith's and jeweller's art; and, lastly of all, there are most valuable contributions from the three great religious bodies living in Holland—viz., the Jews, the Roman Catholics, and the Protestants, and it is in this order that they are placed in the catalogue.

The collection consists of 854 exhibits, and from what we have said our readers will rightly conclude that it is of rare variety and excellence. In point of time, the examples begin about the middle of the sixteenth century and come down to pretty nearly the close of the eighteenth. There seems, moreover, no style from the matchless modelling and designs of Benvenuto Cellini to the filigree work of the Genoese, which Dutch goldsmiths and silversmiths have not imitated and often rivalled. We were particularly struck with the workmanship of a golden cup by Paulus Van Vianen, dated 1610; with another by an artist onbekend, on which three exquisitely designed figures in coloured enamel of Judith, Deborah, and Jael fill each a separate compartment; and especially with a ewer and dish by Adam Van Vianen, dated 1614. In the bottom of the dish were represented in low relief a charging squadron, cannon in batteries, and spearmen ranked in squares, all with a force and truth which produced on the eye quite a pleasant pictorial effect. There is also a very fine dish, 22 inches in diameter, filled with classic subjects treated in a manner worthy of the best period of the Renaissance; and yet it and the accompanying vase date no farther back than 1712. Indeed, there are several choice examples of repoussé work in the Exhibition, and of ivory jugs in high relief not a few; but enough has been said to indicate the character of the Exhibition, and we will conclude our notice with a word or two on the spirited club, whose motto is Arti et Amicitiæ, and on the club-house in which this fine collection of gold and silver work is being exhibited.

The building, a substantial erection with some architectural pretensions of a modest kind, is about the size of one of our smaller club-houses, and stands in the Rokin-straat, facing the canal of that name, so called, some fancy, because in olden times women used to be drowned here for witchcraft: and rok they say is Dutch for petticoat. This building, along with a good many others in the same locality, is the property of the club, which exists that it may promote art, succour the widows and orphans of their late members, and encourage brotherhood among the living. It was started about forty years ago by a few enthusiastic artists—by which our readers will understand those belonging to the plastic arts—whose pockets were anything but plethoric; and now they number a thousand members, more than the half of whom are private gentlemen, possess many capital buildings of their own, and 150,000 gulden invested in the Four-per-Cents. The catalogue, which is in Dutch, is in the fullest manner descriptive; and its compilers have introduced one feature which strikes us as worthy of imitation. To the number of the century to which an article belongs is invariably added one or other of the first four letters of the alphabet to indicate the time more precisely—"a" meaning the first quarter of the century, "b" the second, and so on. Definiteness of this kind, as to date, is of great value to the archæologist. J. F. R.

THE MAGAZINES.

It has of late been suspected that Mr. Henry James has been writing too much, but no confirmation of the suspicion can be deduced from his present contribution to the Cornhill. "Washington Square" is, so far, an excellent example of the comedy-novel. The characters are at present few; and the situation of the tritest—an ardent youth, a willing maid, and a father much too prudent to please them. But the old, old story is told with as much freshness as though it were original. The scene in which Dr. Sloper refuses his consent is a masterpiece of quiet but rapid cut-and-thrust dialogue. "Studies in Kentish Chalk" is another ornament to the magazine, a delightful picture by an admirable word-painter of the scenery of "the garden of England." "Cimabue and Coal-Scuttles" is an interesting review of the progress of the well-to-do classes in quest of "an æsthetic style which will suit their purses," and enforces the wholesome moral that taste may be shown in the simplest things, and that æsthetic aspirations need not necessarily involve extravagant outlay. Captain Burton's memoir of Belzoni is chiefly interesting for its account of the least-known portion of the traveller's career, his death in the Bight of Benin. The Laureate's numerous adaptations and imitations of his predecessors form the subject of a second investigation, which adds to his reputation for taste even more than it detracts from his reputation for originality; and Mr. Leslie Stephen, while rating Sterne's genius more highly than Mr. Thackeray does, substantially agrees with the latter's low estimate of his character.

Macmillan has several good contributions on subjects of general interest. Foremost among these, perhaps, is one on "The Decline of the German University System," a phenomenon attributed by the writer to the centralisation of culture at two or three favoured seats, like Berlin or Leipsic, where alone a professor can obtain a respectable livelihood, and whither, accordingly, the ablest men flock to the detriment of the small local universities. "The Albanians and the Albanian Question" is a review of the situation by a friend of this picturesque people, who would gladly see their independence established, but who, despairing of such a consummation, prefers that they should gravitate to Greece rather than to Montenegro. Miss Betham-Edwards's reminiscences of a tour in Auvergne are as agreeable as any of her previous pleasant pictures of travel. "Peasant Life in Bengal" is merely a summary of Lal Behari Day's novel on the subject, "Govinda Samanta." The social state of a country nearer home is forcibly illustrated in Mr. Bence Jones's reply to the criticisms passed upon his recent remarkable paper on the questions at issue between Irish landlords and their tenants. The various causes for the present unsatisfactory state of affairs here enumerated seem mainly reducible to one—the general want of truthfulness and manliness throughout the country. "There is no such thing," says Mr. Bence Jones, "as a healthy public opinion in Ireland among any class. There is nothing and no one to put anybody to shame, whatever his conduct may be."

The most important article in Blackwood is one on "Schools and Colleges," discussing more particularly the extent to which University teaching is falling into the hands of the younger Fellows, and the lack of influence of which they frequently complain. "The Financial Situation in India" surrenders Sir J. Strachey's case as regards his late disastrous Budget, but makes an effective appeal for him on the ground of his former services. An essay on Beattie points out to what a degree Tennyson's "Oenone" is taken from Beattie's "Judgment of Paris," but also how infinitely Tennyson has surpassed his model. "A Lay Confessional" is a history in a dramatic form, set forth with singular grace and power.

"Mary Anerley" is approaching its conclusion in Fraser's Magazine. Although by no means the best of Mr. Blackmore's novels, it has always maintained a rank above the average of contemporary fiction. There is a sensible paper on Montaigne's ideas of education, and a sound criticism on the author of "Songs of Two Worlds," pointing out his affinities to an illustrious countryman of earlier date, Henry Vaughan, the "Silurist." "Hospital Nursing" directs attention to the general success of Miss Nightingale's principles of administration, and hints at causes of the unfortunate state of affairs at Guy's Hospital, of which the public have not hitherto been informed. The most remarkable contribution, however, is one on "The Ministry and its Work," contrasting forcibly with the excessive jubilation with which the change of Administration was originally welcomed by Fraser. Ministers are accused of rashness and precipitancy, and Mr. Forster's Irish bill, in particular, is roundly denounced as nothing better than confiscation.

The Nineteenth Century is replete with the contributions of eminent writers whose specifics for the diseases of humanity have been frequently propounded, and who can do little else than reiterate them. Mr. Matthew Arnold reminds Liberals, for the tenth time, that their business is to teach people how to live, and that this business is imperfectly discharged. Mr. Mallock imparts some slight novelty to ideas long since worn threadbare by him through the pretty setting of a slight tale. Mr. Blackley's views on national insurance, the Abbé Martin's on the attitude of the French Republic towards the clergy, and Mr. Hyndman's on Indian deficits are known before they are stated. The last-named writer, however, adduces some interesting facts, and Mr. E. J. Wilson's conclusion that the House of Commons must come sooner or later to the French system of the clôture is evidently the results of a serious examination of the question. The most entertaining paper in the number is Mr. G. Holyoake's sketch of his visit to America, where he went to propose the collection and publication of statistics useful to emigrants. He thinks that American politicians are not perhaps regardless altogether of principle, and observes that if Dr. Erasmus Darwin correctly defined a fool as "a man who never made an experiment," there is hardly a single fool in America.

The Fortnightly Review has too many papers on subjects which might be allowed to lie fallow for a time. Even Mr. Blunt's plea for a full consideration of Arab claims to a share of the Ottoman inheritance is mainly a repetition of what he has said before; but the theme will bear repetition better than the distribution of land in France or Parliamentary representation in England. Mr. Pearson's argument in favour of a progressive land tax in Victoria will scarcely carry conviction, but it affords interesting illustrations of the peculiar dangers of colonial communities between their democracies of mere numbers and their aristocracies of mere wealth. There are two able literary papers—Mr. Minto's essay on Poe and Mr. Simcox's review of the very remarkable poems of Mr. James Thomson.

One's first thought on remarking that a narrative of a few weeks' tour on the Continent by the Duke of Argyll is allowed the post of honour in the Contemporary Review, is that Dukes obtain entrance into periodicals on easier terms than ordinary mortals. But the criticism would be hasty and unjust, for the Duke does not appear in the character of a tourist, but of an observer of natural history, an office which few can more adequately discharge. All his zoological notes are delightful, and his remarks on geological mutations and the evolutionary theory display acumen and serious thought. Major Grey's panacea for the Indian deficit is to abolish the permanent settlement of the Bengal land revenue, a salutary measure, could it but be shown to be consistent with good faith. The ethics of Indian financiers require to be controlled by a more disinterested class of moralists. Mr. L. Bradley, in a suggestive paper, proposes to effect the abolition of the income tax by an increase of the receipt-stamp duty. We should have thought such a measure, which has much to recommend it, rather the supplement than the substitute of a tax on property. Dr. Hillebrand draws a gloomy picture of German discontent, which he mainly ascribes to the fact that the nation in Europe reputed to be the best educated is in fact not educated half enough. The most remarkable of the other contributions is M. Lenormant's learned, but inevitably intricate, elucidation of the Eleusinian Mysteries.

The Modern Review gains in interest and variety. All the nine articles are spirited and readable. Mr. Clodd's on the Later Stone Age, Mr. R. C. Jones's on Synesius, and Dr. Odgers's on the Eikon Basilike controversy pre-eminently so.

It is in our eyes a serious objection to the current number of the Victorian Review that it contains nothing Victorian except an editorial "word on Victoria's position in the frozen-meat question," and Mr. Stuart Reid's sensible remarks on the great colonial abuse of paying members of the Legislature. Minerva, on the other hand, sets a good example by its varied information on Italian matters—such as the scientific mission to Shoa, the quarries of Carrara, the Camorra of Naples, and the Monte di Pietà of Rome. Signor Parodi's conversations with Victor Hugo are so interesting as almost to reconcile us for this once to the objectionable practice of "interviewing" celebrities.

Mr. Aldrich's story in the Atlantic Monthly, "The Stillwater Tragedy," contains a vigorous picture of a strike; and "The Undiscovered Country" is brought to a satisfactory conclusion. Among a number of excellent miscellaneous papers the palm of interest, perhaps, belongs to an American view of the prospects of Canadian confederation and a picturesque description of the occupation of Richmond by General Weitzel's corps. The most noticeable articles in Scribner's Monthly are Professor Boyesen's sketch of the Norwegian poet and novelist Björnson, and General MacClellan's account of his tour in Sicily, which indicates a highly cultivated and highly susceptible mind.

There is little of interest in the Gentleman's Magazine, except the continuation of Mr. Francillon's "Queen Cophetua," and an ingenious speculation of Mr. Karl Blind on the identity of Woden and the Wandering Jew. An essay on Brantôme in Temple Bar, though slight, shows real critical perception; and there is much to provoke curiosity in "The Strange Story of Kitty Canham," the absconding wife of a Kentish clergyman in the last century; especially as the story is clearly not fully told. The strength of Belgravia lies in its serial tales; and both "A Confidential Agent" and "A Leaden Casket" are very good. There is also much of Mr. Julian Hawthorne's peculiar power in his "Kildhurm's Oak." "Our Old Country Towns" has got round to the east of England, and contains capital sketches from Lincoln, King's Lynn, and Whittlesea. Time manifests a good deal of sarcastic humour in "How to Become a Courtier," and of burlesque humour in "Violet Fane's" "Sophy." The July number of Home, which begins a new volume, opens well with the first portion of a tale, "Windwhistle Hill," by Edmund de la Pole; there is another instalment of "Great Heart," by a powerful and evidently practised pen; "Une Nichée de Gentilshommes" increases in interest; and, finally, in "Daisies and Buttercups," by Mrs. Riddell, we welcome back Mr. Cheverley, who has been too long absent, albeit he has had excellent substitutes, and whose appearance, now he has again come, is tantalisingly brief. The Antiquary contains its usual pleasant gossip on archæological lore. Papers on "Book-Plates," "Art-Treasures at the Mansion House," and "Our Early Bells" are especially to be noted. The principal article in the Theatre is a full account of the Ammergau Passion Play, by Mr. Clement Scott. A portrait of Madame Modjeska is also a great attraction.

Among the excellent serials published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin are the Magazine of Art, the Popular Edition of the Doré Illustrated Bible, Family Magazine, Quiver, Old and New London, Technical Educator; Longfellow's Poetical Works, Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates; an Illustrated Book of the Dog; and Farrar's Life of Christ, Illustrated.

We have received Part 3 of the Great Historic Galleries of England, edited by Lord Ronald Gower, the Shilling Serial Issue of Mr. Heath's Fern Paradise, London Society and its Summer Number, St. James's Magazine, Tinsley's Magazine, Argosy, Good Words, Churchman's Magazine, Victoria Magazine, Colburn's New Monthly, St. Nicholas, Science Gossip, Men of Mark, Examples of Works of Art in the South Kensington Museum, Covent-Garden Magazine, Welcome Hour, Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Social Notes, Children's Advocate, Animal World, Mission Life, and Chatterbox. Among the Fashion Books are Le Follet, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Myra's Journal, Myra's Mid-Monthly, and Illustrated Household Journal. We have also received Monthly Parts of All the Year Round and its Summer Number, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardeners' Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Day of Rest, Welcome, Social Notes, Boy's Own Paper, Girl's Own Paper, Young England, Union Jack, the Daisy, and the Christian Age.

The trustees of the Princess Alice Memorial Fund have received from India £3661, contributed chiefly by native princes and gentlemen. This brings up the entire amount contributed to considerably more than £7000.

At a meeting of the council of the Central Chamber of Agriculture on Thursday week, a resolution was unanimously agreed to regarding with satisfaction the steps taken by the Government for the repeal of the malt tax by the substitution of a duty on beer. A long discussion ensued on the Ground Game Bill, in the course of which various amendments and suggestions were made. They were, however, ultimately withdrawn. Mr. C. S. Read heartily approved of the bill as the best of the kind that had ever been introduced in the House of Commons.

The Notts Agricultural Society's annual show was held last week at Lenton, near Nottingham. There were 187 entries of horses, 76 of cattle, 43 of sheep, and 53 of pigs, besides a good show of poultry, pigeons, agricultural implements, &c. The Marquis of Exeter took the first and second prizes for bulls above three years old. In the other classes for cattle the Duke of Portland was awarded two first and four second prizes, and his Grace also took seven prizes for sheep. Mr. F. J. S. Foljambe, M.P., was a successful exhibitor of stock, and Lord Galway, M.P., gained a couple of second prizes for pigs. For agricultural horses the prizes mostly fell to local exhibitors.

INDIA.

Lord Lytton and his family left Simla on Monday, the 28th ult., and arrived at Bombay on Friday. They were received at the station by the Governor, whom they accompanied to Government House, where they spent the day. On Saturday last Lord Lytton embarked in state on board the Himalaya, in presence of a crowd of Europeans and natives. In response to a call from the Governor of Bombay, three cheers were given for Earl and Countess Lytton.

Telegrams from India give some further details of the attack on and dispersion of the Zurmat men by General Hill's cavalry brigade. One of the Times correspondents says that the blow thus struck has for the moment broken up the new combination; but the punishment inflicted has not been so severe as to prevent the insurgents from reassembling hereafter. None of the defeated tribesmen were favourable to Abdur Rahman. The Calcutta correspondent of the same journal says that Abdur Rahman started from Kohistan from Khanabad on June 28, having sent to Cabul a letter professing his great satisfaction at the prospects of an amicable understanding with the British Government. His movements and intentions are still ambiguous, but they will be tested as soon as he crosses the Hindoo Koosh. With respect to Ayoub Khan, the same writer says, it is doubtful whether he will risk a battle. Should he do so, there can be no doubt as to the result, and just as little doubt that his complete defeat will go far to remove one of the elements of uncertainty in the existing Afghan situation. A Bombay telegram in the Standard says that the statement that Mr. Lepel Griffin has been summoned to Simla is premature.

Irving, K.C.M.G., on the expiration of his term of office.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Princess of Wales has expressed her intention of being present on the last day of the Wimbledon meeting, and will distribute the prizes to the successful competitors.

In order to represent Scotland in the Elcho Challenge-Shield competition at Wimbledon this year, the following gentlemen have been chosen to form the eight:—Martin Boyd, Irvine; Captain Thorburn, Peebles; R. M'Vittie, Dumfries; T. R. Bruce, Kirkcudbright; Lieutenant M'Isaac, 1st Renfrew; Lieutenant M'Intyre, Dumbarton; John Clews, 2nd Lanark; and Lieutenant M'Kenell, London Scottish, with Captain Taylor and Lieutenant M'Auslan, Dumbarton, as reserves.

The Canadian Rifle Team, who have crossed the Atlantic to take part in the Wimbledon meeting, is in command of Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur T. H. Williams, of Port-Hope, Ontario.

To-day (Saturday) has been fixed for the annual Government inspection of several of the metropolitan Volunteer regiments—viz., the Civil Service (21st Middlesex), at Richmond; Customs and Docks (26th Middlesex), at Bushey Park; London Irish (28th Middlesex), in Hyde Park; Artists (38th Middlesex), on the Horse Guards' parade; Finsbury (39th Middlesex), in the Regent's Park; 2nd Essex, at Stratford; and others.

Following the custom which has obtained for many years in the Civil Service Rifle Volunteers, composed of her Majesty's civil servants, of which the Prince of Wales is honorary colonel, and Lord Bury commanding officer, the 21st Middlesex has been under canvas in the Old Deer Park at Richmond.

The annual great gun competition of the 1st Kent Artillery Volunteer Corps, or, as it was known until lately, the 1st Administrative Brigade of Kent Artillery Volunteers (which comprises eleven batteries, belonging to Gravesend, Faversham, Blackheath, Sandgate, Gillingham, and Sheerness) was concluded at Hurty Ferry Battery, near Faversham, last Saturday. Thirty-one detachments competed. The guns used were forty-pound breechloaders, the range was 1600 yards, the number of rounds five, and the time allowed ten minutes. The result was as follows: Faversham (No. 1 detachment), 35 points, first (£16); Sheerness (No. 5), 34, second; Gillingham (No. 2), 33, third; Sheerness (No. 7), 32, fourth; Faversham (No. 4), 32, fifth; Gillingham (No. 5), 29, sixth. The challenge cup for the highest average score was won by Faversham. There was also a repository contest. In this again Faversham was victorious.

The Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers (1st London corps) hold their annual boat-races to-day (Saturday).

Her Majesty's gun-boat Cherub has arrived at Harwich to take the place of her Majesty's ship Penelope whilst the latter vessel is absent with the reserve squadron on the cruise of evolution. The schooner-yacht, owned by Lieutenant Smith, R.N., N.V., with Royal Naval Volunteers, proceeded on a voyage of Instruction for Copenhagen and Stockholm on Saturday afternoon.

The affair of the Hull Artillery Brigade has not ended as seemed probable last week. In accordance with orders from the Commander-in-Chief, Colonel Field, commanding Northern Artillery, and Colonel Collington, inspecting officer of Artillery, York, visited Hull on Monday, bearing with them the orders dispensing with the services of Colonel Commandant Humphrey and Captains Thorp, Wellesley, and Sharp, of the Hull Artillery Brigade. At a previous parade of the corps, Colonel Lord Londesborough read the order from the Commander-in-Chief intimating that his Lordship had been permitted to withdraw the resignation of his commission as Colonel of the brigade. Lord Londesborough addressed the men on the necessity of fidelity to her Majesty. Colonel Field also briefly addressed the men, and after they had left the platform some one called for three cheers for Colonel Humphrey, which were lustily given. Major Pudsey, who was in command, vainly called for silence. Cheers were also given for the three dismissed captains, and two of them who were near at hand were carried on the shoulders of some of the men, amid great cheering, to the residence of Colonel Humphrey. Many of the men declared they would attend no further parades of the corps.

It appears that the review of the Scotch Volunteers, which it was proposed to hold in August next in the Queen's Park, in honour of the majority of the force, will not take place.

At Dublin the Abercorn Cup Rifle Competition terminated late yesterday week. The top score was made by Mr. Jackson, one of the Americans who did not shoot in the late international match. He made 464 out of a possible 500; and was followed by Scott, also American, with 461. Captain Fenton made the highest score of the Irish competitors, 458; but, he having formerly won the cup, that prize fell to Major Young, who scored 453. Milner made 450, Warren 447, John Rigby 444, and William Rigby, 441. The first six, therefore, of the Irish eight to shoot for the Elcho shield will be Fenton, Young, Milner, Warren, John Rigby, and William Rigby. With them lies the selection of the remaining two members. Of the Americans, Browne made 451, Farrow 444, Laird 441. Two American squads competed on Saturday for the All-Ireland Challenge Shield, and the Wilkes (Spirit of the Times) Gold Medal. The competition for the Shield was open to rifle clubs affiliated to the Irish Rifle Association, each to be represented by a squad of four men, and also by one squad each for England and Scotland and the United States. Three squads competed—namely, Messrs. Jackson, Scott, Browne, and Laird, forming the Washington-Boston team; Messrs. John Rigby, Fenton, Warren, and Milner, representing the Dublin Shooting Club; and Messrs. Joynt, Coghlan, Johnston, and Murphy, representing the Dublin Miniature Rifle Club. The ranges were 1000 and 1100 yards, twenty shots at each range, the highest possible individual score being, of course, 200, and the highest club score 800. The Shield was won by the Dublin Shooting Club with a score of 636, the Miniature Club making 626 and the Americans 625. Mr. Joynt made the best individual score, 168, Mr. Brown made 93, and Mr. Murphy 91, at 1000 yards; while at the longer range the best scores were made by Captain Fenton, 84, and Mr. Scott, 82. The Wilkes Challenge Gold Medal, competed for by Messrs. Joynt, Fenton, and Scott, the highest in each team in the preceding match, was won by Mr. Joynt. The American Cup and Championship of Ireland fell to Captain Fenton in right of his having made the highest aggregate score during the meeting.

Last month the officers of the Fishmongers' Company seized at Billingsgate market, as unfit for human food, 65 tons 13 cwt. of fish which had been consigned there for sale. With the exception of 13 cwt., the whole quantity came by land. The fish numbered 15,765, and included 53 cod, 419 crabs, 70 undersized crabs, 4420 haddocks, 8 halibut, 988 lobsters, 5500 plaice, 2900 roach and perch, 4 salmon, 1 grilse salmon, 42 skate, 170 soles, 584 thornbacks, 98 trout, 158 turbot, and 400 whiting; and in addition 2 bags of cockles, 128 of mussels, and 8 of whelks; 107 boxes of herrings, 82 barrels of sprats, and 1 of oysters; 780 bushels of periwinkles, 207 baskets of shrimps, and 550 quarts of whitebait.

Atkinson, Edmund Willes; to be Rector of Harswell.
Booth, William; Vicar of Hook.
Burrows, John Nelson; Vicar of St. Augustine's, Haggerston.
Cattley, Richard; Honorary Canon of Worcester Cathedral.
Gibson, E. C. S.; Prebendary of Combe Fifteenth in Wells Cathedral.
Lewis, Alfred Merlin; Vicar of Huttons Ambo.
Orr, William Holmes; Rector of West Lydford.
Pearson, Alfred; Vicar of All Saints', Nottingham.
Pitcher, Amos William; Rector of Keinton Mandeville.
Sandford, G.; Vicar of Ecclesall, Sheffield.
Stewart, W. A.; Vicar of West Tisted, Alresford.
Torr, William Edward, Vicar of Flamstead; Vicar of Eastham, Cheshire.
Williamson, Zaccheus P.; Perpetual Curate of Margam, Glamorganshire.

The Rev. E. H. Bickersteth has, says the Record, given the Church Missionary Society £1000 to begin a mission among the Bhils, a hill tribe in Central India.

Lord Blachford and Sir Walter Charles James have been placed on the Commission to inquire into the condition of the cathedral churches in England and Wales.

On the 1st inst. Mr. J. D. Allcroft laid the foundation, and Mrs. Horace Marshall a memorial stone, of a church dedicated to St. Paul in the Ferndale-road, Brixton.

A painted window in memory of Sir Francis Hopkins, Bart., has been erected by his sister, Mrs. Tottenham, in the Church of Moyliscar, Mullingar. The work is from the studio of Mr. W. G. Taylor, of Berners-street.

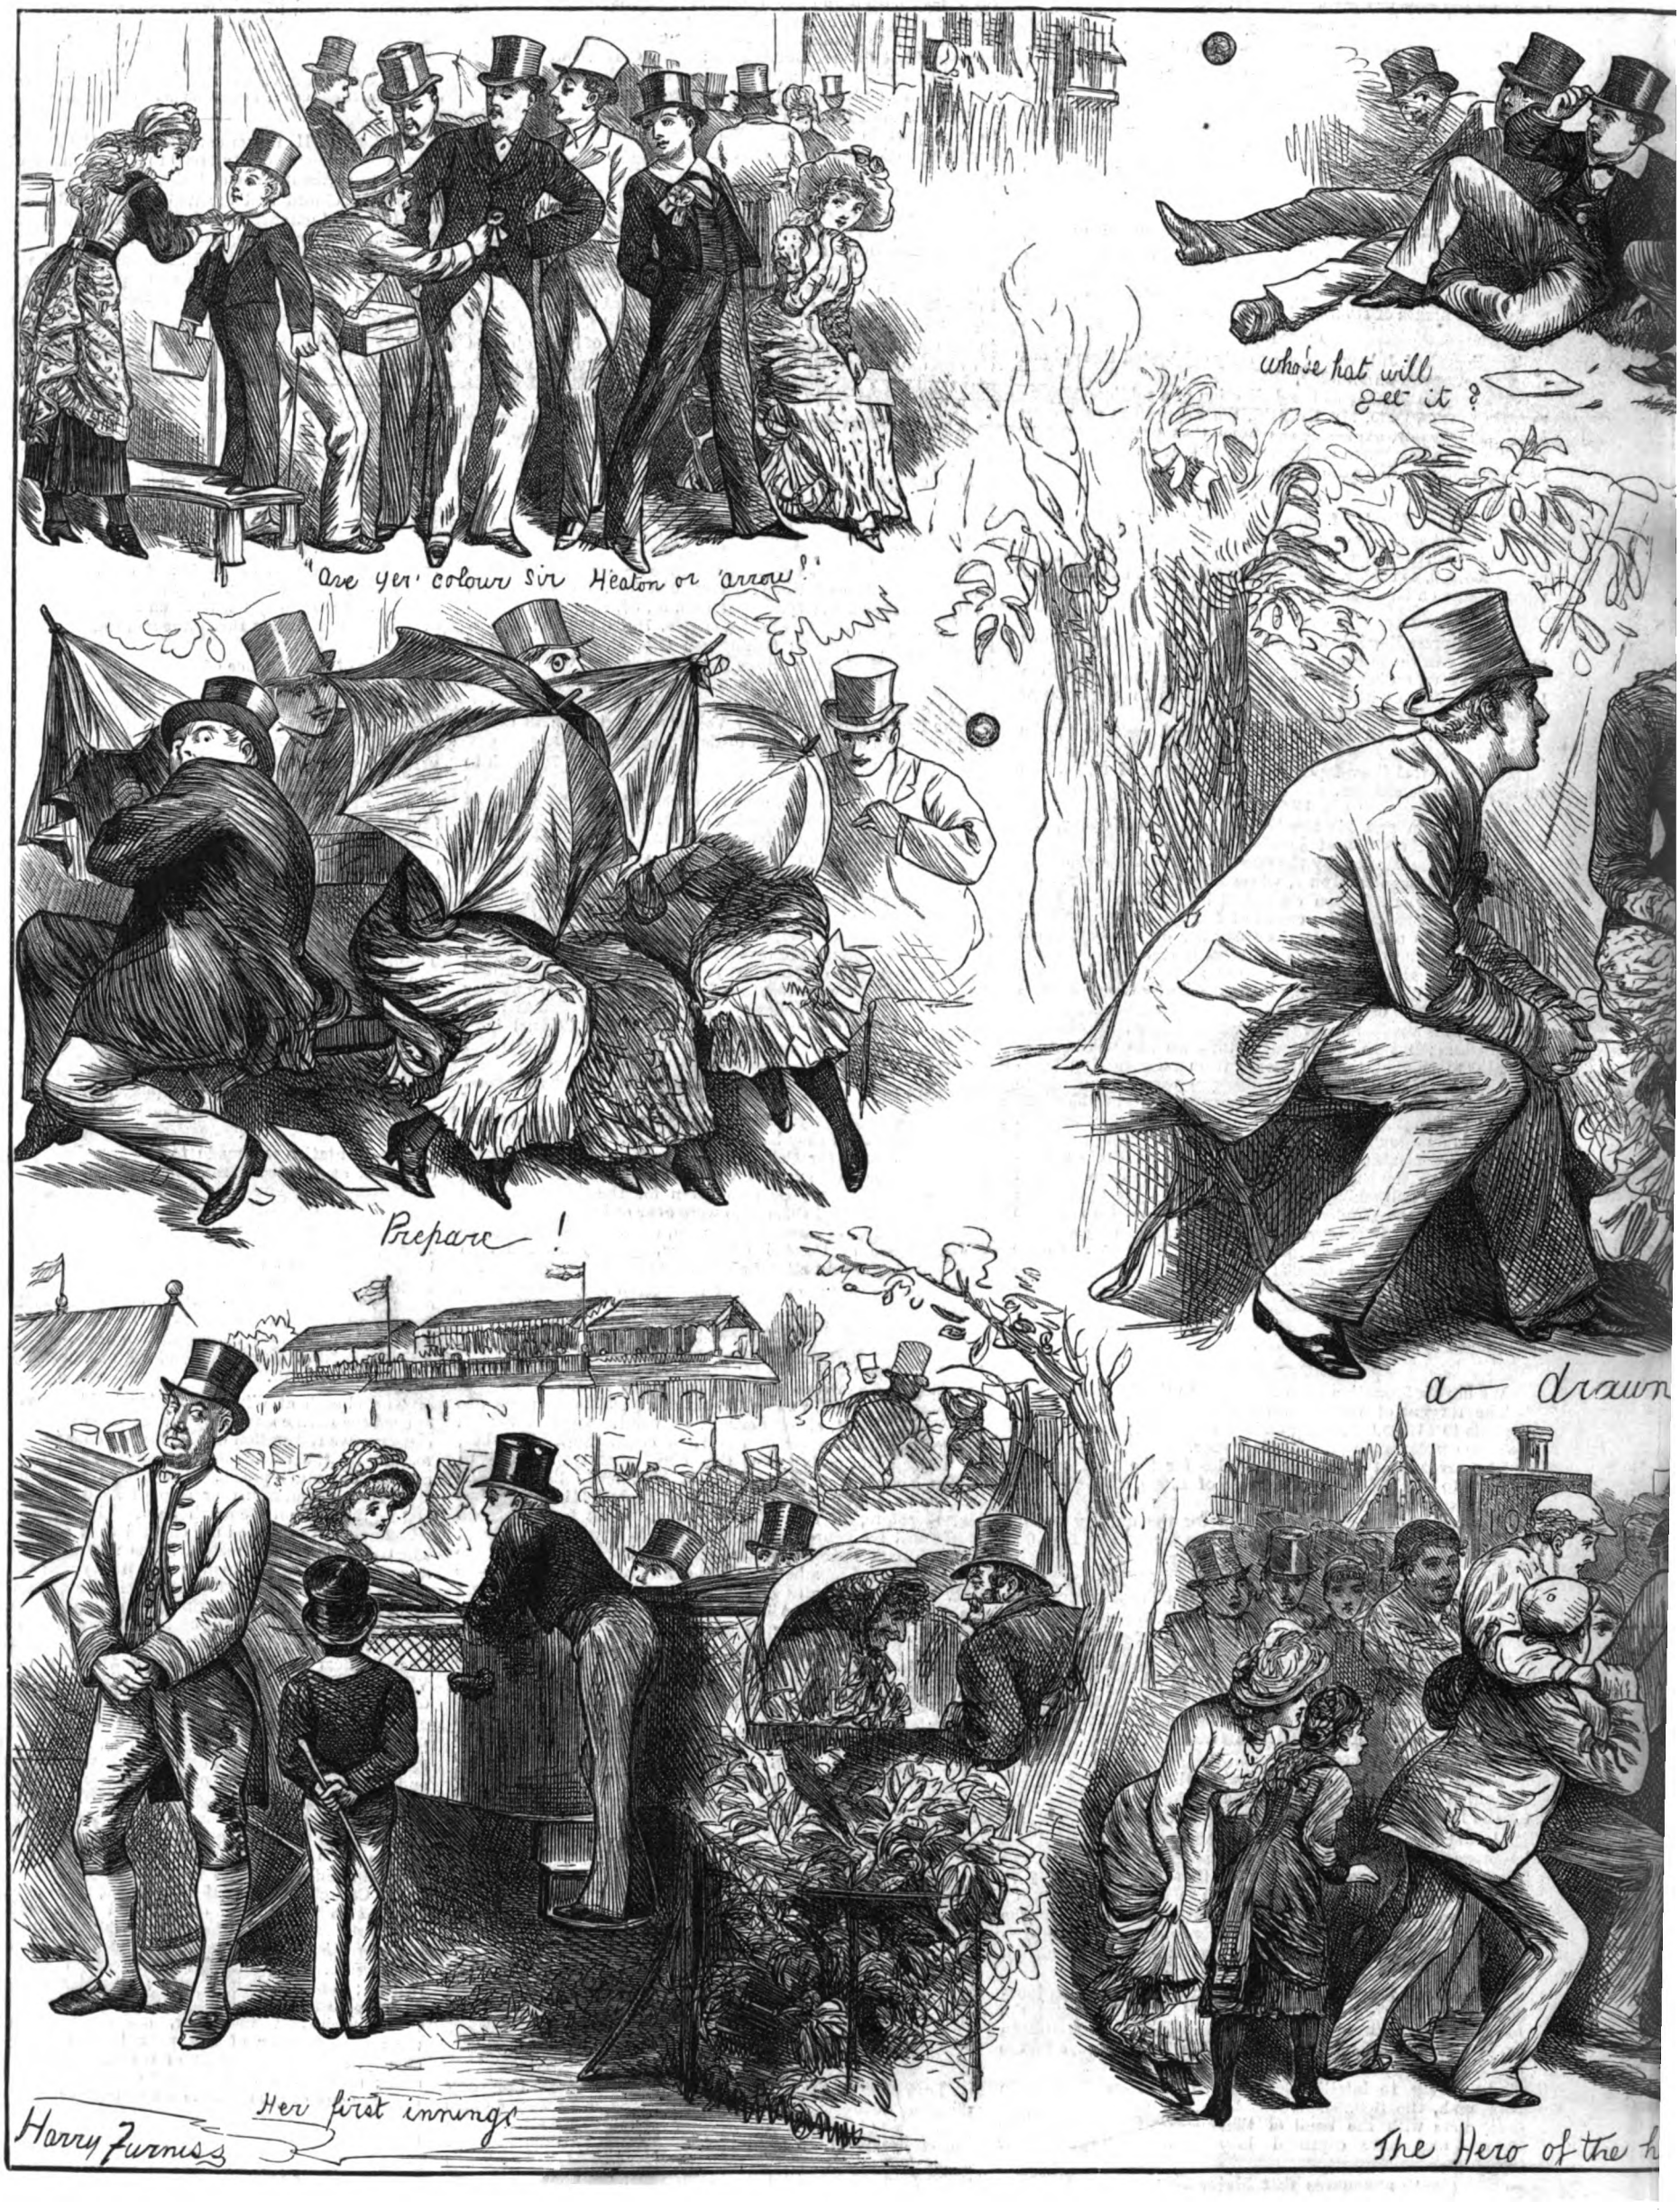
Dr. Ryle, the first Bishop of Liverpool, was enthroned in the Pro-Cathedral of St. Peter on the 1st inst. An illustration of the ceremony is given on another page, and in our Number for June 19 appeared an exterior view of St. Peter's Church.

The Mackonochie case, having been practically abandoned by Mr. Martin, has been taken up by the Bishop of London, who on Sunday took the first step towards carrying out the sentence of sequestration by having a notice of it affixed to the doors of St. Alban's Church.

The Convocation of York met on Tuesday, when Dean Cowie was chosen Prolocutor by 31 votes to 21 given for Dean Howson. Canterbury Convocation meets next Tuesday, when the subjects of Clergy Discipline and Curates' Salaries are set down for consideration.

Notice of the sentence of sequestration passed on the Rev. A. H. Mackonochie was affixed on Sunday morning to the door of St. Alban's Church, Holborn. The document of sequestration authorises Mr. J. Benjamin Lee, Registrar of the Diocese of London, to receive all income arising from the living, and to provide for the due performance of Divine worship.

Last week the Bishop of Worcester consecrated St. Thomas's Church, which has been erected in the new parish of Nuthurst-cum-Hockley Heath, near Knowle. The total cost, exclusive of the site, has been about £2200, towards which Mr. T. Burman, of Waring's-green, and the Rev. T. H. Mynors, Vicar of Salter's-street, Hockley-heath, have each given £500, besides making handsome donations to the endowment fund.



The New Testament Company of Revisers assembled on Tuesday in the Jerusalem Chamber for their one hundredth and first session. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided. The other members present were the Bishop of St. Andrews, the Master of the Temple, the Dean of Lichfield, the Dean of Lincoln, the Dean of Westminster, Archdeacon Palmer, Professor Brown, Professor Milligan, Professor Newth, Professor Roberts, Dr. Scrivener, Dr. Vance Smith, and Mr. Humphry. The company proceeded to consider various proposals made with the view of securing harmony of rendering.

A presentation was made to the Rev. John Russell yesterday week at the town residence of the Duke of Bedford, in Eaton-square. The rev. gentleman is well known in the hunting world, and the occasion of the testimonial was that Mr. Russell has left the rectorship of Swymbridge, in North Devon, which living he has held for forty-seven years, having been appointed to the living of Black Torrington by Lord Poltimore. There were over 150 subscribers; and the presentation, made by Earl Fortescue, consisted of a silver soup tureen, a book with the names of the subscribers (headed by the Prince of Wales) in illuminated letters, and a purse of £650. An Illustration of Swymbridge Church appeared in our Number of June 19.

The church at Winthorpe, Lincolnshire, was recently re-opened for Divine service by the Bishop of the diocese. The conservative restoration of this fine specimen of Gothic architecture by the architect, W. Smith, Esq., received on the opening day much praise. The debt remaining on the work done is £100, and a further sum of £250 is much needed to restore the roof on the north aisle. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have restored the chancel at a cost of about £600. The treasurer for the restoration is now most anxious to get an endowment for the living; and if any rich and benevolent person will come forward and assist in the cause it would be a great blessing to this poor, thinly inhabited parish, if a clergyman's house could be built and the living made sufficient to support a Vicar, the living at present being £2 10s. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners allow £150 for a curate to the Vicar of Burgh-cum-Winthorpe, which burgh is five miles distant from Winthorpe.

The programme of the Church Congress, which is to be held at Leicester on Sept. 28, 29, 30, and Oct. 1, has been issued. The Bishop of Peterborough will be the president, and the preachers at the opening services will be the Archbishop of York and the Dean of Llandaff. The subjects to be discussed include the following:—The foreign missions of the Church; the religious condition of the nation; upper and middle class education, its present condition, and how to maintain and promote its religious character; internal unity of the Church, and the influence of the three great schools of thought in the Church of England upon each other and upon the Church; the responsibility of the Church towards Dissent, with special regard to home re-union; existing forms of unbelief—their social and moral tendencies; home mission work; popular recreations, how to improve them (including light literature and the stage); the Church and the poor, including the questions of the remedial action of the poor laws, the organisation of charity, the encouragement of thrift, and compulsory insurance; the Church in relation to the organisation of labour; the influence of the Church over young men and women—how to maintain and increase it; efforts towards reform in foreign Churches, and the attitude of the Church of England towards them; the temperance question, including local option and Sunday closing; the reform of the cathedral system; the position and claims of curates and other unbeneficed clergy; Church patronage and preferment; the internal organisation of the Church; Church finance; penitentiary work of the Church; the duty of the Church as regards civil laws relating to marriage and divorce; and the moral dangers of factory and workshop life.

The Extra Supplement.

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.

The ancient Britons had their town of Caer Luel, in their principality of Cumbria or Strathclyde, before the Roman conquest. Lugubalia was the name which the Romans bestowed on this place. It was occupied by the Anglians of Northumbria, but in the latter Saxon reigns was utterly laid waste by piratical Norsemen. William the Norman and his successors restored the city; and a college of Augustinian monks, with a church of St. Mary, was founded here by Henry I. The Bishopric of Carlisle was established in 1133, but little remains of the Norman cathedral building, only the south transept, a part of the nave, and some piers of the central tower.

The general aspect of Carlisle Cathedral is pleasing, and, viewed from the churchyard of Stanwix, a suburb on the lower ground to the northward of the city, across the river Eden, it has considerable dignity, being situated on rising ground, with Carlisle Castle not far above it. The building is chiefly of dark red sandstone, which colour forms an agreeable combination with the surrounding verdure of trees and greensward; but there are tall factory chimneys and an obtrusive large railway station in close vicinity to the ecclesiastical precinct. The distant Cumberland "fells," or mountainous moors, afford a noble background to this view.

It is believed that the Early English choir, of the thirteenth century, was begun about 1218 by Bishop Hugh of Beaulieu, who had been Abbot of Beaulieu in Hampshire. Its present interior details of architecture, the original work having been destroyed by fire in 1292, are of the Decorated style, and are ascribed to Bishops Welton and Appleby, in the latter part of the fourteenth century. The east window is esteemed one of the most beautiful in the world, surpassing even the south window of the great transept in Lincoln Cathedral, and the west windows of York and Durham. Its tracery framework is of exquisite design, perfect in grace and symmetry; the stained-glass pictures, made in the reign of Richard II., in the upper lights of this window, represent the Resurrection, the Last Judgment, and the New Jerusalem. There is some modern stained glass in the lower part, supplied as a memorial to Bishop Percy in 1856.

The Bishops of Carlisle were never of great political importance, being overshadowed by the princely magnificence of the neighbouring Bishops of Durham. But several of them have been men of repute for learning and piety; and it has always been a highly respectable See.

THE ETON AND HARROW CRICKET-MATCH.

The annual contest between these two great public schools of England, in our national, highly organised, highly elaborate game of militant agility, strength, and skill, takes place on the last two days of the present week. It never fails to bring together a large assemblage of spectators belonging to the upper classes of society, always including a great many ladies, who feel a particular interest in the feats of their youthful kindred on the level greensward, or in the possible victory of one or the other school, to which fathers, brothers, or sons have conceived a loyal attachment.

The present year is the centenary of "Lord's Cricket Ground," that well-known inclosed space, six or seven acres in extent, on the north side of St. John's-wood-road, beyond Regent's Park, where the Eton and Harrow match is always played. It was in 1780 that Thomas Lord opened this ground to the public for a moderate admission fee, and here was established the Marylebone Cricket Club, which brought the game to perfection. There had been a cricket-ground before on the site of Dorset-square, west of Upper Baker-street; and there was one in White Conduit-fields, Islington. These were patronised by the Duke of Dorset, Lords Sandwich, Darnley, and Winchilsea, Sir Horace Mann, and other leaders of fashion. Cricket had long been esteemed a rather vulgar pastime, one in vogue among City men at the Artillery-ground in Finsbury. In the latter part of the eighteenth century it was taken up by men of rank; and Alderman Boydell had the best shop for bats and balls and wickets in Duke's-court, St. Martin's-lane. For these antiquarian notes we are indebted to Cassell's "Old and New London."

The Sketches at Lord's, on such an occasion as that of the present week, engraved to fill two of our pages, do not show anything of the actual cricket-play. That may be left to connoisseurs and to our attentive chronicler of "National Sports," who will no doubt have some report of it to give in our next publication. There is usually much social amusement to be got from watching the behaviour of the spectators, and of some people who are rather more occupied with their own personal by-play. In the central group of figures, bearing the title of "A Drawn Match," we see a young lady seated between two rival worshippers. Her abstracted gaze may be intent on the dangerous bowling of an antagonist to one in whom her heart feels the warmest interest, and who stands at this moment, bat in hand, covering his wicket in careful self-defence. She will listen to neither of the ardent swains who have seated themselves beside her; they know it but too well; yet neither of them likes to go away, and to leave the other there. It is likely enough, indeed, that similar incidents of untimely pursuit and unacceptable courtship may have taken place on other public occasions, for instance, at the Oxford and Cambridge Boat-Race.

There is one ingredient here, the possible direction of the flying cricket-ball, propelled by vigorous strokes of the bat, into the midst of the most sequestered party, that compels everybody now and then to be on the look-out. "Prepare!" is a note of warning to which the best practical response seems a prompt unfurling of parasols and umbrellas to shelter the affrighted crowd against that terrible random missile. When it comes flying low over the heads of a seated row of young gentlemen, all of them duly attired in their tall Etonian hats, there is an urgent interest in the question, "Whose hat will get it?" Undoubtedly, the blow of a swift cricket-ball on the head is capable of killing any person, and some cases have been recorded in which it has had a fatal result. But the ball can be seen coming, and may easily be avoided; so the risk is not so great, after all, except to the careless and inattentive bystander, and only in certain positions around the field.

The company at Lord's occupy several rows of open carriages, drags, cabs, and omnibusses, besides the pavilion, grand stand, and platforms set with benches, chairs placed on the ground, and a great deal of standing-room. Behind are tents and marquees, with store of "refreshments," pork pies, buns, and sandwiches, wine and other beverages, ices and fruit, perhaps more solid food, which seems to be needful after a long morning passed in the fresh open air. Those who came in the drags, or in other private carriages, may have provided themselves with a hamper, as they would for Ascot race-course. The dispensation and the reception and enjoyment of these comforting supplies must be an agreeable change after intently following the fortunes of the game. It is not everybody who will care so much for the success either of Eton or Harrow as the "Future, Present, and Past"—the public school-men of three successive generations, who are seen together in one of our Sketches eagerly watching the play at the standing wickets. The "Hero of the Hour," who has made the largest score of runs off his own bat, will have plenty of admiring and applauding friends. Merit at Lord's is sure to gain its reward in social favour. It is not always so in the more serious affairs of life.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

Sir James Hannen presided last week at the twentieth anniversary festival of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association, and said that nearly half the grants made from its funds had been devoted to the relief of non-members. Subscriptions were announced amounting to £460.

The twenty-ninth anniversary of St. Mary's Hospital was celebrated on Wednesday at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of Lord Huntly, Sir C. Rowley, Sir J. Anderson, the Hon. H. Noel, Dr. Broadbent, Major-General Lowry, C.B., and Dr. Farquharson, M.P. In proposing the toast of the evening, the chairman pointed out that St. Mary's Hospital is situated in a populous district of the West-End, and that it relieves annually about 2000 in-patients, besides a large number of casual accident cases. In conclusion, the chairman made an eloquent appeal on behalf of the hospital, which resulted in donations amounting to about £900.

The foundation-stone of the Middlesex Industrial School for Girls was laid last week by Mr. Edmund E. Antrobus, J.P. The site is within the parish of Bedfont, less than a mile from the Feltham Station on the South-Western Railway, and forms a portion of the Spelthorne Sanatorium grounds. A report to the subscribers showed that the committee had about £900 in hand, over £1000 being required for the building.

The annual festival in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan Free Hospital, in the Commercial-road, Spitalfields, was held last week at the Albion Tavern, and was attended by about one hundred gentlemen, the gathering being presided over by Mr. Alderman Cotton, M.P. Mr. Croxton, secretary, announced lists of subscriptions amounting to £2000, and including donations on the chairman's list of £145, and per Messrs. Defries £528.

The Earl of Lathom presided at the eighty-second anniversary festival of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, held on the 1st inst. at the Crystal Palace. Brother F. Bincks read the list of subscriptions, showing that in the whole the lodges throughout England had subscribed £14,002, of which London lodges had given £4700, and West Lancashire the next largest sum, £2664. In all about £40,000 had been subscribed in voluntary charity by the English craft this year for the three institutions connected with it.

The young blind from the National Institution of Paris gave a concert yesterday week at St. Mark's School, Windsor. There were about 500 persons present by special invitation of Mr. Richardson Gardner, the member for the borough, and Mrs. Richardson Gardner. The performance was similar in character to those already noticed.

The annual examination of and distribution of prizes to the pupils of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools at Russell-hill, Caterham-junction, near Croydon, took place last Saturday afternoon. This home for orphan and necessitous children of warehousemen and clerks was founded in 1853. It contains on an average about 150 boys and 70 girls, who are maintained and educated principally by means of public contributions. The examination on Saturday was of an exceedingly satisfactory character. The children seemed physically in a condition of robust and buoyant health, and they gave abundant evidence that their mental faculties were well exercised and developed. The examiner was Mr. Collins, of the British and Foreign School Society, who testified to the gratifying state of advancement of the inmates. The prizes were distributed by Mr. John Baggallay, M.P., one of the vice-presidents of the institution, who said a few words of commendation and encouragement to the successful scholars.

Lady Jenkinson gave a morning concert in aid of the funds of the Hospital for Incurables, Putney, at Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour-street, on Wednesday.

Mr. James Willing on Monday evening presided at the thirteenth annual festival of the City Waiters' Provident and Pension Society, celebrated at the Bridge House Hotel, London Bridge. There was a substantial subscription-list, the chairman giving twenty-five guineas.

The forty-second anniversary of the Tailors' Benevolent Institution was celebrated on Tuesday evening by a dinner at the Freemasons' Tavern. Over one hundred and fifty gentlemen were present. Mr. H. Cecil Raikes presided. In giving the toast of the evening the right hon. gentleman remarked upon the objects of the institution and the amount of good work it had been the means of accomplishing. Subscriptions were announced amounting to over £1000.

A roll of bank notes, value £500, was dropped into the offertory bag at St. Mary's Church, Chelmsford, on Sunday forenoon, for the benefit of the Chelmsford Infirmary.

Mr. Charles Holmes, secretary of the Metropolitan Convalescent Institution, writes to state that the committee of management have had placed at their disposal the sum of £6500 on condition that they at once add to their institution a seaside branch. This it is proposed to do at a cost of about £12,000, and the committee appeal for funds with which to support the branch establishment. Subscriptions will be received by the London Joint-Stock Bank, and by the secretary, at 32, Sackville-street.

The Newsvenders' Benevolent Institution has secured the Earl of Dunraven for a chairman for the festival which is to be held at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday, July 28.

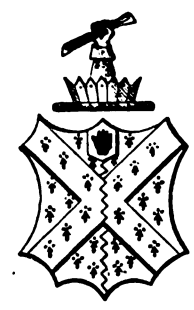
The Bibles presented at Lambeth Palace on Saturday by the Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Superintendents of all the Sunday Schools there assembled, were of a special edition printed for this occasion, and published by Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press Warehouse, Paternoster-row. They are designed to be kept in each of the schools as a permanent memorial of the Centenary of the Foundation of Sunday Schools in England, each copy presented by the Archbishop bearing an inscription to that effect. The volume, bound in Turkey morocco leather, with bevelled edges, and mounted with clasps, is light, compact, and elegant. The same edition has been published in a much smaller volume. It is the "Oxford Bible for Teachers," with marginal references, and with an appendix of nearly 300 pages, containing valuable notes, analytical, historical, and geographical, a dictionary of Scripture names, an essay on the natural history of the Bible lands, a concordance and index, and several maps.

OBITUARY.

VISCOUNTESS BANGOR.

Harriet Margaret, Viscountess Bangor, died at Castle Ward, near Downpatrick, on the 4th inst. Her Ladyship was born Feb. 16, 1805, the second daughter of Henry, sixth Lord Farnham, by Anne, his wife, eldest daughter of Henry Thomas, second Earl of Carrick, and was, consequently, sister of the present Lord Farnham, and of Henry, the late accomplished Lord Farnham, who was killed in the Abergele railway accident. She married, first, Feb. 14, 1826, Edward Southwell, third Viscount Bangor, who died Aug. 1, 1837; and secondly, Oct. 4, 1841, Major Andrew Nugent, of Strangford, third son of Colonel Nugent, of Portaferry, in the county of Down, and leaves issue by each husband. Her eldest son is the present Viscount Bangor.

LORD BELPER.



The Right Hon. Edward Strutt, first Lord Belper, of Belper, in the county of Derby, a Privy Councillor, LL.D., and Lord Lieutenant of Nottinghamshire, died on the 30th ult., at his town house, 75, Eaton-square. His Lordship was born in 1801, the only son of William Strutt, Esq., of St. Helen's House, Derby, by Barbara, his wife, daughter of Thomas Evans, Esq., also of Derby, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, obtaining the degrees of M.A. 1826 and LL.D. 1862. He sat in Parliament for Derby from 1830 to 1848, for Arundel 1851 to 1852, and for Nottingham 1852 to 1856. He held office as Chief Commissioner of Railways 1846 to 1848, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in Lord Aberdeen's Ministry 1852 to 1854; and was raised to the Peerage in 1856. His Lordship was Chairman of the Nottinghamshire Quarter Sessions from 1855 to 1873, and was appointed Lord Lieutenant of the county in 1864. He became President of University College, London, in 1871. Lord Belper married, March 28, 1837, Emily, youngest daughter of Dr. Otter, Bishop of Chichester, and had four sons and four daughters. His eldest son, William, died in 1856, in his eighteenth year, and the title devolves on his eldest surviving son, the Hon. Henry Strutt, M.P. for Berwick-on-Tweed (formerly for East Derbyshire), now second Lord Belper, who was born in 1840; married, 1874, Lady Margaret Coke, sixth daughter of the Earl of Leicester, and has one son and three daughters.

GENERAL LORD GEORGE A. F. PAGET.

General Lord George Augustus Frederick Paget, K.C.B., Colonel of the 4th Hussars, died on the 30th ult., at Farm-street, Mayfair. His Lordship was born March 16, 1818, the youngest son of Field Marshal Henry William, first Marquis of Anglesey, K.G., (twice Lord Lieutenant of Ireland), by his second wife, Lady Charlotte Cadogan, daughter of Charles, first Earl Cadogan. He entered the Army in 1834, was appointed Colonel of the 4th Hussars in 1874, and attained the rank of full General in 1877. Lord George served in the Crimean War, and commanded the 4th Light Dragoons at the Alma, at Balaclava in the celebrated "Charge of the Light Brigade," and at Inkerman and Tchernaya, besides various other affairs. He had the orders of the Legion of Honour and the Medjidie, the medal (with four clasps), and Sardinian and Turkish medals. His Lordship sat in Parliament for Beaumaris from 1847 to 1857 in the Liberal interest. He married, first, Feb. 27, 1854, Agnes, daughter of the late Sir Arthur Paget, G.C.B., and by her, who died March 10, 1858, leaves two sons; he married, secondly, Feb. 6, 1861, Louisa, youngest daughter of Charles Heneage, Esq.

SIR CLAUDE E. SCOTT, BART.

Sir Claude Edward Scott, fourth Baronet, of Lytchet Minster, Dorset, died in Paris on the 28th inst. He was born July 14, 1840, the elder son of Sir Claude Edward Scott, Bart., by Mary, his wife, youngest daughter of Theophilus Russell Buckworth, Esq., of Cockley Clay Hall, Norfolk, and succeeded his father in the baronetcy (conferred in 1821 on Claude Scott, an eminent banker of Westminster), July 27, 1874. He was formerly a Lieutenant in the 7th Dragoon Guards. Sir Claude married, 1861, Selina, daughter of the late Henry Charles Burney, Esq., LL.D., of Holywell, Hants, and granddaughter of Admiral Thomas Searle, C.B., and leaves two daughters. In default of male issue the baronetcy devolves on his next brother, now Sir Edward Henry Scott, fifth Baronet, J.P. and D.L., a partner in the banking firm of Sir Samuel Scott and Co. He married, 1865, Emilie, youngest daughter of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Packe, of Twyford Hall, Norfolk, and has two sons and two daughters.

MR. BRYAN OF JENKINSTOWN.

George Leopold Bryan, Esq., of Jenkinstown, in the county of Kilkenny, J.P., D.L., late M.P. for that county, died on the 29th ult. He was born Nov. 29, 1828, the only son of George Bryan, Esq., of Jenkinstown, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of William Talbot, Esq., of Castle Talbot, in the county of Wexford, and represented the Bryans of Bawnmore, a very old Kilkenny family. His grandfather, Major George Bryan, of Jenkinstown, claimed, unsuccessfully, the barony of Slane before the Lords' Committee for Privileges. Mr. Bryan served as High Sheriff of the county of Kilkenny in 1852, and represented that county in Parliament from 1865 till the recent dissolution. He did not seek re-election. He married, Dec. 6, 1840, Lady Elizabeth Georgiana Conyngham, daughter of Francis Nathaniel, Marquis Conyngham, K.P., and had an only child, Mary Margaret Frances, who died in 1872. Mr. Bryan's only sister, Augusta-Margaret-Gwendaline, now heiress of the family, married, in 1853, the present Lord Bellew, and has issue. Mr. Bryan was an enthusiastic sportsman, and his name was associated for many years with the English and Irish Turf. He was also an ardent lover of fox-hunting, and the Kilkenny Hunt had no more liberal patron.

MR. HENEAGE OF STAG'S-END.

Edward Heneage, Esq., of Stag's-End, Hemel Hempstead, D.L. for Lincoln, late M.P. for Grimsby, whose death is announced, was born July 24, 1802, the second son of George Robert Heneage, Esq., of Hainton Hall, Lincolnshire, by Frances Anne, his wife, second daughter of Lieutenant-General George Ainslie, Colonel 13th Regiment (and sister of Sir R. S. Ainslie, Bart.), and was uncle of Edward Heneage, Esq., now of Hainton, formerly M.P. for Lincoln. He was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A.; and sat in Parliament for Great Grimsby, as a Liberal, from 1835 to 1852. He married, first, April 11, 1840, Charlotte Frances, daughter of Colonel Rolleston, of Watnall, M.P.; and secondly, Aug. 25, 1853, Renée Elizabeth Levina, daughter of Captain Richard Hoare, R.N.; and leaves issue by both wives.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Commander Henry Hope Johnstone, R.N., at Clifton, in his eighty-third year.

Samuel Belcher Chapman, Esq., J.P., on the 26th ult., at Tower Lodge, Ipswich, in his eighty-first year.

Commander William Gwyn, R.N., J.P. for Norfolk, on the 28th ult., at Tasburgh Lodge, in that county, aged eighty-five.

Peter Marten, Esq., J.P. and D.L. for Kent, on the 29th ult., at Bridge-street, Canterbury.

John Robert Thomson, Esq., of Blackstones, Surrey, on the 27th ult., at 26, Sussex-square, aged ninety-two. He was one of the earliest British colonists in South Africa.

Major William Prime Jones, of Wellesley House, Lower Walmer, late 5th Fusiliers, on the 30th ult., at Russell Cottage, Upper Tulse-hill, aged seventy. He was eldest son of the late Captain Richard Jones, R.N., of Homewood, Tenterden, Kent.

Mr. Thomas Strode, of Richmond, Victoria, who may be regarded as one of the founders of that colony, on May 1. In 1838 he founded, and for some time afterwards carried on, the Port Phillip Gazette. Mr. Strode also established the Maitland Gazette and the Pastoral Times, the latter being still published at Deniliquin, New South Wales.

George Mackenzie, of Avoch, of the London Scottish Rifle Volunteers. He was the first officer gazetted to the corps, and for sixteen years in succession he was their commandant at Wimbledon camp. He was the youngest son of the late Sir Alexander Mackenzie, of Avoch, the discoverer of the Mackenzie river and explorer of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. William Henry Turner, of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, aged fifty-two,—a learned and most painstaking antiquarian investigator, was employed in the deciphering and editing of old MSS. for the Library, and for the Oxford Corporation. He compiled the well-known Calendar of Charters, and was engaged in the indexing of the Dodsworth MSS. He also edited the Harleian Society's work on "Oxfordshire."

Samuel Davis, a mariner, has been awarded the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society for saving a boy named Winch from drowning off the jetty extension, Margate.

Mr. Rothery's report on the causes which led to the fall of the Tay Bridge last December has been issued. It condemns the structure as "badly designed, badly constructed, and badly maintained;" and holds that Sir Thomas Bouch is mainly to blame for defects in construction and maintenance, and alone responsible for the faults of design. Messrs. Hopkins, Gilkes, and Co. are also reported to be blamable for having allowed such grave irregularities at the Wormit Foundry. Mr. Rothery's colleagues, Colonel Yolland and Mr. Barlow, agree with him in opinion as to the responsibility of Sir T. Bouch, but think it was not within the province of the Court to say so.

At the 126th annual general meeting of the Society of Arts, held last week, the Prince of Wales was re-elected president of the society, an office he has held since 1863. The report dealt with the action of the society during the past year. A large number of papers had been read at the ordinary meetings and at the meetings of the sections devoted respectively to matters connected with India, the colonies, chemistry, and physics. Three courses of lectures had been delivered under the endowment of Dr. Cantor, and a conference had been held on the progress of public health. The society has had at work a number of committees, the proceedings of which were set out in the report. The report concluded with a summary of the financial condition of the society, which was stated to be in a most satisfactory condition.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

L B (Padua).—The information you ask for shall be given when we can find sufficient space for it to interest more than one inquirer.

J R H (Halifax, N.S.).—There is no adverse Pawn in the diagram to capture the Kt when it is played to Kt 6th.

N M (Cork).—If found correct, it shall have a diagram.

W F (Manchester).—The attacking power of a piece upon the adverse King is not diminished by its being "pinned."

E F (Winchester).—The attack 1. Q to Kt 6th was dealt with in our note to No. 1895.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1896.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P to B 4th	K to B 4th
2. Kt to K 7th	K takes R
3. B mates

If Black play 1. K to K 5th, White continues with 2. Kt to B 6th, &c.

PROBLEM No. 1899.
By J. P. LEA, Bath.
BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

Played in the Lowenthal Tourney at the City of London Chess Club, between Messrs. MCDONNELL and MASON.
(Vienna Game.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. McD.)	WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. McD.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	24. Q takes Q	R takes Q
2. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	25 R takes P	R to B 4th (ch)
3. P to B 4th	P takes P	26. K to K 2nd	R takes R
4. P to Q 4th	Q to R 5th (ch)	27. K takes R	R takes P
5 K to K 2nd	P to Q 4th	28. K to K 2nd	R to K R 4th
6. Kt takes P	B to Kt 5th (ch)	The following moves, which are played with great care on both sides, form a very instructive end game.
7. Kt to B 3rd	Castles
8. B takes P	Kt to K B 3rd
9. B to Kt 3rd	Q to R 4th	29. P to K R 4th	K to Q 2nd
9. Q to R 3rd is the correct move. White cannot then play 10. Kt takes Kt because of the reply, 10. Kt takes Q P (ch); and if he continues with either 10. P to Q B 3rd or 10. P to Q B 4th, Black plays 10. Kt takes K P, and soon gets the better game.		30. K to B 3rd	R to B 4th (ch)
		31. K to Kt 2nd	R to Q 4th
		32. R to K 2nd	K to Q 3rd
10. Kt takes Kt		33. K to Kt 3rd	R to K 4th
The best continuation; for if Black now play 10. Kt takes Q P (ch), the obvious answer is 11. Q takes Kt.		34. R to Q 2nd (ch)	K to K 3rd
		35. K to B 4th	K to B 3rd
10.	P takes Kt	36. R to Q 4th	P to Q R 4th
11. P to Q 5th	B to Q B 4th	37. R to Q 2nd	R to Q B 4th
12. Q to Q 3rd	Kt to Q 5th (ch)	38. K to Kt 3rd	P to Kt 4th
13. K to K sq	Kt takes Kt (ch)	39. P to B 3rd	K to K 3rd
If 13.	B takes Kt	40. R to K 2nd (ch)	R to K 4th
14. P takes B	Kt takes P (ch)	41. R to Q 2nd	P to Q B 4th
15. K to Q sq	Kt to K 4th (dis.ch)	42. K to B 3rd	R to Q 4th
16. Q to K 2nd, and there is no special advantage on either side.		43. R to Kt 2nd	P to B 3rd
		44. K to B 4th	P to Kt 5th
14. P takes Kt	B takes P	45. R to K 2nd (ch)	K to Q 3rd
15. B to K 2nd	B takes B	46. P takes P	R P takes P
16. Q takes B	Q to Kt 3rd	47. P to Kt 3rd	R to Q 5th (ch)
17. Q to B 4th	B to Q 3rd	48. K to Kt 3rd	P to B 5th
18. B takes B	R takes B	49. P takes P	R takes P
19. K to B 2nd	R to K sq	50. R to Q 2nd (ch)	K to K 3rd
20. Q R to K sq	Q to Kt 4th	51. R to K 2nd (ch)	K to B 4th
21. K R to B sq		52. R to B 2nd (ch)	K to Kt 3rd
21. Q to Q 3rd, with the view of advancing the Q B P, appears to be the best course here; but White probably relied upon the exchange of Queens to bring about a drawn game.		53. K to R 3rd	R to B 6th (ch)
		54. K to Kt 2nd	P to B 4th
		55. R to Kt 2nd	R to B 5th
21.	R to K 4th	56. R to Kt 3rd
22. Q to Q 3rd	P to K B 4th	He might have defended the Pawn with the King, but Black should win eventually, we think.
23. Q to K Kt 3rd	P takes P
		56.	R takes P
		57. P to R 3rd	P takes P
		58. R takes P	R to Q B 5th, and White resigned.

Twenty-two competitors have entered the Meister Tourney at Wiesbaden, including Messrs. Blackburne, Mason, Schwartz, Englisch, Paulsen, Minckwitz, &c. The proceedings commenced on Saturday last, when, after some discussion, it was arranged that play should begin on the following day and continued thereafter, eight hours every day until the end of the tourney.

Mr. Judd, of St. Louis, has carried the victory against eight amateurs of that city, giving in each case the odds of a Knight. The following is the full score:—

	Won.	Lost.		Won.	Lost.
F. P. Merritt	2	0	C. E. Moody	½	1½
B. R Foster	2	0	R. Koerpen	0	2
Amateur	1	1	C. W. G. Watts	0	2
J. E. Nelson	1	1	M. Ahrensberg	0	2

Mr. Judd thus scored 9½ and the Amateurs 6½.

On Friday last a match was played between the clubs of Oxford and Witney, thirteen on each side. Oxford won by 15 games to 8.

The King of Sweden has presented a gold medal to George Oatley, serving in the Coastguard, for his gallant conduct at the wreck of a Swedish vessel near Peterhead, for which act her Majesty recently personally decorated him with the Albert Medal.

The Bishop of Ripon has accepted the post of president of a centre of the St. John Ambulance Association, shortly to be opened at Halifax. An inaugural public meeting, presided over by the Mayor, was held last week at Southampton, attended by Major F. Duncan, R.A., Surgeon-General T. Longmore, C.B., and Captain Perrott, as a deputation from the central executive committee. Great enthusiasm as to the objects of the association was displayed, and classes for instruction in "first aid to the injured" will be commenced forthwith. The Duke of Manchester and the committee of the Order of St. John have conferred their silver medal for deeds of gallantry in saving life on land on Captain G. F. Harris, 3rd Buffs, in recognition of the conspicuous courage shown by him some time since in rescuing five persons from a fire at No. 40, Charlemont-street, Dublin.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated April 2, 1878) of the Right Hon. John Somerset, Baron Hampton, P.C., G.C.B., late of Westwood Park, Worcestershire, and of No. 9, Eaton-square, who died on April 9 last, was proved on the 25th ult. by the Hon. Herbert Perrott Murray Pakington, the son, and Martin Curtler, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Lady Anne Augusta Hampton, his town residence, No. 9, Eaton-square, with the furniture, pictures, household effects (except plate and plated articles), and certain horses and carriages for her use for life, and then to his said son; and to his said son certain plate and effects which had belonged to his late mother. He confirms the family settlement of the Westwood estate, and he devises all his real estate, not included therein, upon the trusts of the said settlement; the furniture and effects at Westwood Park, including the deer in the park, the silver shield presented to him by the county and city of Worcester, and other presentation articles, are to go with and be enjoyed with the estate, of which his eldest son, John Slaney Pakington (now Lord Hampton) is the first tenant for life. The residue of the personalty is to be held upon trust to pay the income to his said eldest son for life, and the capital, at his death, to his children (if any); and in default of such children to the testator's second son, Herbert Perrott Murray.

The will and three codicils (all dated March 5, 1880) of Mr. Robert Cook, late of No. 3, Upper Wimpole-street, Portland-place, who died on April 6 last, were proved on the 22nd ult. by Major Robert Cook, Colonel Henry Cook, and Dr. John Cook, the sons, and Alfred Walkington, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £130,000. The testator devises the Milden Hall estate, Suffolk, to the use of his son, Robert Cook, for life, with remainder to his (testator's) sons John and James for their lives, with benefit of survivorship, and on the death of the survivor he settles the said estate on the two sons of his late son, William Frank Cook; and he leaves upon trust for the widow and two sons of his said late son William Frank £6000; to his daughter, Lady Caroline Rivers Wilson, £250 and an annuity of £50; to his daughter Mrs. Mary Ann Walkington, £250 and upon trust for her £4000 in addition to her marriage settlement; to his daughter Mrs. Janie Florence Darval, £250 and upon trust for her £5000; to his daughter Miss Emily Cook, £250 and upon trust for her £5000; to his four sons £9000 each and all his Turkish Government Bonds between them; to his wife, Mrs. Eliza Robertson Cook, £300 and an annuity of £100, he also leaves her for life his house in Hill-street, St. John's-wood, with the furniture and effects, and on her death for his daughter Victoria Alexandra; upon trust for his last-named daughter £2000; and his residence in Wimpole-street, with the furniture and effects, horses and carriages, to his sons Robert and John and his daughter Emily, as joint tenants. There are legacies and annuities to his sister and brother, and some other bequests; and the residue of his property he gives to his said son Robert.

The will (dated April 9, 1875) of Mr. Stephen Moulton, late of Bradford-on-Avon, Wilts, who died on April 26 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by Alexander Edward Moulton, Horatio Moulton, and John Moulton, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator leaves £2000 upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Catherine Denham; and to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Moulton, his residence, with the furniture, pictures, plate, household effects, horses and carriages for life. He directs the business of an india-rubber manufacturer, carried on by him as S. Moulton and Co., to be continued, and out of the profits £1000 per annum is to be paid to his son Alexander Edward, £750 per annum to his son Horatio, and £500 per annum to his son John. The remainder of the annual profits, together with the income of his residuary real and personal estate, is to be paid to his wife for life; and at her death the whole of such property is to be divided between his said three sons.

The will (dated Feb. 10, 1873) of Mr. Thomas Greenwood Clayton, late of Ousecliff, Clifton, Yorkshire, and of No. 28, Upper Grosvenor-street, who died on May 26 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by Mrs. Emily Mary Clayton, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being under £90,000. The the testator devises all his real estate of every description to the use of his wife, and he bequeaths to her all his personal estate for her own use absolutely.

The will (dated Dec. 27, 1879) of Mr. John Waddington, late of Langrish, near Petersfield, Southampton, who died on May 17 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by the Rev. Arthur Henry Delmé Radcliffe, the nephew, and Arthur Proctor Pickering, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator leaves the Langrish estate and all other his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates in the county of Hants, upon trusts for sale, the net proceeds to be held upon trust for his niece, Mrs. Constance Louisa Talbot Ponsonby, for life, and then for her children or issue, as she shall appoint; all his jewellery, pictures, furniture, household effects (except plate and plated articles), horses, carriages, and farming stock at Langrish to his said niece; and other bequests including £200 to each of his executors, and annuities to his bailiff, butler, cook, and other servants. As to the residue of his property, real and personal, he gives one third to his nephew, the said Rev. A. H. D. Radcliffe; one third upon trust for his niece, Mrs. Melicent Rogers; and one third upon trust for his niece, Mrs. Alice Hirst.

The will (dated May 23, 1878) of Miss Lucy Clarke, late of No. 52, Upper Bedford-place, Russell-square, and of No. 28, York-street, Portman-square, who died on May 9 last, was proved on the 11th ult. by Frederick George Berkeley, the nephew, and Frederick Mowbray Berkeley Calcott, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. After giving one or two legacies, the testatrix leaves all her Consols and Reduced Three per Cent Stock between her seven nephews and nieces; and her freehold, copyhold, and leasehold property to be sold, and the proceeds, with the residue of the personalty, between her five nephews.

The will (dated Feb. 2, 1874) with a codicil (dated Nov. 13, 1875) of the Hon. Mrs. Elizabeth Emmline Arundell, formerly of Saint Hill Place, East Grinstead, Sussex, but late of Ford-place, Stifford, Essex, who died on the 1st ult., was proved on the 11th ult. by James Kennedy Esdaile, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testatrix bequeaths a few legacies, and the residue of her property to her cousin, Mr. Esdaile.

The will (dated May 3, 1877) with two codicils (dated July 1, 1878, and Nov. 7, 1879) of Mrs. Annie Peploe, late of No. 25, Onslow-gardens, South Kensington, who died on Jan. 13 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by Daniel Peploe Peploe, the son, and Thomas Myers Croome, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000.

An additional codicil has just been proved to the will, with five codicils, of Mr. Charles Montague Chester, of which probate was granted on Jan. 20 last, and duly reported in this paper. By the additional codicil the testator bequeaths £100 to the Samaritan Free Hospital.

EAU DE SUEZ.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore a cure for this evil, not only immediate but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which, although so perfectly innocuous that it may taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris "Figaro" and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath, will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M Suez recommends his Orange Tooth-Paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of Tooth-Brush made from the finest badger-hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by this great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336, Oxford-street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s.; Yellow Thread, 2s. 9d.; Red Thread, 2s.; Orange Paste, 4s. 6d.; Tooth Brush, 1s. 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage-free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name Suez stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of Wilcox and Co. on the labels.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark, "Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT
is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."
"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 219 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly, "GEORGE BOYD."

THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.
"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 29, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.:—Gentlemen:—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Snedeker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 219 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."

Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1880.

Time is on the wing, as our legislators in both Houses of Parliament are forcibly reminded by the slow progress of public business. When will the Holidays commence? Will the Prorogation be likely to take place before Aug. 12? Will it be deferred beyond the end of that month, and so trespass upon September? We will not venture a prediction, but we see no great likelihood that another month will suffice for the completion of the business now before Parliament, and Mr. Gladstone seems to intimate his expectation that the Houses may rise before Sept. 1 overtakes them. There is no very distinct prospect this year of what has been usually described as the "Massacre of Innocents." To be sure, the Ballot Act is to be continued for another year without amendment, and the Borough Franchise Bill for Ireland is to be given up for the present Session. But the main measures submitted by her Majesty's Government to the Legislature are to be pushed on to a definite conclusion. The Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill, now in Committee, the Employers' Liability Bill, and the Customs and Inland Revenue Bill will follow each other in regular sequence, to be dealt with by the Lords as their discretion may prescribe. The Hares and Rabbits Bill, if it be not previously rejected by the voice of the House of Commons, will do likewise. The Burials Bill, which has come down from their Lordships' house, will probably go back to them with Amendments which, availing themselves of the lateness of the Session, they may think fit to withstand; and the Census Bill, introduced to the Upper House, by Lord Enfield, on Monday night, seeing that all debatable matters have been wisely excluded from it, will probably run through both Houses with little or no opposition. Meanwhile, Mr. Gladstone has asked the House of Commons, and has obtained his request, to give priority to Government business on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, leaving only Friday night, after a morning sitting, for the appropriation of private members. We may expect, therefore, some considerable acceleration of the rate at which Public Measures will advance. Obstructive proceedings are still possible; but, as they are not likely to answer the indirect purpose for which alone they would be resorted to, they will probably not be attempted, or, if so, attempted on a very small scale.

It is clear, we think, from even a cursory review of the Parliamentary Session, which may be said to have commenced on May 20, that the present System of transacting public affairs in the Imperial Legislature cannot continue much longer in force. It is quite inadequate to the discharge of the multiform responsibilities which the immense and rapid growth of public business imposes upon it. No industry (at least in the House of Commons) can fully meet the demands which the exigencies of the times advance. The machine is overworked. Every year more is required of it than it can successfully perform. Its capacity has been stretched to the utmost; while it has never, of late years, been commensurate with the necessities with which it has to grapple. It will be obliged before long to delegate to others the management of details to which it can itself give no fair amount of attention. There need be no diminution of the unity of legislation, for Parliament will, of course, reserve to itself the duty, as well as the right, of determining all principles affecting the welfare of the Nation, as such. But much of what it is now called upon to do is, if not of parochial, certainly of local, interest only. A wider distribution of legislative authority might ensure a fuller attention than can now be given, whether to National or to strictly Municipal affairs. To point out what are the limits which should separate the one from the other is the proper business of first-class statesmen. Surely it is not beyond the reach of human ingenuity. It need unsettle nothing that is fundamental in the organisation of the body politic. It would seem to be indispensable to a careful and thorough discharge of the trust inseparable from the conduct of public affairs in this country. Want of time for doing what the Nation requires to be done, means simply want of due organisation. There are forces enough, if they be but rightly applied. There is patriotism enough, if only it be aptly appealed to. Love of order, of liberty, of justice, exists in ample strength among our people to give regular and successful motion to any arrangement of mechanism best suited to develop their power in the government of men; and it is not to the credit of modern Statesmanship that so much of what is undeniably desirable has to be left undone, or most imperfectly done, simply because means and ends have not been brought together.

We do not contend for a moment that the practical in political and social action should be held subordinate to theoretical symmetry. Some results are best obtained by what is vulgarly called "the rule of thumb." What is to be deplored and, if possible, rectified is, that the results sought for as the turn-out of our legislative machine so unfrequently make their appearance, that so much time and labour run to waste, that there is a maximum of harassing effort, with a minimum of useful effect. And this is not to be altered by mere palliative arrangements. We speak not of the present Session, which has been too brief and necessarily too hurried for the proper completion of far-reaching measures. The evil which calls for remedial treatment is one that makes itself visible every Session, and more portentously visible every year. Population increases in numbers, in intelligence, in the consciousness of moral responsibility, and, as it does so, public and social wants necessarily multiply, and the will of the community seeks more varied expression. What sufficed for that purpose a century, or even half a century, ago is now found to be wholly inadequate. About this fact there is really no difference of opinion. It is unfair to Representative Government to overtask its powers by refusing, or neglecting, to distribute its burdens. If it break down beneath the weight laid upon it, it will do so not because of its inherent weakness, but simply because of the unreasonable manner in which its capabilities are tested. The pretension of doing everything generally ends in doing nothing well. "Method" is said to be "the soul of business," and where the method adhered to is unsuitable for the work to be done, it is no matter for surprise that it should be done badly.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I should properly be by this time in Paris, "doing" the Grand National Fête of the Republic, racing from pillar to post, and describing patriotic signs and wonders until my eyes were dazed and my fingers ached. I have done that kind of thing many a time and oft. Let others have their turn, now. Let the younger generation go to the fair and see the show, and bring Molly back a bunch of blue ribbon to tie up her bonny brown hair withal. It is pleasanter to sit at home among the old books and newspapers, and read letters from all kinds of people all over the world, and strive to weave a few readable paragraphs for the "Echoes" out of an amazing amount of wool lying loose, and requiring to be carded and hackled and spun, than to scamper over the burning asphalte of the Paris Boulevards and strain one's every faculty to its utmost capacity of tension in the attempt to limn the transient phases of a kaleidoscope, to describe the onward casting, the heading, and the rearward draught of waves, or accurately to depict the shadow of the shadow of smoke. For of such, I take it, is a popular festival in Paris. Fittingly to paint it is beyond the powers of prose. The very finest description of an al fresco merrymaking that I ever read is that which forms the prologue to the "Princess," and begins:—

> Sir Walter Vivian, all a summer's day
> Gave his broad lawns until the set of sun
> Up to the people: thither flock'd at noon
> His tenants, wife and child; and thither half
> The neighbouring borough, with the Institute
> Of which he was the patron.

For the rest, if so much mere literary cookery be required, I think that I might be able to name the ingredients and particularise the recipe for a Grand Paris Fête, an account of which might be "dished up" without the cook being at the pains of going to Paris. First get your money from your Government and your Municipality. Then send round circulars to your patriotic inhabitants, inviting them to hang out flags by day and to illuminate by night. Have plenty of flags of your own. Take your Place de la Concorde, your Champs Elysées, your Place de la Bastille, and your Place du Château d'Eau, and plant thickly with flags. Season with Venetian masts, arches of triumph, and emblazoned escutcheons to your liking. Now have ready your open-air theatres, your gratuitous performances at the Opera, your gingerbread-stalls, your greasy poles, your swings and merry-go-rounds, your rifle-galleries, and your marchands de coco. Add "all the fun of the fair." Throw in about a million of sightseers. Garnish with plenty of brass bands playing La Marseillaise and cries of Vive la République! Finish up with fireworks, et servez, chaud.

Mem.: The first Grand National Fêtes in Paris at which I had the honour to assist were the Three Glorious Days of July (27th, 28th, and 29th), 1840. I was then a boy at school. Since then I have seen the Fêtes of the Republic of February, '48. Then there were the 15th of August Fêtes of the Second Empire, one of which holidays I witnessed in the International Exhibition year '67. It was once more a Republican festival that I beheld in the Universal Exposition year '78. I remember in '40 that good old Madame Dizi, the widow of the famous harpist of that name, who lived in a pretty pavillon in the Parc Monceaux, telling me that her husband recollected very well not only the Bourbon Fêtes of St. Louis, under the Restoration, and the Bonapartist ones during the First Empire, but also Robespierre's Festival of the Supreme Being. These outings are all so many very edifying lessons in French history.

The Paris Figaro and Gaulois, which are by turns slightly Bonapartist and slightly Republican, but which never fail to be bitterly anti-Republican, have been for some days past talking about the forthcoming rejoicings only with "flouts, gibes, jeers, and scoffs." In one of these reactionary journals I noted a paragraph, the illnaturedness of which was certainly atoned for by its wit. With mock gravity, it was stated that a certain Citizen X had petitioned the Government to be amnestied for an act of bankruptcy which he involuntarily committed in May, 1871, when the Communards burned his house down and ruined his business.

M. Henri Rochefort, after an exile of nine years and innumerable viscissitudes by sea and land, has returned to Paris, a wholly free and amnestied man. The French and English papers, since the beginning of the week, have been full of accounts of the Irreconcilable's sayings and doings, but on both sides the Channel the press are "unanimous in disagreeing"—pardon the paradox—as regards the present personal appearance of the sardonic founder of the Lanterne, and as to the circumstances of his reception at the railway station in Paris. According to one journal, the hair of the terrible pamphleteer has turned as white as the snows of Mont Blanc, and his countenance is as cadaverous, and his frame as attenuated as ever; while, if we are to believe another journalistic authority, the ex-Deputy and ex-life prisoner has grown stout and rosy, and his hair is only just getting a little grey about the temples. The same conflict of assertions prevails as to the number of enthusiastic Republicans by whom he was received at the terminus. The statistics given seem to range between five hundred and fifty thousand.

Mem.: There is nothing unusual, although there is something very curious, in this absolute disagreement between reports furnished by ostensibly honest eye-witnesses. I have somewhere read an old story that during Sir Walter Raleigh's confinement in the Tower he was one day the spectator from his prison window, of a scuffle which was taking place on the ramparts of the Brass Mount between one of the warders and a disorderly civilian from outside. Sir Walter chanced to be invited that day to dine with the Lieutenant of the Tower; and in the course of dinner he described the incidents of the encounter which he had beheld. "But," quoth Master Lieutenant, "I did see the fight with mine own eyes from the window of my lodgings;" and he proceeded to give a narrative of the affair, differing toto cælo from that of his illustrious captive.

I have been reading a very strange novel by M. Rochefort, published this very week. It is called "L'Evadé," and is founded on the writer's experiences of penal deportation to New Caledonia. Noumea, by M. Rochefort's showing, must be a very horrible place. The book is throughout of enthralling interest; and it possesses, besides, some philological value in comprising (in a very dramatic description of a court-martial) one of the most astounding outbursts of argot that I ever read. The speaker is a schoolmistress, who has suddenly been unmasked as an old offender, long ago convicted of coining. Standing at bay, "like a black panther," and hurling looks of defiance at the tribunal, she says, or rather screams—

Eh bien, oui, c'est moi. Après? Elle est si belle, votre monnaie. D'ailleurs j'avais assez battu l'antife sans plâtre dans ma clochette. J'avais fait la balle élastique tout mon soûl. En sortant du plan j'ai bavdrouillé par ici pour endroguer. Je voulais être une darbuche pour mes gosselines. Ce n'est pas du battage. Sans les casseroles je ne serais pas devant la planche au pain. . . . Maintenant que je suis une biribasse je n'ai plus que démurger dans mon patelin. Hein! Ca vous épate que j'entrave, mes bons lustres; mais maintenant que je suis enflanquée, je vous le gazouille: vous êtes tous des tas de ferlampiers! Oui, des ferlampiers!

Surely this beats Lord Lytton in the celebrated slang chapters in "Pelham" and "Paul Clifford," to say nothing of Mr. Harrison Ainsworth in "Rookwood." Were not M. Rochefort's "L'Evadé" to be procurable at every French bookseller's, the scholastic oration quoted above might be propounded as a "French Puzzle." And yet, perchance, it is not more puzzling than some of the questions put to English schoolgirls in the Universities local examinations papers. A correspondent has sent me an assortment of these schedules of torture; but I lack space to go into the subject (a very important one) this week.

O, my book! my book! murmured Henry Thomas Buckle, dying at Damascus. He was thinking, regretfully, of his unprinted History of Civilisation. But poor Mr. Buckle died, and was quit of his pain; whereas Professor Theodor Mommsen, the distinguished historian of ancient Rome, lives to bewail with infinite sorrow the loss of a splendid library of forty thousand volumes, including many rare and valuable works, and, in addition, a number of precious documents lent to him for study and reference by the curators of foreign libraries. The treasures have all perished in the fire which consumed the Professor's house at Berlin. The historian, I read, could with difficulty be restrained by the police from rushing into the flames in the vain attempt to rescue some of his beloved books. Poor gentleman! Every scholar and bibliophil in the civilised world will sympathise with him; and I should like to see a movement started among old book collectors to replenish the charred shelves of the Professor's library. Surely some of its incinerated contents are susceptible of being replaced.

Adulterated squibs and crackers, if not entirely novel examples of fraudulent production, have scarcely as yet, perhaps, taken a firm hold on the swindling market. This kind of sophistication would appear, however, to be looking up, to judge from an advertisement in the San Francisco News-Letter headed, "Don't be Deceived into Buying Defective Fireworks." This portentous announcement proceeds to recite that the cheap Eastern-made fireworks brought into the Californian market, "which outwardly appear to be good, are, for the most part, filled with clay—which can be easily proved by cutting them open lengthwise—and ought to be sold for about the cost of clay and paper." It is almost needless to say that this caveat against "Eastern-made fireworks" winds up—or it might be more appropriately said "goes off"—with a puff of a firm who manufacture "Californian fireworks," recognised as "the best in the United States." It is refreshing, in any case, to find that the Eastern States have lost nothing of their old energy in fabricating articles which "are not as they seem." It was feared for a time that the unjust competition of Chinese cheap labour had interfered with the time-honoured New England manufactures of wooden nutmegs, painted hams, clocks that decline to "figure," and other ingenious and innocent "notions."

But energy is not confined to New England. It permeates the whole gigantic frame of the United States, from top to toe, from head to heel, from zenith to nadir, from Dan to Beersheba, from the torrid tracts of the Dry Tortugas to the howling snowdrifts (howling snowdrifts "is" good) of Alaska, and from the verdant slopes of the Pacific to the frowning casemates of Fort Tompkins. Ask of Nature what Columbia is, and Echo answers "Energy" (Orator Pop's Thirty-Second Fourth of July Oration). The San Francisco News-Letter is, for example, a most energetic journal. Thus racily does it begin a leading article on the Mayor of San Francisco, who happens also to be a clergyman:—"That Halloch is a bold bad man, a wolf in sheep's clothing, a fellow who has managed to steal the livery of righteousness to serve sin in, and a thorough ruffian, must be the opinion of every candid person who read the Neilson pamphlet; but, bad as he is, we doubt whether he is worse than his Metropolitan Temple admirers." It is in the Metropolitan Temple that the Rev. Mayor Kalloch preaches. Politics seem to run cheerfully high in the Golden City; and as for the members of my own profession editing newspapers at El Dorado, they remind me of Macaulay's

> . . . Priest who slew the slayer,
> And shall himself he slain.

A complicated interchange of pistol bullets forms an integral part of the "circulation" of a 'Friscan paper. Sometimes it is "a subscriber from the first" who shoots at the editor; on another occasion the editor lets a "constant reader" have the contents of a six-shooter; the constant reader's son makes play with a Derringer on the business manager of the paper, and finally perhaps the uncle of the proprietor feels called upon to kill the dramatic critic "at sight." But then, as one of the earliest pioneers among Californian tourists has touchingly remarked, "the climate is eminently favourable to the cure of gunshot wounds."

I have just read a singularly exhaustive and lucidly arranged "Bibliography of Dickens"—being a list, in chronological order, of the published writings in prose and verse of the great novelist. The editor of the volume before me is Mr. Richard Herne Shepherd, the author of the "Bibliography of Ruskin." I looked (for reasons personal to myself) very curiously to see if Mr. R. H. Shepherd had taken any note of the very scarce "Pic Nic Papers," a collection of tales and essays by various hands which Charles Dickens edited, and to which he contributed the "Lamplighter's Story." Sure enough, I found the "Pic Nic Papers" duly catalogued at page eighteen of the "Bibliography." They form, if I remember aright, three volumes which were published by Colburn for the benefit of the widow and young family of John Macrone, a Manxman, who set up as a bookseller in St. James's-square, and was the original publisher of the collected "Sketches by Boz." He borrowed five hundred pounds from a relative of mine to start in business withal; and he never paid her; and that is why I was curious about the Pic Nic Papers. I saw the parchment bond which he gave my relative at a solicitor's office many years ago; and thought that it would be just the thing to cut into tailors' measures or to mix snuff upon.

Mem.: So minute have been Mr. Shepherd's researches that they include a tiny scrap of an epistle written by Dickens in sheer good nature to poor Ada Isaacs Menken, and which is reproduced in photographic facsimile in the Menken's volume of poems (published by J. C. Hotten, I think) entitled "Infelicia," which she dedicated to Dickens. I wonder what has become of all the letters he wrote to me. They must be scattered as widely as Mrs. Hemans's "Graves of a Household." I know that I have but a single one, a brief business communication, remaining. I hope that Edmund Yates has been more careful in holding fast to his Dickens letters. I do not see his name in the catalogue of correspondents.

An elocutionist of bright talent and still brighter promise, Mr. Clifford Harrison, a son of the late celebrated English tenor, is rapidly making his way in London society. He has recently displayed his remarkable acquirements at the receptions of that accomplished judge in all matters pertaining to art, and that stanch patroness of merit, the Viscountess Combermere, and at other great London houses. The other day I heard Mr. Clifford Harrison recite with great grace, energy, and pathos Miss Adelaide Proctor's "Legend of Bregenz" and Jean Ingelow's "High Tide." Mr. Harrison is an accomplished musician as well as an elocutionist; and the fine effect of the two recitations I have just named were charmingly enhanced by a softly murmuring and accentuating accompaniment on the pianoforte by the speaker himself. An intelligent revival of a very ancient custom. Do we not read that Terence's "Andrian" was first performed at the Megalesian Games at Rome, M. Marcellus and C. Sulpicius being Consuls; and that the music which accompanied the dialogue was composed by Flaccus, the freedman of Claudius, "for equal flutes, right and left handed."

Mem.: The learned Mr. Cooke, in his edition of Terence (Lond., 1749), observes:—"Many are firmly possessed of an Opinion that the Words were all set to Musick in a sort of Chanting; and Quintilian often strongly alludes to such an Unnatural Custom." Be it natural or the contrary, the custom has, from times far too remote for our ken, spread all over the world. Three months ago, at the Chinese Theatre at San Francisco, I heard part of a comedy (it was the ninety-seventh scene of the hundred and twelfth act, I think, and had been going on since Christmas, 1879) recited in a shrill, swinging monotone to a "murmuring and accentuated" instrumental accompaniment. Only the instruments used seemed to consist rather of tin pots and pans, pokers and tongs, marrowbones and cleavers, than of "equal flutes, right and left handed," or Mr. Clifford Harrison's pianoforte.

The Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Fund held their Jubilee Festival at the Freemasons' on Friday evening, the 9th inst. Lord Houghton was in the chair, and made an admirable speech on the antiquities and the technics of bookbinding. Seldom have I heard the noble and lettered chairman speak so eloquently; and, of course, his Lordship's speech was not reported in the morning papers on the 10th. Is not Parliament sitting? He who speaks in public and out of Parliament during the Session wastes his sweetness on the desert air. Sir Frederick Pollock also delivered a capital address, so did the President of the Royal Society, Mr. Spottiswoode, so did General MacMurdo, and M. Gennadius, and the Rev. Dr. Manning. The talk was mainly about Grolier and Roger Payne, Hayday and Zaehnsdorf, and other famous bookbinders, past and present; but a thoroughly enjoyable evening brought about deeds as well as words, and the Fund benefited by the bookbinding gossip to the amount of over five hundred pounds in subscriptions and donations.

And poor Tom Taylor is dead! He was but sixty-three, and usually he looked so hale and "fit" that a long lease of health and strength might have been hoped for in his case. A rumour ran through town two or three weeks since that Tom Taylor was very ill, and that his malady was suppressed gout; but only a few days ago he wrote, himself, to the Times to reassure his friends, and to rejoice their hearts by the statement that he was mending; that he hoped soon to be at work again; and that he felt as though there were yet some years of work in him.

It was not to be. He died at his house at Lavender Sweep, Clapham Common—a house graphically described in one of the "Celebrities at Home" papers in the World—on Monday last. While that which is mortal of one whom I knew and respected for more than thirty years lies yet unburied, I refrain from further comment on the excellent writer and good man whose passing away is so bitterly lamented. Next week I hope to say something concerning his capacity and his career.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, July 13.

C'est beau la rue! said Diderot; the streets are a fine sight! No one would dispute this statement as regards the streets of Paris, especially at the present moment, when they are all ablaze with flags and banners and Venetian lanterns. In the old days the windows that were darkened, and as it were in mourning, were those of the Republicans. Now, the reverse is the case; the darkened windows are those of the malcontents, whether they be Royalists, Imperialists, or Socialists. The latter party regard the fête of to-morrow as the fête of the bourgeoisie, or capitalists, who turned the revolution of 1789 to the advantage of their own class alone. The Socialists intend, therefore, to protest by printing their journals in red ink and hoisting the red flag of the Commune. But although the petite guerre of politics still continues, and probably will continue in France until the end of time, the whole country, particularly the capital, is preparing to celebrate to-morrow, with unprecedented splendour and unanimity, the anniversary of two great events, the fall of the Bastille on July 14, 1789, and the Fête of the Federations which took place at the Champ de Mars on July 14, 1790. This is the first time in this century that France will celebrate the immortal anniversary of the conquest of her liberty; and this evening the Fête des Fédérations, which has been so magnificently described by Carlyle and Michelet, will be repeated on a small scale at the Palace of the Tribunal of Commerce in a fête to which the Municipal Council of Paris has invited delegates from all the municipal and general councils of France.

Unfortunately, I am obliged to write this letter before the great day of the 14th has dawned; but, although that will be the day of the official fête, the popular fête really began on Monday, and will last until next Saturday. Paris has, in fact, become a vast fair. In almost every district the Mayors, with the co-operation of the inhabitants, have organised popular rejoicings. The houses are decorated with flags and lanterns and festoons of coloured glasses; the streets are spanned by triumphal arches adorned with flags and verdure and patriotic devices, Honneur et Patrie on one side, and Paix et Travail on the other. On all the open spaces and cross-roads temporary orchestras have been placed, and showmen and mountebanks have set up their booths and peep-shows and roundabouts. Along the exterior boulevards the fair stretches for miles, and at night the inspiriting strains of the "Marseillaise" played by the band of the quarter mingle inharmoniously with the "Cloches de Corneville" ground out of a hurdy-gurdy by an enterprising lion-tamer across the way. Yesterday and this evening there was a general rehearsal of the illuminations, and the boulevards were almost as crowded as they will be to-morrow. I will not attempt to describe the fête before it has taken place, but I may say at once that the illuminations and decorations and the general programme of rejoicings already surpass those of the fête of June, 1878. The official programme comprises the distribution of the new colours to the regiments at Longchamps, the unveiling of the model of a monster statue of the Republic at the Château d'Eau, a reproduction of the outlines of the Bastille prison on the place of that name, illuminations of all the public buildings and of the boulevards and avenues, and six monster pyrotechnic displays. Paris has always been noted for its fêtes, and there can be no doubt that the fête of July 14, 1880, will remain as celebrated in the memory of men as the famous Fête des Portiques in Louis Philippe's time, the Venetian Fête of the Republic of 1848, or the Fête des Lanternes under the Second Empire. The novelty of the present fête is that it has been left largely to the private initiative of the citizens, and each district is vieing with its neighbours to excel in patriotic enthusiasm.

A fête is often as interesting in its minor details as in its ensemble. To-morrow, for instance, there will be more than 2000 balls in the different quarters of Paris. In the course of a walk through one of the popular faubourgs this morning I counted more than fifty different kinds of "national flowers" made of all kinds of materials, linen, silk, paper, leather, tin, &c., and all unknown to botanists. I bought twelve different medals struck off in commemoration of the fête, and a pocketful of scarf-pins and brooches in the form of flags, Phrygian caps, figures of the Republic, &c. In the Faubourg St. Antoine I purchased a blood-red liberty cap for fifteen sous; and in the shops I found everything flaming with the blue, white, and red—even tricolor corsets and national braces. Some of the tricolor costumes for ladies are very pretty. There is no city in the world, perhaps, where a popular fête brings into activity so much ingenuity and imagination as it does at Paris. The inventiveness of the Parisian camelots or street hawkers is marvellous, or, as our American cousins would say, "paralysing;" and the foreigner's admiration is always heightened when he thinks that, in addition to all their other qualities, they know their irregular verbs and never make a mistake in the gender of French substantives.

In order to give an idea of the illuminations, it has been calculated that the official illuminations alone will require 25,720 white globes for gas, 237,600 coloured glasses for festoons, 25 Venetian lanterns, and 700 Bengal fires. Multiply these figures by a hundred, and you will have, perhaps, an approximate estimate of the material required for the illumination of the whole city.

The Amnesty question has been at last settled in such a manner as to satisfy the scruples of the Senate without affecting the interests of the exiled Communists. The whole responsibility, in the eyes of the Senate, falls now upon the Government. The law as voted by the Senate, and as accepted on Saturday by the Chamber, runs as follows:—"All the individuals condemned for having taken part in the insurrectional events of 1870 and 1871, and in the posterior insurrectional movements, who have been or shall have been, before July 14, 1880, the object of a decree of pardon, with the exception of individuals condemned by judgment to the penalty of death or to penal servitude for life for the crime of arson or assassination, shall be considered as amnestied. This exception shall not be applicable to the above-mentioned condemned persons who shall have been up to the date of July 9 the object of a commutation of their sentence, &c." This law seems absurd and Byzantine, and so it is, for on Monday morning the Journal Officiel contained two decrees, dated July 6 and July 10, rendering the amnesty practically plenary, and granting pardons and commutations of sentence to all the Communists who are still in exile or in New Caledonia. The number excluded from the amnesty is, it is announced, seventeen, and it is hoped to reduce the number to nine. These seventeen have all been pardoned, and none of them are political personages. Let us, therefore, hope that the amnesty question is at last laid to rest.

Several of the notable exiles have already returned to Paris. Félix Pyat now signs his articles in full in the Mot d'Ordre. Jules Vallès and Paschal Grousset may be seen on the Boulevards. Rochefort and his family arrived yesterday afternoon, and were escorted from the station by a crowd of 50,000 persons, singing the "Marseillaise" and crying "Vive Rochefort!" "Vive la République!" The popular hero finally had to take refuge in a draper's shop to escape from the enthusiasm of his escort. Since the burial of Victor Noir no such instance of popular enthusiasm has been seen in Paris. The first number of Rochefort's new journal, l'Intransigéant, will appear to-morrow.

"Garin," a drama in five acts, and in verse, by Paul Delais, was produced at the Théâtre Français on Thursday last. The piece is at best an honourable failure. It is an undigested patchwork drama, made up out of "Hamlet," "Macbeth," Racine's "Andromaque," Victor Hugo's "Burgraves," and Dumas's "Charles VII. chez ses grands Vassaux." The scene is laid in the thirteenth century. In 1830 the piece might, perhaps, have passed muster, but now we wonder how a man of average intelligence could have entertained the idea of such a drama for years, and still more how the Comédie Française could have consented to mount it. The verses are very inferior, and the acting unworthy of the great reputation of the Maison Molière.

M. Isaac Pereire, the celebrated financier and an old disciple of Saint-Simon, died on Monday, at the age of seventy-four. M. Pereire, who was a practical philanthropist, remained faithful to the Saint-Simonian doctrines to the end of his life, and brought up all his family in perfect indifference on religious matters.

Meissonier, the painter, has been promoted grand officer of the Legion of Honour.

Dr. Broca, a senator and a celebrated anthropologist, died suddenly last week, at the age of fifty-six. As a surgeon and an experimenter, Dr. Broca had great fame. His researches were devoted more particularly to tumours, aneurisms, and the curious affection known as aphasia.

The books of the week are "Les Petites Cardinal," by Ludovic Halévy, a continuation of the history of "Madame et Monsieur Cardinal," which is familiar to all who appreciate pure Parisian esprit, and "Le Carnet d'un Ténor," in which the late famous Gustave Roger has recorded his impressions of his artistic career.

The Parliamentary Session will close the day after the national fête, on July 15, and the vacations will last until the end of October.

ALBANIAN SKETCHES.

A BORDER RAID.

The hereditary antagonism of the highlanders of Albania and Montenegro has descended through centuries of raids and forays and the bitter memories of the fluctuating Border wars which have carried each of these hostile races in turn far into the other's country. In early times, when Montenegro was named Zetna, and was governed by a Prince dependent on a Servian monarch, it formed part of the ancient Illyricum, and belonged to the Labeates, of which Skodra, or Scutari, was the capital. On the death of Skander-beg, in 1467, the Turks having overrun Albania and occupied Scutari, the then Prince of Zetna, Ivan Tzernoievich, finding himself threatened in the town of Zsabliak, to which he had retreated, applied to Venice for assistance. Failing in his appeal, he was thrown upon his own resources, and when, after a valiant resistance, he saw the impossibility of withstanding his powerful enemy, he abandoned the town of Zsabliak and retired to a more secure and mountainous part of the country. He there founded the convent of Cettinje, and translated the metropolitan see to the new capital. But during the following century the Turks obtained an influence in Montenegro, and many of the people, having embraced Islamism, entered the service of the Porte; and, for a time, Montenegro was regarded as part of the Pashalic of Scutari. In 1623 Suliman, Pasha of Scutari, advanced with a powerful army from Albania to attack the intractable Montenegrins, and, overcoming a most desperate opposition, he ultimately penetrated to Cettinje, where he destroyed the convent; but he was soon obliged to abandon the country and retire across the border, with the disgrace of being unable to subdue the people. Later on, in compliance with the orders of Peter the Great, the Montenegrins, in 1711, took up arms and made several incursions into Albania, an affront which the Porte promptly resented by ordering Seraskier Ahmet Pasha to march an army of 60,000 men into Montenegro. The battle which was fought in the following year was one of the most sanguinary that had hitherto taken place between the Montenegrins and the Turks, and the former gained a complete victory. But the warriors of the Black Mountain were not allowed to rest long under the shadow of their laurels, for three years later the Grand Vizier, Duman Pasha, at the head of 120,000 men, invaded the country in concert with the Pashas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. To this formidable array the Montenegrins offered a desperate resistance, until, overwhelmed by numbers and defeated at Zurnik, they found themselves unable to check the advance of the Turks, who once again penetrated to Cettinje. The inhabitants fled to the mountains: whilst those of the western districts, who were cut off from the secure fastnesses of the interior, took refuge in Dalmatian territory, whither they were followed by the Turks, who butchered them without regard to age or sex, and carried away upwards of 2000 into captivity. During the present century the conflicts between armed bands of Montenegrins and Albanians have been almost endless; and many a ruthless raid of the latter, plundering the homesteads, ill-treating the helpless women, after first killing their male defenders, and lastly driving off the cattle, has left the Montenegrin peasantry inspired with a fierce desire of vengeance. Such an incident is represented in our Artist's Sketch, entitled "Albanian Raiders," which indeed sufficiently tells its own tale; on the one part of violence and outrage, on the other part of misery and despair. The condition of these unhappy females appears most wretched; they are bereft of husbands, fathers, and brothers in the unavailing fight against a stronger attacking force of the enemy; and now, with their hands still bound, and with a curse for their only weapon, robbed of their all, shamefully insulted, and abandoned to destitution. But such are the tender mercies of barbarian warfare.

We learn from the news of this week that the Montenegrins have commenced hostilities against the Albanians. On Sunday they attacked the latter in the neighbourhood of the Lake of Scutari, but were repulsed, defeated, and pursued; and the Albanians returned from the chase with thirteen heads of the enemy.

THE MONTENEGRIN MINISTER OF WAR AT PODGORITZA.

Towards the close of the late Turkish war Podgoritza, a small Mohammedan town upon the northern borders of Albania, fell captive to Montenegrin prowess, after a stubborn struggle upon the neighbouring heights of Medun and subsequent to the severe fighting round the adjacent fortress of Spuss. Although Podgoritza is, in population and extent, no larger than an average English hamlet, it is, nevertheless, both on account of its size and situation, by far the most important place in Montenegro. It is, in fact, the only moderately populous centre in the Black Mountain—Cettinje, the modest capital of the tiniest principality in Europe, consisting merely of some half-hundred Irish-looking stone cabins, clustering about an old convent and a small château-like palace, and the villages of Ricka, Danilograd, and Zsabliak, each covering about the same area as we should devote to a block of almshouses. From the date of its permanent occupation by the Montenegrins, Podgoritza has been made the head-quarters of the Ministry of War on account of its proximity to the Turkish border. Just now its closeness to the theatre of war makes it a capital military dépôt, for it is barely three hours' march from the town, along the plain which trends south to the head of the lake of Scutari to Tusi, where the Albanians are now massed to resist the surrender of the fort and pashalic there, and which the Porte offered some weeks ago in exchange for the territory at Gusinje. Moreover, the rebel district of Gusinje itself is only fifteen hours' distance; so that, by making Podgoritza the official centre of military organisation, the Montenegrins are always handy to their base of operations.

During our sojourn in Montenegro, at the close of last year, the Albanians had already risen to defend the districts which should have been quietly given up to the Principality under the conditions of the Berlin Treaty. It happened that the news of the Albanian rebellion arrived at Podgoritza about the same time as we did; yet the town was as quiet and orderly as though it had been the time-honoured residence of Prince Nikita himself. The impending Gusinje difficulty did not appear to affect the temper of the people, although the place has a mixed population, partly Albanian, partly Montenegrin, but apparently most peaceably blended in the proportion of two thirds Mohammedan to one third Christian. Neither did the warriors of the Black Mountain seem in the least degree excited by the machinations of the Albanian League, for they shouldered their dobró pouskas and marched to the front with as much nonchalance as, with us, a veteran sportsman would set out on a few days' rabbit-shooting. Nor was there any unusual bustle noticeable about the neighbourhood of the War Office, beyond the occasional arrival of a courier from Cettinje, clad in his shaggy white sheepskin jacket, a huge water-gourd dangling from his waist, and his belt containing a perfect arsenal of arms. Beyond these mountain runners there appeared to be no official communication whatever between the world without and his Excellency the Voivoda Plamenaz, the Montenegrin War Minister, within. The Adjutant and Staff of his Excellency sat, whilst their master was indoors, upon the steps of the War Office—a low, one-storied, white-washed, Turkish building, pierced with green lattices and quaint little iron cages—and smoked cigarettes with great assiduity. Judging from the singular want of military animation observable upon the War Office steps, one might infer, either that the military organisation of Montenegro was so perfect that, like Maréchal Le Boeuf's paper army, the soldiers were always ready "down to the button on a gaiter," or that constant familiarity with the armed Albanians had bred a contempt for their valour bordering on the apathetic.

The solution to this enigma was given me by the War Minister himself in an interview I had with his Excellency before quitting Podgoritza for Albania. Our conversation took place in the reception-room at the War Office—a diminutive, whitewashed camera, no bigger than a butler's pantry, Spartanly furnished with a low-cushioned divan running round three sides of the apartment, and a plate for cigarette ash placed in the centre of the bare flag-stone floor. During the customary silence of the introductory coffee and cigarettes I had ample leisure to notice that the Voivode—who shares with Marko Milano the military honours of the late campaign—was marvellously preserved for his age, which I had been informed was over seventy. But his upright muscular frame and bright observant eyes seemed to belong to a man still in the full vigour of the prime of life. He wore the handsome national dress, with a long ivory-mounted "Gasser" revolver thrust into his sash; but in place of the brown shawl or Strukka, which usually hangs from every Montenegrin's shoulder, he had donned, by way of overcoat, an ordinary English tweed shooting-jacket, which seemed singularly out of sorts with his gold-embroidered red waistcoat, green surcoat, and voluminous Zouave trousers. His Excellency informed me that the military system of Montenegro precluded all chance of bustle or confusion when the army was summoned to arms. There were no barracks in the country, and every soldier—the term included all able-bodied Montenegrins between the ages of sixteen and sixty—was quartered in his own home. The country was divided into military districts, and each of these divisions had its Commander, or Chief. When the districts were required to prepare for war, notice to that effect was telegraphed from the War Office to the commanders, but the soldiers, thus put upon the alert, were not permitted to leave their homes a day before their presence in the field was imperative. They were then rapidly moved into position, and as soon as their mission was accomplished they returned as swiftly to their homes to resume their ordinary occupations. Twelve thousand men, the Voivode told me, were then in readiness to occupy Gusinje, but not a single battalion would leave its district until its presence on the frontier was a matter of absolute necessity.

The manner in which the Montenegrin Minister of War usually transacts his official business would, no doubt, be viewed with horror by the fastidious routine-sticklers at our own Horse Guards. As I have already hinted, the Podgoritza War Office is a singularly unpretentious Government building of circumscribed interior arrangements. It is, in fact, hardly bigger than a good-sized porter's lodge. Therefore, for the lack of reception space in his official residence, his Excellency prefers to hold his levées in the little public square in front of his office. Here he may be seen at all hours of the day pacing slowly backwards and forwards, over the cobble-stones, granting audiences, reading despatches, issuing orders, or smoking contemplative cigarettes with his Staff, formed in line a deferential step or two behind him. A glance of the Montenegrin military executive will show one that—with the exception of the gigantic officer of the Prince's body guard who invariably attends upon Plamenaz, wearing the silver breast and shoulder armour of Old Servia, which constitute the sole distinguishing trappings of the Hospodar's hundred household troops—the army has no uniform beyond the national dress. Officers, according to their several grades, are distinguished only by small silver or golden badges sown to the front of their kappas; and, were it not for these emblems in their caps, the Montenegrin Minister of War and his suite might be readily mistaken for a group of gossips discussing the events of the day in the little Piazza of Podgoritza.

ATHOL MAYHEW.

With reference to the other Sketches of scenes and figures encountered on the Albanian frontiers of Montenegro and of Bosnia, a few lines of explanation may be sufficient. The portrait of a Montenegrin captain, as well as the travelling Montenegrin family, a man and his wife, followed by a sister or some other woman, descending the rock-cut steps of the road from the Black Mountain (Tzernagora) down to Cattaro and Ragusa, derives some interest from our Correspondent's foregoing account of the Border wars in that unsettled highland region. The remaining Sketches are designed chiefly to illustrate the recent advance of the Austrian army of occupation from Bosnia, over the Southern frontier, into a debateable territory which was claimed to be part of the province of Albania. The train of Austrian mountain guns, the line of pack-mules laden with provisions, and the patrol of chasseurs following a native guide through some wild pass of that ragged country, might have been frequently met with any time last year. We are somewhat relieved by a glance at the snugly-seated Bosnian Beg, smoking his pipe of peace, with his glass of raki on the table, in comfortable resignation to the orderly rule of the Austrian Empire, which has superseded that of the Sultan.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

It was only for a limited period apparently that Mrs. Bateman had arranged to secure the attraction of Mr. Edward Saker with the Midsummer Night's Dream company at Sadler's Wells. The exquisite fantasy with its beauteous scenery, excellent music, and charming troupe of children fairies, was played for the last time at "Merry Islington," so far as the present season is concerned; and a complete change of performance was made on Monday evening. I am sorry for it, in one respect. I wished to see the "Dream" again; and further to study the evolution of the character of Puck as interpreted by the wonderfully sprightly, graceful, and intelligent little daughter of Mrs. Cicely Nott. (Be careful, O printer. Remember the damaging epitaph, "Ci gît la Fille de Mademoiselle Mars." I have seen many Pucks. Polly Marshall to begin with, both under the Vestris management at Covent Garden, and the Maddox management at the Princess's; betwixt '42 and '46, I should say.

I have often fancied, when musing over that very mysterious little personage, Puck, that Shakspeare intended him to be fundamentally an incarnation of the Spirit of Rural Democracy. One of his cognomina, "Robin Goodfellow," is a strikingly convertible term for the French "Jacques Bonhomme." It is true that he acknowledges one of his names to be Hobgoblin, that he boasts of being feared in field and town, and that he glories in the knavish tricks with which he first beguiles and then terrifies old women. It is true that he is a bit of a cynic, and makes no secret of his opinion that the majority of mankind are fools; yet, au fond, I conscientiously believe that the aim of Puck is the general good. He is a kind of rustic Rabelais, barking nonsense and playing the fool, but veiling a steady opposition to evil under his buffoonery. He is "sweet Puck" to those who really know him. Oberon, who is manifestly a beneficent spirit, addresses him as "gentle," and the affectionate devotion and willing obedience rendered by Puck to his master are beautiful in their pathos. And hear the busy little sprite, when he has a chance moment of leisure for soliloquising:

> And the country proverb known,
> That every man should take his own,
> In your waking shall be shown.
> Jack shall have Jill,
> Nought shall go ill:
> The man shall have his mare again, and all shall go well.

Bos locutus est. The half articulate aspirations of the oppressed Elizabethan peasant are made clear here. No more cruel Game Laws; no more stocks and whipping-posts for the offence of taking the rabbits which the Squire claims for his own, but in which Robin Goodfellow should surely have a share; no more——but stay, I must not talk politics in this place. My business is with "Plays and Players."

At Sadler's Wells, then, the "Dream" has been superseded by a sufficiently interesting Comedy-Drama of American origin (Mr. F. Marsden is the author), entitled "Otto: a German." The piece is designed not only to afford the talented American artistes Mr. and Mrs. George S. Knight an opportunity for displaying their ability as actor and actress, but also to give scope for the exhibition of Mrs. Knight's attainments as a vocalist, and for her husband's remarkable versatility as a dancer, mimic, comic and pathetic reciter, gymnast, and performer on the "xylophone," the "chir-organon," and the musical glasses.

The plot of Otto follows the fortunes of a young German emigrant in the United States, and turns upon a fraudulent act committed long before the action of the piece begins by Gottlieb Muller (Mr. F. Huntley). This person while in his native Germany has dishonestly appropriated a large sum of money confided to him by one Rutger for transmission to his son Otto, whom he has never seen. Instead of handing over the thalers to their rightful owner, Herr Muller emigrates to the States, and makes a large fortune by "running" a brewery at Hoboken, in New Jersey. Subsequently the newly-emigrated Otto finds employment in his brewery, and naturally falls in love with Mr. Muller's pretty daughter Lizette (Mrs. George S. Knight). It happens, fatefully enough, that the villain of the piece, one Caspar Bechs, has obtained possession of a document in which the guilt of Muller in purloining the Rutger trust-funds is clearly shown; and this document is made use of by the reprehensible Caspar for the purpose of extorting money from old Mr. Muller and obtaining his consent to the villain's marriage with Christine (Miss Maud Rennie), who really loves and is beloved by a very good-looking and eligible young gentlemen, named Dick Freely (Mr. H. B. Mantell). Things are looking badly for old Mr. Muller and his family; but all is made right at last, by the pluck and ingenuity of Otto, who obtains possession of the document incriminating the brewer, burns it, tramples on the ashes, knocks Caspar Bechs, metaphorically speaking, "into a cocked hat," kicks him down stairs, and marries Lizette. Christine pairs off with Dick Freely; and old Mr. Gottlieb Müller makes a mental resolve (at least, I hope so) not to steal other people's money any more, but to live cleanly for the future, and to put real ten-cent pieces into the plate at church collections, instead of metal buttons with the shanks snipped off.

Mr. Knight is a capital comedian, with an excellently modulated voice, and a master equally of humour and of pathos. His broken Teutonic-English is very good. He recites a parody on Mrs. Hemans's "Boy stood on the Burning Deck," or, as he phrases it, "De deck dat shtood on the Burning Boy," with much comic effect; and the fun of the burlesque was at once seized by the audience, although "Casabianca" is, at present, very rarely recited in this country, whereas in America it is being perpetually spouted from Coney Island to the Seal Rock on the Pacific, and from Lake Pontchartrain to Alaska. Mrs. G. H. Knight sang very melodiously, and the exuberance of her action appeared to please the public mightily. Mr. Mantill was a first-rate villain—a well-dressed "scallawag," who, on any slight encouragement, would develop into a "hamfatter," a "glue-brother," a "koodlum," a "plug-ugly," a "blood-tub," a "shoulder-hitter," a "dead rabbit," and a politician of the Fourth Ward. And with a few weeks' training he would make a very apt "road agent," which is Californian for a highwayman who robs the bullion express.

The piece, which was from first to last enthusiastically received, is altogether American in tone, feeling, and local colour; but it would have gained in the direction of realism had the revolver been a little more freely and frequently introduced. Only once in the course of the piece does Otto produce a glittering little toy of a six-shooter, and even then he does not make any use of it. In point of literal fact, such a thoroughpaced, and withal such a cowardly scoundrel as Caspar Bechs would assuredly have carried a pistol; but to disarm him was possibly a permissible dramatic license used by the writer of the play. Caspar, "shooting-iron" in hand, might have proved an ugly customer, and impeded the happy consummation of the epopœa by blowing out Otto's brains instead of submitting to be cowhided and kicked by that gallant German. Next to the acting of Mr. and Mrs. Knight, I admired the "make up" and general demeanour of Mr. F. Huntley as the felonious brewer Gottlieb Muller, who, with his cleanly-shaven countenance, his long, silvery locks, and his broad-brimmed hat, looked, now like the Patriarch in "Little Dorrit," and now like a "bogus" Benjamin Franklin. A Humbug, evidently. I am afraid that besides stealing Otto's money he had been for years engaged in "watering" the stock of "roorback" railroads and starting "wild cat" banks, and that he habitually adulterated the lager beer he brewed.

The summer season at several of the theatres is drawing to a close; but the autumn will no doubt bring with it novelties with which the middle of this instant July is certainly desperately destitute. Meanwhile I hear that Haverly's "Great Troupe of American Minstrels" sailed from New York city last Friday by steam-ship Canada. The Minstrels are sixty in number, and are to appear at Her Majesty's Theatre on the 31st inst. Three score minstrels at once. The four-and-twenty blackbirds that sung, notwithstanding the circumstance of their having been baked in a pie, will "shrink to their second cause and be no more" when Haverly's troupe (I have met them in the States) begin to sing. How many Ethiopian Serenaders were there in the original troupe which appeared at the St. James's in 1846 or 1847? Five, I think. I often try to remember their names as a test of the decay or otherwise of my memory, Pell, Harrington, —— Stanwood, and Germon. For the life of me I cannot recall the name of the Serenader represented by a dash; but Pell was the "Original Bones," of that I am sure.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The season is to close this (Saturday) evening, with "La Traviata," the cast including Madame Patti as Violetta.

On Saturday last, "Les Huguenots" was given, with the transference of the character of Margherita di Valois to Madame Sembrich, who sang the music of the part, especially the aria "O vago suol," with dazzling brilliancy of execution. The latter part of the air was enthusiastically encored. In one or two instances, Madame Sembrich a little overdid the florid ornamentation in the strained use of the staccato on the extreme upper notes. The cast included, as recently, Mdlle. Turolla as Valentina, Madame Scalchi as Urbano, Signor Gayarré as Raoul, Signor Cotogni as Di Nevers, and M. Vidal as Marcello—M. Gaillhard having been an efficient representative of the stern St. Bris.

There is little to record of this week's final proceedings, which have consisted of repetitions of operas cast as previously. On Thursday evening "Semiramide" was announced for the benefit of Madame Patti; and yesterday (Friday) Madame Albani was to take her benefit in "Mignon" and a scene from "Norma."

The season just closed opened on April 13 with "Il Re di Lahore," the principal characters sustained, as last year, by Mdlles. Turolla and Pasqua, Signor Gayarré, M. Lassalle, and Signor Silvestri; Signor Di Reszke having made his first appearance as Indra, in which he produced a favourable impression that was greatly enhanced by his subsequent performances in other parts. Besides the artists just named, Mdlles. Valleria, Mantilla, Schou, Bauermeister, Pyk, Cottino, Ghiotti, Sonnino, Madame Corsi, Signori Nicolini, Sabater, Carpi, I. Corsi, Manfredi, Fille, Graziani, Ciampi, Capponi, Scolara, Raguer, and Caracciolo have reappeared.

Besides the very successful début of Madame Sembrich and that of Signor Di Reszke, new appearances have been made by Mdlle. Malvezzi and M. Engel.

The novelties produced have been revivals of Hérold's "Le Pré aux Clercs" and Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon," in both of which the charming performance of Madame Albani was the prominent feature; and the production of "Estella," an Italian version of M. Cohen's "Les Bluets," which, notwithstanding the fine singing of Madame Patti, was but coldly received.

Some changes have recently been made in the orchestra, the general efficiency of which does not seem to have been improved thereby. Signor Vianesi and Signor Bevignani have fulfilled the duties of conductor as hitherto.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The subscription season of this establishment closed on Saturday last, but the performances are being continued by extra nights. Signor Boïto's "Mefistofele" was repeated yesterday (Friday) week, and on the following evening Signor Ravelli made his second appearance, with a repetition of the success which he had previously obtained in the same character, Edgardo, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," Madame Gerster having again sung finely as Lucia. This lady also appeared with great success as the heroine in "Linda di Chamouni" on Thursday week. Three repetitions of "Mefistofele" were announced for this week—on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

On Tuesday, Madame Gerster appeared as Elvira in "I Puritani," in which—as during last season—she sung with much effect. The cast included, as before, Signori Campanini and Galassi, respectively as Arturo and Riccardo; Signor Nanetti having been an excellent representative of Giorgio. The duet, "Suoni la Tromba," for the two last-named characters, was encored.

The extra nights are to close on July 24.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

The last concert of the twenty-fifth and final season of this institution took place on Monday afternoon, when Wesley's fine motet for double choir, "In exitu Israel;" Mendelssohn's noble eight-part psalm, "Judge me, O God;" Gounod's "Ave verum;" and madrigals and part-songs were admirably rendered by the choristers, conducted, as usual, by Mr. Leslie. Vocal solos were effectively sung by Madame Trebelli and Mr. Maas; and Mr. Charles Hallé played—in his usual excellent style—three "Gavottes" by Bach, and other pianoforte solos. After the concert, Sir Thomas Gladstone presented a testimonial to Mr. Leslie, comprising a check for three hundred guineas, a diamond ring, and a silver punch-bowl. Mr. Leslie replied in a speech tracing his past labours and their results, and stating that the dismemberment of the choir did not imply his retirement as a conductor. We believe there is a probability of some similar institution being formed in replacement of the disbanded choir, whose performances have long since reached a degree of excellence hitherto unattained by English choristers.

St. James's Hall was crowded, the audience having included the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Teck, and other distinguished visitors.

That excellent institution the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, at Upper Norwood, gave its annual prize concert at the Crystal Palace on Saturday afternoon, when the performances of the pupils were highly meritorious. In the vocal selection, Misses Dick, Campbell, and Reece, and Mr. J. West particularly distinguished themselves, and there was some very clever organ-playing by Mr. A. Stericker, and some effective pianoforte performances by Mr. Schwier and Master A. Hollins. Some part-songs were charmingly sung by a select choir of the pupils, and the fine Crystal Palace band, conducted by Mr. Manns, contributed much to the interest of the occasion. After the concert medals and prizes were distributed by the Duchess of Connaught, an address was delivered by Professor Macfarren, and speeches were made by the Duke of Westminster (President of the College), and the Duke of Connaught. The college is doing a great work (under the skilful and active superintendence of the principal, Mr. F. J. Campbell) in ameliorating the condition of the blind, by general education, the special cultivation of music, and the training for active and useful employment by means of which to earn an independent livelihood. As the institution cannot be self-supporting, it behoves all who can to aid in the extension of its purposes.

Mr. George Magrath—an accomplished pianist of whom we have several times had occasion to speak in terms of praise—gave a matinée musicale at Oakland's Hall yesterday (Friday).

The miscellaneous concerts (which have been more numerous this season than ever) are beginning to subside. This week has included those of Signor Conti on Monday, of Mrs. Gurney on Tuesday, and of Mr. H. E. Thorndike on Wednesday.

The Musical Artists' Society give this (Saturday) evening their eighteenth performance of new compositions at the Royal Academy of Music.

Mr. Walter Macfarren has, under medical advice, resigned the conductorship of the choir and orchestra of the Royal Academy of Music, but retains his position as a professor of the pianoforte in the institution.

The competition at the Royal Academy of Music for the Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal (for singing selected pieces) took place on Monday. There were eight candidates, and the medal was awarded to Clara Samuell. The competition for the Heathcote Long prize (purse of ten guineas, for playing selected pieces) took place on the same day. There were twelve candidates, and the prize was awarded to Charles T. Corke.

Madame Louise Reichner gave on Wednesday morning, at St. George's Hall, an excellent recital from the works of English, French, and German dramatic authors. She was assisted by Mr. E. H. Brooke, of the Adelphi; and Herr Oberthür played a harp solo.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment will close for the summer season on July 24, and, after a few weeks' tour in the provinces, will re-open for the autumn season at St. Georges's Hall on Monday, Oct. 4.

DOWN BY THE RIVER.

Boating on fresh and pure inland waters has a charm for the less ambitious and adventurous spirits altogether different from the pleasure of a bolder and wider navigation. A winding river is the quietest of sequestered lanes, especially if its banks are curtained with green willows, or even with tall rushes, screening from common sight the lowly sitters in a light pair-oared skiff, whose heads do not rise more than 3 ft. or 4 ft. above the water. The after-part, occupied by the person who holds the tiller-ropes for the manipulation of the rudder, called the stern-sheets, ought to be made very comfortable, with soft cushions to recline upon, when a pretty girl is invited to take her place there. A young fellow, between fifteen and twenty-two years of age, or be it more or less, cannot have a better employment than to confront this sweet little lady on his rowing-bench and to ply the easy sculls at her bidding, whether up or down the stream, just so long as she is pleased to command his services. Could he not be equally obliging on dry land? In places where no river, lake, pond, or other piece of water happens to be convenient, it might be held just as reasonable that a gentleman should be called upon to give a lady the benefit of recreative locomotion by pushing her wheel-chair along the turnpike road. This would, in the majority of cases, do both him and her quite as much good; but the practice has not yet come into fashion. It is said, however, that the latest form of tricycles, intended to carry double, will be made available for the use of gallantry, on the principle of carrying a fair companion with the masculine rider. One has sometimes been tempted to regret the discontinuance of the old method of riding on a pillion behind the horseman, which must, in certain cases, have been rather pleasant. But we are straying too far on dry land, as ducks and geese and swans are apt to do; it is time to return to the water, and "down by the river," where the pretty little maiden sits waiting for somebody to row her boat for her. If he is of our mind about the matter, she will not have long to wait.

In the Inner Temple, pupil scholarships of 100 guineas each have been awarded to the undermentioned students:—Equity, Mr. Charles H. Grafton; real property law, Mr. W. Brinton. In common law no scholarship was awarded.

Yesterday week the annual meeting of the Index Society was held at the rooms of the Society of Arts; Mr. J. Russell Lowell, the American Minister, in the chair. In the course of his address Mr. Lowell stated that he would endeavour to procure assistance from his countrymen, both in work and in money, in order to carry out the object of the organisation.

On the 8th inst. the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, accompanied by Sir John Michel, Commander of the Forces in Ireland, visited the Royal Hibernian Military School, Phœnix Park, Dublin, and distributed the Crimean Banquet Fund prizes to the successful pupils. The fund consists of a sum of £1000 surplus of a subscription raised after the Crimean War to entertain the soldiers who returned to Ireland. It was invested in Government Three per Cent Stocks, together with £100 added by Government, and the interest is distributed in seven prizes, the highest, of £8, to the most deserving boys. Lord Cowper expressed much interest in the school.

THE MONTHS: JULY.

The air is filled with the pleasant odour of new-mown grass, and on all sides we hear, or fancy we hear, the whetting of scythes, and the measured rip through long thick grass of the sweeping blades.

The warm hazy hue of a summer sky breathes peace and beauty upon the green earth below, and a dolce far niente feeling steals over us, as, lying with our back against a hay-cock, that amply shades us from the noonday sun, we gaze with tilted hat and half-closed eyes upon a landscape in which blue and green and haze blend together in delicious harmony. High up against the horizon is a rolling line of hills whose distant verdure is lost in the grey-blue haze above; midway between the hill-tops and the valley at our feet, with no haze about it but the glorious sunlight, is a hanging wood, its advancing and receding parts exquisitely coloured with masses of light and shade; while down beneath us lies a green valley, also wooded, but revealing here and there refreshing glimpses of water, for a stream is stealing whisperingly through the vale. A charmingly peaceful scene, which we think in nowise diminished when seen through a little wreath of blue smoke that we, in lazy mood, emit from our lips in time with the measured sweeps from the mowers hard by. The mowers themselves are out of sight; but we can hear the scythes at work, and that is all we care about just now; for, truth to tell, the real pictures of haymaking have sometimes fallen a little short of our ideal; and, moreover, we are chary of showing ourselves too prominently, lest the pipe, a covered one, be it said, should be ordered into our pocket.

Who does not know the pretty rural scene?—when "swarms the village o'er the jovial mead." There is, of course, "the rustic youth, brown with meridian toil;" and, rake in hand, "the ruddy maid," in drapery that but half conceals her form, with "all her kindled graces burning o'er her cheek;" and "stooping age" is there, and winning childhood; and waggons are creaking slowly along between the hedgerows with their fragrant loads of hay. But stay, what is that we hear?—something surely that the poets have never told us of, a sound suggestive of town factories rather than of the sweet hayfields? 'Tis the quick sharp click of machinery. We rise and look in the direction whence comes a continuous succession of small sharp sounds that grate unmusically upon our ears. Ah, we had been dreaming, and had forgotten we live in the days of the electric telegraph and steam-engines. As fast as a pair of stout horses can walk round and round the field the grass is falling before the scissors-like knives of a mowing-machine, like the rolling shingle from a receding wave. The mowers have ceased toiling with their scythes: those slow measured sweeps of theirs only meant the cutting down of the grass on the outskirts of the hayfield, where it borders on the hedges, and now, a pathway having been cut out for the horses all round the field, the mowing-machine will speedily do the rest. The poetry of haymaking is becoming a thing of the past: and yet we think our poets of to-day will soon find that there is music even in the click of the mowing-knives, since it is the associations connected with the scythes that charmed us, not the mere whetting of the blades or the attitude of the mowers. The smell of the hay still remains, in spite of machinery; and there is plenty of work in the hayfields even yet for the stalwart rustic youths, aye, and for the "ruddy maids" whose saucy eyes are such incentives to vigorous toil; nor has any machinery yet been devised that can dispense with the picturesque scenes wherein the waggons come into play.

In our southern counties haymaking began before June had quite closed; and here and there we may find clover-fields not only swept, but tinged with fresh verdure. But the grass-lands where the hay smells the sweetest are not mown until after the dog days have begun. July is the hay month for the great majority of our counties; though, of course, the hayfields present different aspects in different parts. In the south, the phases just now are tedding, raking into wind-rows, bunching into haycocks, pitching into waggons, and stack-building; in the midland counties they are, for the most part, either cutting or tedding; while in the north the mowing-machines and scythes are only just being waked up from their long acquaintance with rust and dust; and before the month has sped, even in Scotland, the mowing-machines will, on the larger farms, be eating away the swaths with appetites like an Atropos, and, on the smaller ones, the scythes be cutting out their more tedious way through the waving grass.

But we are not in Scotland, and had better therefore dwell on the scene before us, which is essentially an English one, and, moreover, highly characteristic of the month. We are again seated by our sweet-scented haycock, which the intelligent reader will at once perceive is in a field cut some days before the adjacent one whence comes the click of machinery. The click of the scissors-knives is pleasantly indistinct just now, for the horses have taken the mower to the end of the field remotest from us, and we can again quietly contemplate the rolling hills that seem almost to melt into sky, and the hanging wood below, and, still lower down, the green valley at our feet, through which a deep stream wends its tranquil way. The alders and willows that overhang the river-banks partially hide the shimmering water from our view, but they do not prevent our hearing the lazy dip of oars. A half-loaded waggon is approaching us, and our haycock is doomed; so we shall go down to the river and rest under the shade of yon weeping-willow that dips its trailing foliage in the stream, as if the heat of this summer day had made it thirsty. Our view is now a very circumscribed one, but the water and the trees are well worth our contemplation. The river is so still and deep and clear, we desire nothing more than a plunge from the mossy bank and a ten-minutes' swim in its cool, translucent waters; but this is a luxury that can only be indulged in before breakfast, for no sooner has one boat passed us than another comes in sight, and from most of the boats comes the soft ripple of girlish laughter.

Now that the fever of the racecourse has in great measure subsided, our pretty English streams woo us to their tranquil bosoms, and the manliest of our men and the sweetest of our women turn with gratitude from grand stands and the hoarse shouts of bookmakers to the haunts of the Naiads—unless there be something special on at Lord's. It is just the hour of the year when rowing and yachting are most enjoyable. True, there is Goodwood looming before us; but who would not rather be handling an oar or the tiller-cords, than see any more racing; or be sculling to the steering of some fair dimpled coxswain; or, encircling himself with a coil of ropes, take his share on the towing-path. Who would care for the formality of a set dinner when a tent can be pitched on the summer grass close to the stream, and camp-kettles and a few lighted sticks do all that is needful? And, by-the-way, are the strawberries now in season so luscious to the taste at the resorts of fashion as in some sequestered nook or creek into which our boat has drifted, where we have on our right some shady alders, and on our left bulrushes and forget-me-nots, and, perhaps, right under the bows of our little craft, the great round leaves and white blossoms of the water-lily?

The forget-me-nots that fringe the reedy marge of many a tree-shaded creek are now in their fullest beauty; perhaps nowhere more so than on the classic banks of the Cam, where the sweet pale things grow in great abundance and luxuriance. In our river creeks may also be found the water-lily, though it seems to prefer resting its lovely white chalices on the unruffled bosom of a lake or mere. Another river flower of the month is the handsome but deadly poisonous monkshood, whose thickly-clustered spikes of purple "hoods" are especially noticeable on the wooded banks of the Teme. But, though the Spirit of Beauty still rests on field and river and in wood and glen, it were affectation to say we love the flowers of July as we did the sweet wildings of May and June; for, since the summer solstice, all our sweetest-scented blooms have shrivelled and fallen, and a new generation of plants has sprung up in their places that blanches not nor sickens at the fierce rays of the July sun, and that can better endure the pangs of thirst. Amongst the more common flowers now in bloom are the meadow-sweet, with its crowded cymes of cream-yellow flowers, the wild thyme, the stately foxglove, the blue and red corn-flowers, the bindweed, and amongst the campanulas that universal favourite the delicate little blue-veined harebell.

THE MOWER.

"All flesh is grass" may well be remembered, even on a fine summer evening, when the mower is seen plying his scythe in a field adjacent to the rural churchyard. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth," but ere the time of natural decay, comes this unsympathising reaper with his destructive blade, and they are soon cut off, both the grass and the flower that cometh up in the midst thereof. He stops a moment in his work, only to wonder if it be six o'clock and time to leave it off for the day. And while listening for the expected sound of the near church clock to proclaim the hour of repose, he looks over the low hedge into the deep-cut road which leads up hill, past the graveyard wall, into the neighbouring village. A youthful couple of contented lovers, whose engagement is known to every gossip in the place, just now pass by the Mower's field of brief employment on the Parson's glebe. They have not observed his presence, and he has no business to speak a word to them. Yet even here is a touch of nature, making the whole world kin; and the old fellow cannot but feel that he too was once young, some thirty or forty years ago, and there was a lass with whom he was happy to stroll through the green lanes in the evenings of a bygone summer. Youth, in manhood as in womanhood, "cometh up as a flower;" but too soon it withereth, if it be not untimely cut off, and then—his head turns involuntarily to the next plot of ground, with its turfy mounds and simple tombstones, beneath the spreading branches of the solemn yew-tree. The Mower has so often heard, in that consecrated place, "Man that is born of a woman," and the rest of the awful but consoling liturgy for the burial of the dead. He sighs at the recollection, then wipes his eyes, and presently walks home, it is to be hoped a sadder and a wiser man, instead of going into the customary beerhouse.

THE COURT.

The Queen's residence at Windsor for the season will close this week, the Court leaving for the Isle of Wight.

The Duc d'Aumale lunched with her Majesty before his departure, Princess Christian joining the Royal party.

The Grand Duke Alexis of Russia visited the Queen yesterday week. His Imperial Highness was met at the Windsor railway station by the Equerry in Waiting, who conducted him to the castle. Princess Christian lunched with her Majesty and the Grand Duke, after which his Imperial Highness left on his return to London, attended by Prince Chahoffskoï, who was presented to her Majesty by the Grand Duke. Signor Li Calsi played on the pianoforte before the Queen and Princess Beatrice in the afternoon. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, the Duke and Duchess of Richmond and Gordon, the Duchess of Roxburghe, Lady Abercromby, the Earl of Zetland, Viscount Barrington, Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, Colonel R. H. Buller, and Captain Edwards.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, last Saturday visited St. George's Chapel and inspected the memorial to the memory of the late King of Hanover, which has been executed for her Majesty by Count Gleichen. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn arrived at the castle. Her Majesty's dinner party included the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, the Duchess of Bedford, Lady Abercromby, Lady Adela Larking, the Hon. Caroline Cavendish, the Earl of Zetland, the Right Hon. J. G. Dodson, the Right Hon. J. Chamberlain, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir H. Ponsonby, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. W. Carington, and Major R. B. Lane. The band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, played during and after dinner in the quadrangle. Earl Spencer arrived at the castle.

The Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Phillips Brooks, Rector of Trinity Church, Boston, officiated. Her Majesty's dinner party consisted of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, the Duchess of Bedford, Lady Abercromby, Earl Spencer, and Lieutenant-General Lord Charles Fitzroy.

The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone had an audience of the Queen on Monday. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left for London in the afternoon. Her Majesty's dinner party included Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, Lord and Lady Aveland, Lady Abercromby, the Earl and Countess of Zetland, the Earl of Breadalbane, the Earl of Camperdown, and the Earl of Morley. The Rifle Brigade band, under the direction of Mr. Miller, played a selection of music during and after dinner in the quadrangle; after which the Queen sent for Mr. Miller and presented him with two handsome crayon drawings of herself and the Prince Consort, mounted in gilt frames, Mr. Miller being about to leave the brigade after being fifty-three years with the corps.

Earl Granville had an audience of her Majesty on Tuesday. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived at the castle to luncheon. Their Royal Highnesses afterwards attended the meeting of the Prince Consort's Windsor Association, which was held in the Home Park, opposite the castle, the Duke presenting the prizes to the successful competitors; after which their Royal Highnesses visited the flower show and exhibitions of handicraft and bees, the latter shown by the Berks and Bucks Beekeepers' Association.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice came to London the same afternoon, and were present at the Royal garden party at Marlborough House. Her Majesty and the Princess returned to the castle in the evening.

The Queen reviewed the troops of the Aldershott division, to the number of nearly 14,000, on Wednesday in Windsor Great Park, Prince Christian, as Ranger, having, with the various military officials, outlined the arrangements of the day's programme. The Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the Royal family were present.

The Queen has given an audience to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador; and has entertained at dinner Lady Paget (with Miss Paget, who was the same day presented to her Majesty), the Countess of Caledon, Lady Abercromby, the Hon. Horatia Stopford, the Marquis of Hartington, the Right Hon. Sir W. V. Harcourt, the Right Hon. J. Bright, Lieutenant-General Lord Charles Fitzroy, and Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir H. Ponsonby. Princesses Victoria and Louisa have lunched with the Queen.

M. Saint-Saëns has performed upon the organ and Baronne de Caters-Lablache has sung before the Queen and Princess Beatrice at the castle.

The following general order has been issued by the Duke of Cambridge:—"His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has received the Queen's commands to convey to the Volunteers of Great Britain her Majesty's congratulations on the completion of the twenty-first year of the existence of the force. The Queen has watched with much interest the steady progress of the force since its formation; and its present numerical strength, high training, and discipline have elicited her Majesty's unqualified satisfaction. While regretting that it has not been found possible to hold a review this year, the Queen hopes that an opportunity may present itself at no distant period which will enable her Majesty the inspect the Volunteers in Windsor Great Park."

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales arrived at Sandringham yesterday week, the Princess of Wales, with her family, having passed the week there during the Prince's visit to Newmarket.

On Sunday their Royal Highnesses and Princes Albert Victor and George, and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud attended Divine service at St. Mary Magdalene's Church, where the Rev. F. Hervey officiated.

The Prince and Princess, accompanied by their children and Prince Louis of Battenberg, returned to Marlborough House on Monday, and in the afternoon the Prince and Princess, with their sons, went to the last concert of the season given by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir at St. James's Hall. The Prince and Princess dined with Lord and Lady Carington at their residence in Whitehall-yard.

Their Royal Highnesses had a garden party on Tuesday at Marlborough House. The Queen was present; also Prince and Princess Christian, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck. The invitations, numbering some 3000, included various illustrious foreigners, the members of the diplomatic corps, and the chief of English society. The band of the Royal Horse Guards, under the direction of Mr. Charles Godfrey, and the band of the first battalion of the Rifle Brigade (Prince Consort's Own), under Mr. Miller, played in the garden. The band of the Spanish Students likewise played a selection of music.

Princess Christian formally opened the newly erected Windsor Infant Schools on Tuesday. The Princess received purses in aid of the funds.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught dined with the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry yesterday week at Londonderry House, Park-lane. On Saturday their Royal Highnesses were present at the annual prize festival of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at the Crystal Palace, where a concert was given, after which the Duchess distributed the prizes. During their visit the Duke and Duchess accepted from the committee of the Crystal Palace Bible stand copies of the memorial edition of "The Oxford Bible for Teachers," specially printed at the Oxford University Press for the Sunday-School centenary celebration. The Duke and Duchess have been to the Royal Italian Opera and to the Gaiety Theatre.

The Duke of Cambridge dined with Lord and Lady Edward Pelham Clinton on Monday in Belgrave-square.

The Duchess of Teck visited yesterday week Messrs. Howell and James's fifth annual exhibition of paintings on china by lady amateurs, of which her Royal Highness is one of the patrons and prize donors. The Duke and Duchess dined at Lord and Lady Aveland's on Tuesday.

Princess Frederica of Hanover on Saturday distributed in the theatre of the University of London, Burlington-gardens, the annual prizes to the boys and girls composing the choir and day and Sunday schools connected with the Chapel Royal, Savoy, it being the twenty-first anniversary.

His Excellency Count Karolyi left the Austrian Embassy on Wednesday on a few months' leave of absence. The Countess and family had previously left for Hungary.

The Duke of Marlborough and the Duke of Roxburghe have gone to Norway on a fishing excursion.

The Duchess of Westminster's intended party to Royalty at Grosvenor House on Thursday did not take place, it having been abandoned in consequence of her Grace's delicate health.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Marriages are arranged between Captain W. H. Newenham and the Hon. Louisa Y. Edwardes, second daughter of the late Lord Kensington; between Mr. Arthur R. Dering, youngest son of Sir Edward C. Dering, Bart., and Miss Beatrice Eyre Ledgard, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eyre Ledgard, of Château Hydra, Algiers, and of Poppleton Hall, Yorkshire; between Mr. Algernon Turnor, and Lady Henrietta Stewart, daughter of the late Earl of Galloway; between Sir Frederick Milner, Bart., and Miss Adeline Denison, daughter of Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Beckett Denison; between Mr. Mostyn, eldest son of Sir Pyers Mostyn, and Miss A. M. Perry, fifth daughter of Mr. Thomas A. Perry, of Biham House, Warwickshire; between Mr. C. Napier Miles, 1st Life Guards, and Miss Emily Spicer; between Mr. Frederick William Fane, son of the late Colonel Fane, of Wormsley, Oxfordshire, and Miss Annie Scott; youngest daughter of Colonel the Hon. C. Graham Scott; between Mr. Edward Southwell Trafford, of Wroxham Hall, Norfolk, and of Honington Hall, Lincolnshire, and the Hon. Elinor Mary Petre, daughter of Lord and Lady Petre; and between Mr. Le Marchant Gosselin, secretary to her Majesty's Embassy at Rome, and the Hon. Katherine Gerard, youngest daughter of Lord and Lady Gerard.

A committee of county gentlemen of Dorset, Lord Eldon and Canon Bingham being amongst the number, have agreed upon a plan for the erection of a county museum and library and school of art at Dorchester, subscriptions amounting to £3000 have been already raised towards the total sum (£6000) that is required. Mr. Robert Williams, of Bridehead House, near Dorchester, has presented a suitable site.

A Parliamentary paper was issued last Saturday containing, amongst the correspondence printed, an exhaustive minute of Sir John Strachey on the cause of the errors in the estimates for the war in Afghanistan, and a memorandum by the Financial Secretary to the India Office, showing that the cost of the war is now estimated at £15,000,000, an excess of £9,000,000 over the former estimate.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

Earl Granville, his bland suavity unbroken by the secession of a noble Marquis from the Government or the occurrence of an interesting domestic event at home, has preserved the even tenour of his way, now urbanely disarming Lord Stratheden and Campbell when too curious as to Mr. Gladstone's Midlothian speeches, and then as diplomatically answering the Earl of Dunraven's inquisitive questions as to the Porte's reception of the Collective Note. The legislative machine, ever more active in the Upper than it is in the Lower House, has ground out a variety of measures, including the Elementary Education Bill.

The Marquis of Lansdowne signified his resignation of the office of Under-Secretary for India yesterday week by taking a seat next the Earl of Derby on the front bench below the gangway.

The Census Bill of 1881 (read a first time on the motion of Viscount Enfield) and Crime in Ireland occupied the attention of their Lordships on Monday. Lord Oranmore and Browne returned to the charge on the latter point, and cited a variety of lawless cases, notably the shooting of Mr. Ferrick at Ballinrobe, with the view of showing the Government the need of creating an effective body of detectives, and the necessity of calling upon the Constabulary to be more on the alert. Earl Spencer and the Earl of Kimberley, replying to the noble Lord and other peers, lamented the prevalence of crime in Ireland, but hoped that it might prove reassuring that murder and manslaughter had not increased last year in the sister isle.

Ireland also monopolised the greater part of their Lordships' sitting of twenty-five minutes' duration on Tuesday. The Lord Chancellor having introduced a bill to free Lord Byron from the pains and penalties he was liable to for having voted without taking the oath, and a handful of measures having been advanced a stage, Earl Rosse prevailed upon Earl Spencer to grant him a return showing the present number of inmates in Irish workhouses, but could not elicit a return as to the paupers accommodated in the spare buildings.

COMMONS.

The white hat and white waistcoat season must be at its height to enable hon. members to appreciate to the full any Ministerial announcement implying that the loom of the land is at length discerned. There was thus experienced considerable relief on Monday when Mr. Gladstone, replying to the gloomy forebodings of Mr. Cowen and others, protested that "The sound of the month of September was as hateful in his ears as it could possibly be in the ears of any hon. member," and added that he did not see "why the month of August, before its very last week, should not enable them to get through the business before them." A short time before the Prime Minister had stated that the Secret Voting Bill would not be persevered with further than to secure the continuance of vote by ballot; and that the Irish Borough Franchise Bill would be dropped; and the right hon. gentleman obtained priority for Government orders on Wednesdays, and that on Tuesdays orders of the day should have precedence of notices of motion.

Now that economy of time has become an urgent Parliamentary question, attention may be called to the elaborate answers Ministers generally have got into the habit of returning to questions. Mr. Grant Duff is almost the solitary exception to this rule. "Yes, Sir," or "No, Sir," is usually the sum total of the reply of the Under-Secretary for the Colonies. His colleagues, however, whether from an uncontrollable desire to emulate the conscientious prolixity of the Prime Minister, or whether with a view of excelling each other in the elaborateness of their exhaustive and exhausting answers, have accustomed themselves to go through a kind of competitive examination at question-time, thereby directly encouraging the growing evil of putting trifling queries, worthy a local vestry rather than the House of Commons.

Erin's carriage still stops the way. On the 8th inst. the bill for granting compensation for disturbance in Ireland, which has alienated some of the supporters of the Ministry and has not reconciled the irreconcilable Mr. Parnell, met with determined opposition from Mr. Albert Grey, who assailed it in an exceedingly able, if one-sided, speech; but was eventually got into committee by a majority of 56—255 to 199. Mr. Gladstone confessed to Lord Elcho at the close of this long sitting that Lord Lansdowne had resigned. Lord George Hamilton on the following day seized upon the secession of the noble Marquis as a reason for requesting the Government to withdraw the bill. More time was wasted in talk on the measure, with which no progress was made. The Opposition returned to the attack in Committee with renewed vigour on Tuesday. Lord Randolph Churchill made and then withdrew a motion to report progress. Lord George Hamilton, borrowing a leaf from Colonel Burnaby's book, then read a telegram from Donegal stating "the number of ejectments from Jan. 1 to June 13 last as 156, and the number of actual evictions eighteen." Opposition cheers greeted these figures, they being deemed an effective answer to Mr. Gladstone's estimate that unless evictions were checked "15,000 persons will be driven from their homes without hope and without remedy during the present year." Lord George Hamilton moved an amendment to the first clause; and in the course of the protracted debate Mr. Gladstone maintained the correctness of his figures, and argued that what happened under the Ulster right custom in Donegal was no criterion at all of what had occurred in counties where the Ulster right did not obtain. In the end, Lord George Hamilton withdrew his amendment. Mr. Gladstone thereafter roused the opposition of Mr. Parnell afresh by accepting Mr. Gibson's amendment limiting the application of the measure to tenancies let at £30 a year or under. An amendment of the right hon. gentleman, introduced to render unnecessary the amendment of the Attorney-General for Ireland, has likewise been much cavilled at. On Wednesday, after considerable discussion, and some wrangling on a point of order, the Committee divided upon an amendment to limit the operation of the bill to tenancies under £15, the number being for the amendment 154, against it 231.

Mr. Roundell yesterday week introduced his resolution declaring it expedient to remove clerical restrictions to any Oxford or Cambridge headship or fellowship; but withdrew it for a twelvemonth at Mr. Gladstone's request.

Some progress was made with the Civil Service Estimates on Monday, when Mr. Adam promised at last that better accommodation should be granted to the representatives of the Press, who have long borne their discomfort uncomplainingly.

It is stated that some of the Jesuits exiled from France intend to settle in Wales. They have leased the Corbet Arms Hotel, Aberdovey, Merionethshire, for twenty-one years. It is announced from Madrid that the French Jesuits have requested permission from the Spanish Government to establish a penitentiary colony in the Island of Fernando Po.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Bend Or difficulty seems no nearer elucidation than it did when we wrote last week. The Duke of Westminster has produced his stud-book before the Stewards of the Jockey Club, and the entries contained in it relative to Bend Or and Tadcaster certainly seem to favour the idea that the former is the son of Clémence and not of Rouge Rose. However, the entire book has been kept so irregularly, and the mistakes in it appear to be so numerous, that, after a long discussion, the Stewards did not feel justified in advising Messrs. Brewer and Blanton that they had good grounds for objecting to the winner of the Derby. These gentlemen have, therefore, no resource left but an appeal a court of law. We rather doubt if the matter will be carried to that length; for, as the entire onus of proof would rest with the plaintiffs, it will easily be understood that their case would not be a very strong one, especially as Sir Henry Hawkins—an honorary member of the Jockey Club—has given an unofficial opinion that the Eaton Hall stud-book would be practically worthless as evidence.

Strangely enough, Bend Or's great rival—Robert the Devil—furnished the sensation of the Newmarket July week. Of course, long odds were freely laid on him for the Midsummer Stakes, in which his only opponents were Merry-go-round, Pride of the Ocean, and Cipolata. The pace was wretched during the early part of the race; in fact, they only galloped in earnest for about a quarter of a mile, and Cipolata, getting the first run, managed to keep in front and win by half a length. This unexpected defeat has had little effect on "Robert's" status in the St. Leger quotations. He was conceding 11 lb. to a filly whose Ascot performance proved her to be a good one, and then he was doubtless short of work, while the way in which he succumbed to Apollo in the Craven Meeting shows that he is a colt who requires to be fully wound up to do himself justice. Charibert and Phénix ran a rattling race in the July Cup; and, though the former was in trouble some little distance from home, and was conceding 6 lb. to the speedy Frenchman, yet he eventually won by three parts of a length. After carrying off the Two Thousand, Charibert apparently lost all form, and, last autumn, had descended to the rank of a selling plater, yet he is now the fastest T.Y.C. horse in England.

Bookmakers had a terrible time of it on the Thursday, as favourite after favourite cantered home with the greatest regularity. Tristan proved an exception to the rule in the Chesterfield Stakes, as his penalty seemed to put him quite out of court; and Iroquois, who must be wonderfully improved, gained the easiest of victories. Lord Falmouth's pair—Lennoxlove and Golden Plover—never looked dangerous; but Voluptuary, who ran a dead-heat with Panique for second place, made a great advance on his previous essays, and really Newmarket air seems to have imparted a little much-needed galloping power to Lord Rosebery's horses. It was quite refreshing to see Mr. Savile win a race of any description, though, early last season, Marc Antony gave promise of doing far better things than winning insignificant welter handicaps; and the easy victory of Edelweiss over three miles and a half impressed many people with the idea that he will prove the best of Mr. Crawfurd's string in the Goodwood Stakes. The results of the various events on the last day were as adverse to backers as those of the Thursday had been in their favour; but, though several of the fields were large, there was nothing during the day that calls for comment.

The Liverpool July Meeting can hardly be pronounced a success, as a wretched acceptance for the chief handicap has been followed by the elimination of several animals that were considered to be certain starters, and the fields for several of the other races have dwindled down in the same unfortunate manner. The only feature of special interest on Tuesday was the appearance of Teviotdale, who made short work of Lady of the Lake and Emperor Titus in the St. George's Stakes. Fordham, who has now taken a decided lead in the list of winning jockeys, was successful three times during the day. On Wednesday, odds of 9 to 4 were laid on Angelina for the Gerard Stakes; but she seems to be losing her form, and could not give 3 lb. to Eos, a good-looking daughter of Prince Charlie, whose stock can generally go pretty fast. Backers will not soon forget the Liverpool Cup, for, when favourite after favourite had been scratched, and left the way apparently clear for Von der Tann (6 st. 11 lb.), he could not get in the first three, Blackthorn, Lindrick, and Misenus running home in the order named.

The depressed state of the blood-stock market was very perceptible all through the July week sales, and, though two or three exceptional yearlings made long prices, yet the majority went decidedly below their value, and a great many were sent out of the ring without provoking a single bid. Mr. Everett parted with eight of his select team, I Zingaro (630 gs.) being the only one that fetched a very remunerative price. He is by Pellegrino—Miss Lizzie, and is about the first representative of his young sire that has appeared in a sale ring. The Bonehill yearlings, though a wonderfully good lot, were completely sacrificed; and the same may be said of the contingent from Middle Park. Great things had naturally been expected of the half brothers to Blue Gown and Hermit, both by Scottish Chief, but they only realised 550 gs. and 530 gs. respectively, and were both knocked down to Tom Brown, the well-known trainer. The fourteen sold only averaged 180 gs. Mr. Chaplin's team invariably does well, and a duel between Robert Peck and Mr. Gretton ran up a beautiful filly by Hermit—Stray Shot to 1400 gs. before the trainer secured her. Others of the ten also made remunerative prices, and an average of 382 gs. is really grand in these hard times. The proprietors of the Yardley Stud had also no reason to complain; for, though no one would give the reserve price of 2000 gs. for an own brother to Isonomy, yet a colt by Sterling—Siluria (1500 gs.), a colt by Sterling—Thalia (980 gs.), and a colt by Blandford—Gretna (620 gs.), all did well, and the capital average of 345 gs. for thirteen was reached.

The Metropolitan Amateur Regatta, which was brought off on Monday last, seemed to possess few attractions to any but members of the various rowing clubs, and the spectators on the towing-path could almost be counted by tens. The Thames R.C. almost made a clean sweep of the prizes, the members of that club taking the Champion Challenge, the Metropolitan, and the Thames Cups, and the Champion Pairs. There was only a poor entry—as regards quality—for the Senior Sculls, in which W. A. D. Evanson (London R.C.) proved the winner. Lord Londesborough presented the prizes.

What may be termed the "picnic" aspect of the Eton and Harrow match was treated so fully last week that we need only allude to the "business" portion of the game. In spite of their very dubious victory over Winchester, the Etonians were strong favourites before play began; but they had all the worst of the weather, and, in their second innings, were set the wellnigh hopeless task of making 184 runs on a wicket soddened by rain. In this they failed signally, and, thanks mainly to the fine bowling of Lucas, who, altogether, took nine wickets for 67 runs, the Harrow team won by 95. No very large scores were made on either side, but we must note that De Paravicini, the Eton captain, got rid of twelve men at an expense of 92 runs. We append the full score:—

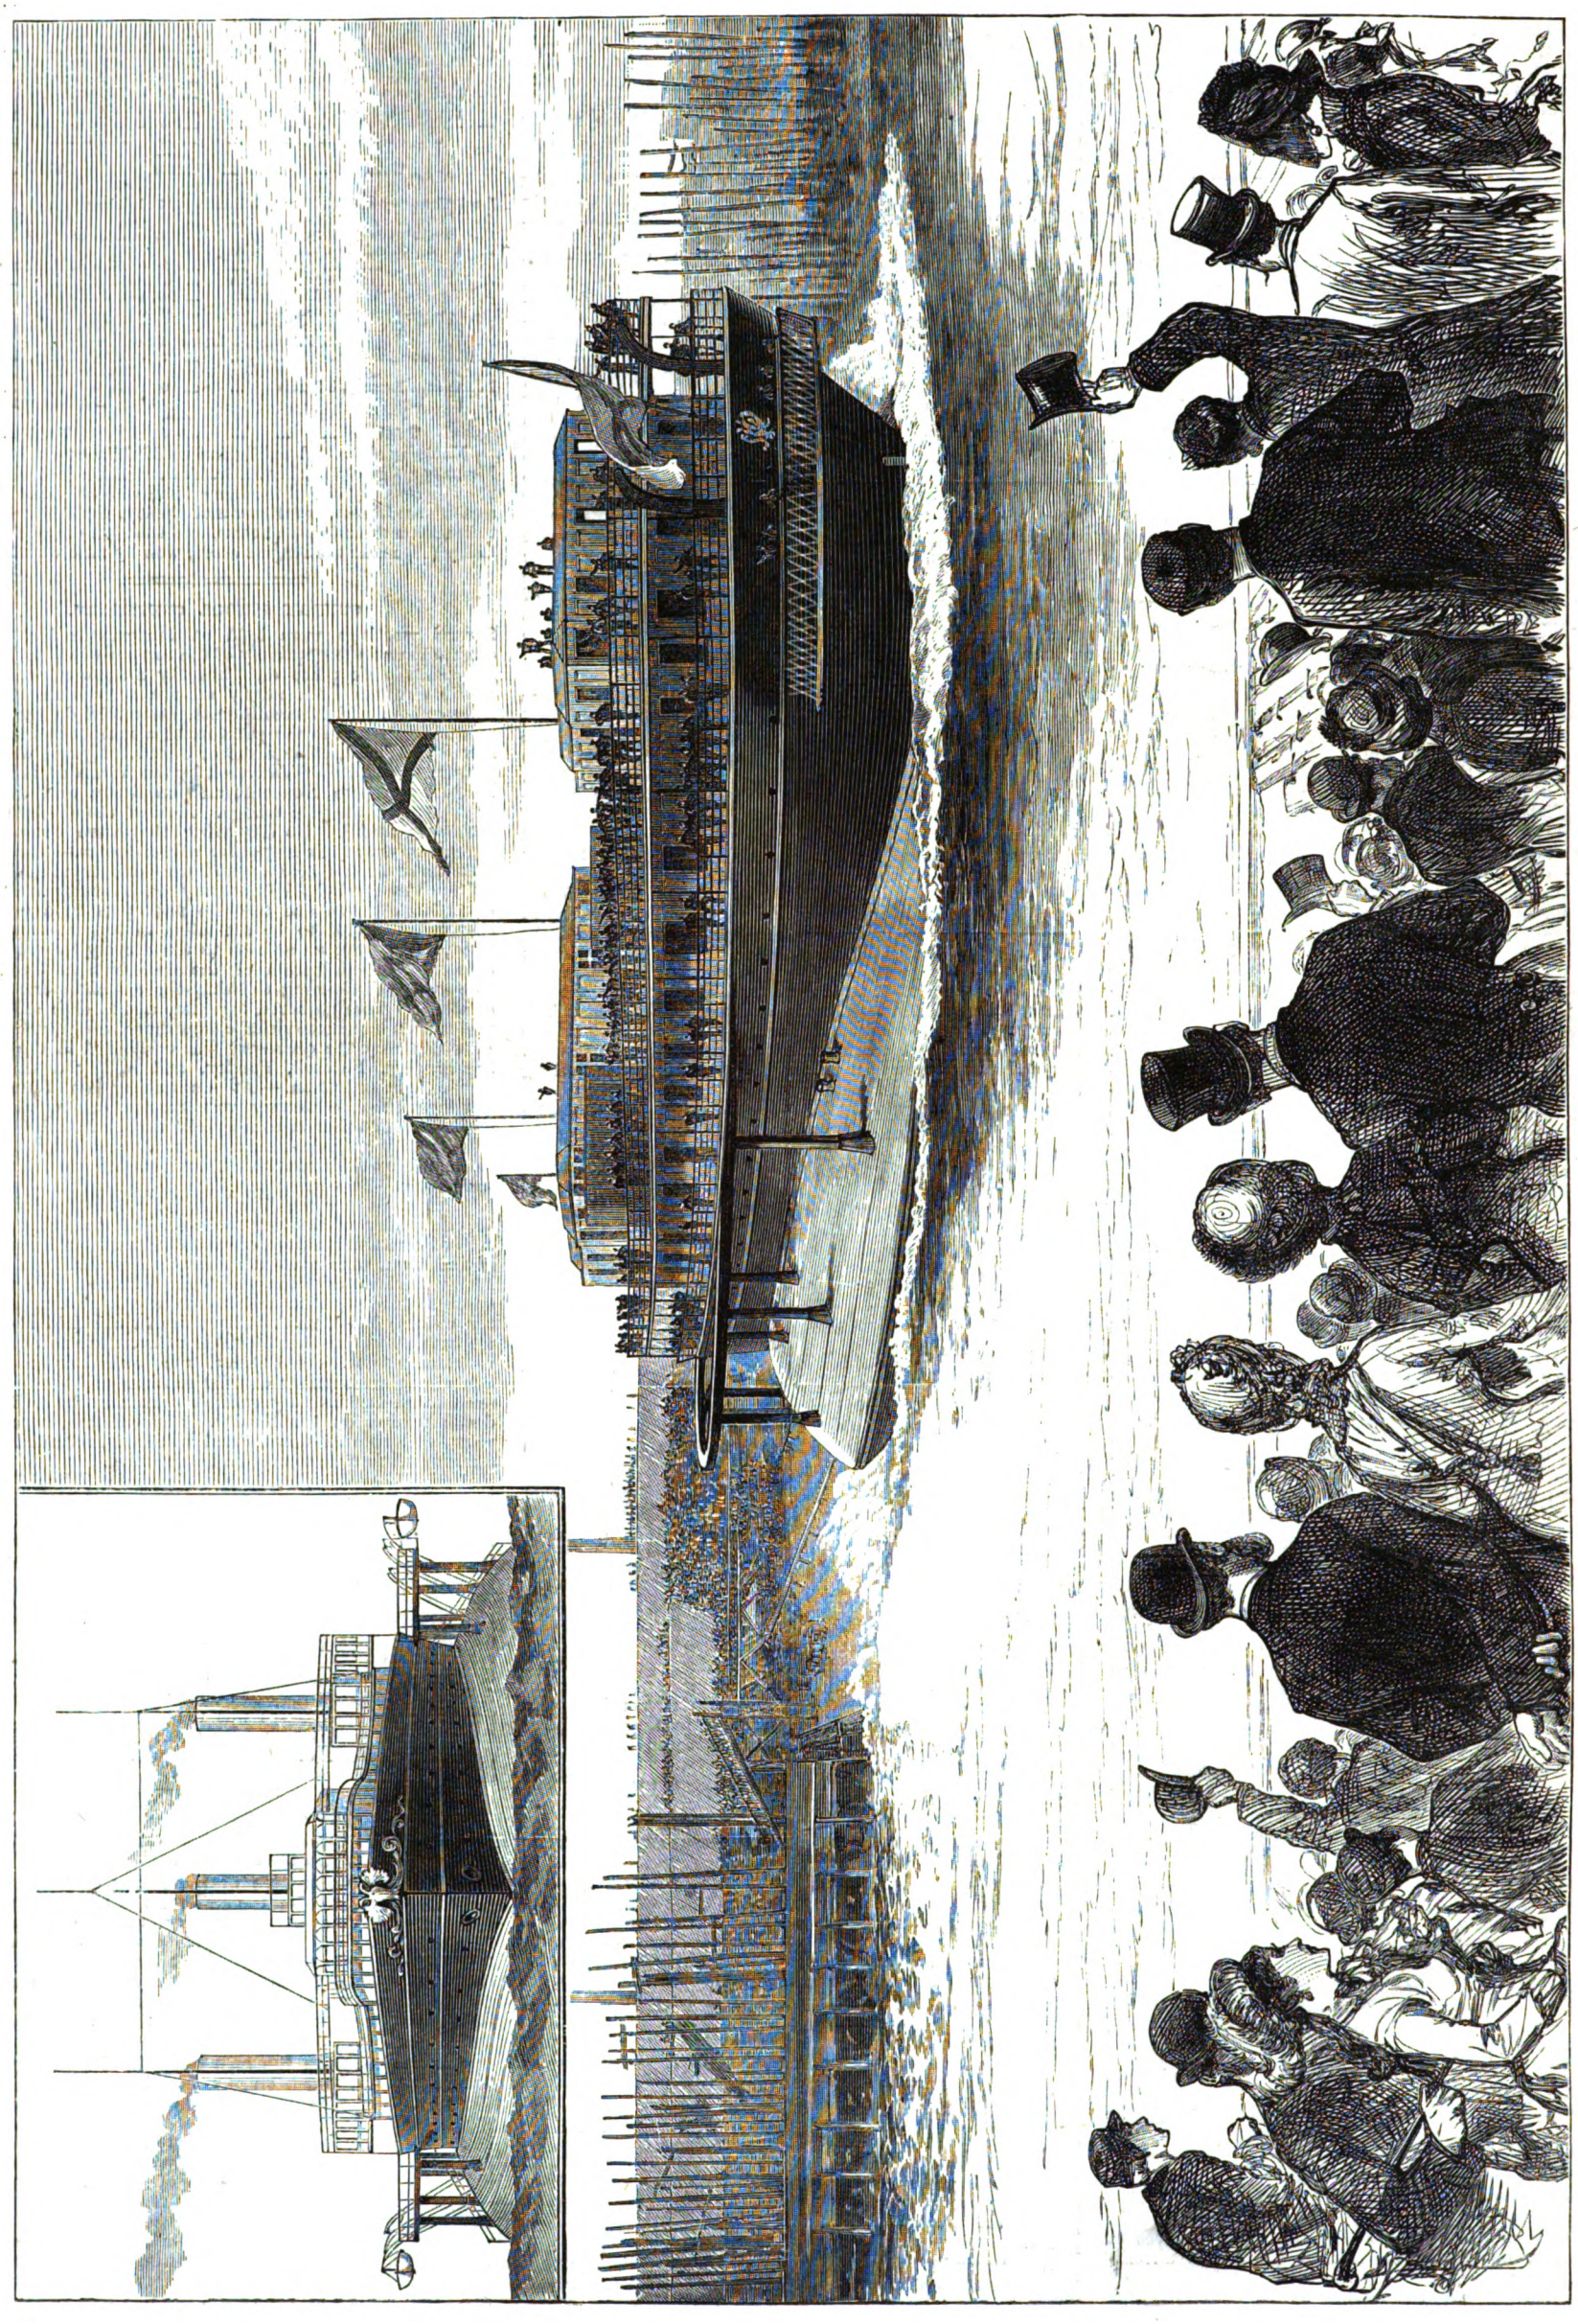
Notts made a sad exhibition of Middlesex at Lord's on Monday and Tuesday last. Mr. T. S. Pearson (not out, 24 and 24) was the only one of the home team who could do anything against the bowling of Shaw and Morley, the latter of whom took eleven wickets for 81 runs, and the Notts men, for whom Selby (28) made the longest score, won by nine wickets.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CENTENARY.

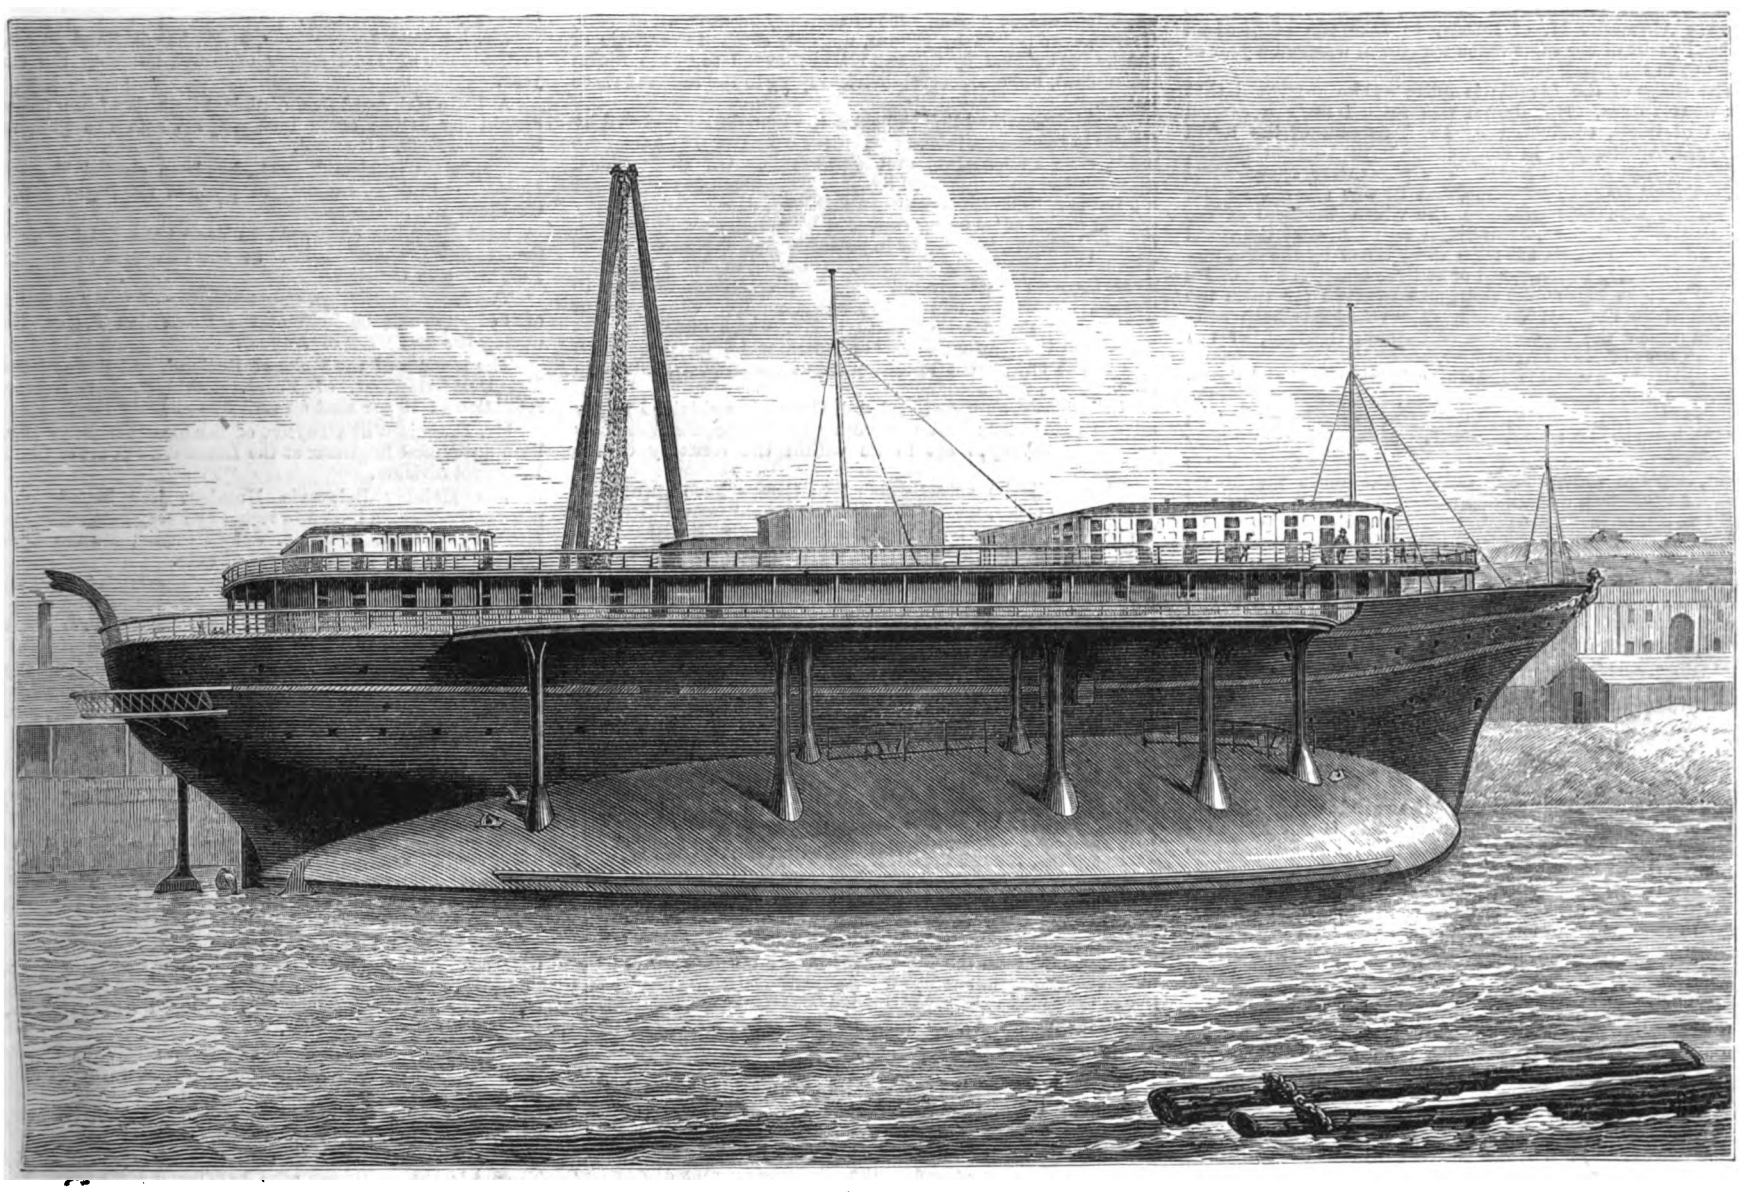
Several meetings were held at Portsmouth last week in celebration of the centenary of the Sunday Schools. The most important took place on Thursday afternoon, when about 13,000 children from nearly all the schools in the town, Episcopalian and Nonconformist, assembled on the military recreation-ground in the presence of a multitude numbering, it was estimated, little short of 50,000. Hymns were sung, prayers and addresses delivered by the Vicars of Portsmouth and Portsea, two Nonconformist ministers and the Mayor taking part in the proceedings. Most of the children wore a centenary medal. On dispersing they were entertained in various ways in their respective school-rooms.—The Nonconformists of Bristol held a grand demonstration in celebration of the Sunday School Centenary on Thursday. Upwards of 18,000 children and teachers took part in a great procession, estimated to be six miles in length.—Sir Charles Reed, M.P., gave an address to the Sunday School children of Leeds, in celebration of the Sunday School centenary. The children belonging to thirty-three Nonconformist places of worship were gathered together, and to each scholar was presented a handsome medal commemorative of the occasion.—Last Saturday the centenary was celebrated in the Pudsey, Stanningley, Fulneck, Farsley, and Rodley districts by a public demonstration.—At Canterbury on Sunday the Sunday School centenary was further celebrated by the attendance of scholars at a special service in the Cathedral. The juvenile congregation, which numbered about 1400, was addressed by the Dean, and hymns suitable to the occasion were sung.—Two great meetings were held in Sheffield on Monday night in connection with the Sheffield celebration of the centenary of Sunday Schools. It was estimated that 6000 officers and teachers, representing all the religious bodies in the town, were present in the two separate halls. The Mayor presided over the principal gathering, and the chief speakers were the Ven. Archdeacon Blunt, Pasteur Cook, and Sir Charles Reed, M.P. There are in Sheffield about 8000 teachers, and more than 50,000 scholars. The meetings were very successful.—At Chester, the United Nonconformist Schools, to the number of 4000 scholars and teachers, commemorated last Monday Raikes's centenary by an imposing demonstration on the Roodee. The children, who carried pretty bouquets of flowers and bannerets, returned to their schools just in time to avoid a heavy storm.



On Tuesday the celebration of the Sunday School Centenary took place at Hartlepool. There was a procession of Sunday schools to the number of 2000, and an aggregate gathering for tea at the market, followed by assemblies of scholars and friends at the respective schools, weather not allowing an outdoor gathering. At West Hartlepool a conference of ministers and teachers was held, and a paper read on "Sunday Schools and Modern Thought" by the Rev. H. Mann. In the evening a large public meeting was held, and a procession of scholars took place on Wednesday.—About 9000 school children and teachers paraded the streets of Coventry on Tuesday, in celebration of the centenary of Sunday Schools. An interesting feature in the proceedings was the planting by the Mayor of the city of a Raikes centenary tree. The 9000 children subsequently partook of tea, which was provided by public subscription.

On Tuesday the annual festival of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union was held at the Crystal Palace, when 61,500 visitors passed the turnstiles.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons have passed the preamble of the Bill for the construction of the Inner Circle Completion Railway between Aldgate and Mansion House stations, and have granted powers to enable the two companies to underpin or burrow beneath the houses and streets, giving compensation only in those cases where the basements of the premises are interfered with. The Committee, however, recommend that these powers of burrowing should be cautiously exercised.



The inquest upon the men killed by the gas explosion in Tottenham-court-road, on the 5th inst., was concluded on Tuesday. The jury found that the accident was caused by a light being applied to a pipe leading to a new main, which contained gas owing to some defect in the valve in Howland street. They recommended that more care should be taken in testing new mains. At a meeting of the St. Pancras Vestry on Monday night, a report was read from the special sub-committee appointed to investigate the effects of the explosion, in which it was stated that the Chartered Gas Company had undertaken, without, however, admitting their legal liability, to make good all damages to the roads, sewers, and other property under the control of the vestry. It was also stated that the company with the same reservation, would, make good all injuries to private property.—Early on Tuesday morning a gas explosion similar in character took place at Bilston, near Wolverhampton, but fortunately without such grave consequences. Later in the day a second explosion occurred in which several persons were hurt.

THE RUSSIAN IMPERIAL STEAM-YACHT.

An extraordinary novelty in shipbuilding was ushered into the world last week at the building yard of Messrs. John Elder and Co., Govan, on the Clyde, just below Glasgow. This was the great new steam-yacht Livadia, constructed for the Emperor Alexander II. of Russia, to take the place of an Imperial yacht of the same name which was wrecked a year or two since in the Black Sea.

The shape of the Livadia is quite unlike any vessel that ever went to sea. Her design was settled after a careful system of trials, conducted by Dr. Tideman, of the Royal Dockyard, Amsterdam, in conjunction with Admiral Popoff, of the Imperial Russian Navy. The plans were approved of by the Grand Duke Constantine, and he was assured by Mr. W. Pearce, who now conducts the whole business of the firm still called Messrs. John Elder and Co., that the vessel could be constructed on the form determined by the Amsterdam experiments, with a speed of at least fourteen knots. He laid the designs before the Czar, and received for them the sanction of his Imperial Majesty. The vessel has been constructed under the supervision of Captain Goulaeff, of the Russian Corps of Naval Architects.

The hull of the vessel is something between oval and rhomboid, or rather in the shape of a turbot; at the widest part the breadth is 153 feet, more than three fifths of the length, which is 235 feet. There is a pointed bow or beak, and an obtusely pointed stern. The depth of the fish-like raft in the centre is 18 feet, and the water-line is only 6 feet above the lowest point. At the stern a small depression, making a draught of 16 feet in all, is made, to give the screws water to work in. There is no freeboard, and stability is given by breadth and weight. There are three keels, one in the centre, the others placed 18 ft. to right and left of the central keel. The bottom has a flat area of 14,500 square feet. At the edges the surface trends out and upwards, all round the ship, toward the water-line. But as soon as the ordinary water-line is reached a change is made in the direction of the curves. The outward slope is succeeded by a slope inwards, which continues till the perpendicular depth of 20 feet has been given to the substructure. It gradually rises to this all round. In the middle of the back of the fish there is a wide flat space of about 15,000 square feet. This supports a floating marine palace, which rises 40 ft. above the water.

The turbot-like lower portion of the vessel is built of steel, with a double bottom, the height of which is not less than 3 ft. 6 in. in the centre. The double bottom is divided into forty water-tight compartments, throughout the flat portion. At the sides it is superseded by the cells formed by running two vertical bulkheads round the ship, subdividing the space between the middle and the outside skin into forty other compartments. These side cells, formed of continuous bulkheads, and covered by the plating of the rounded deck, present a very rigid, continuous, annular structure, which has its lower points tied together by the radial girders, forming the bracket framing of the bottom, and by the heavy beams of the rounded deck, also radial, at the top. Thus the lower portion of the vessel is made strong enough to withstand the roughest seas.

The turbot-like lower part of the vessel contains machinery, coals, and stores of all kinds. The steel superstructure, in its main portion, contains accommodation for the crew forward and the officers aft, while the palace above its deck includes the Imperial apartments and the cabins for the suite.

Around the deck of the main superstructure, outside the palace erected upon this deck, runs a continuous gallery, which is used for stowing anchors, mooring the vessel, hoisting up boats, steam-launches, and a small steam-yacht carried on the davits, supported by bridges projecting outwards. The roof of the palace is carried to the same width as the main superstructure, over the gallery, shading from sun or rain the lower story of the palace, and widening the open promenade above.

The apartments for the Emperor and the suite might compare with those in some palaces on land. Beyond the promenade, on the awning deck, rises a reception saloon, the height of which is 12 ft. In its forward part is a fountain, surrounded by a bed of flowers. The splendid decorative work of this saloon reminds us of the rooms of Louis XVI. at Fontainebleau. The drawing-room is furnished in Crimean-Russian style, while other rooms are of a simple kind of modern English, regard being had to obtain the greatest comfort. Behind the funnels, on the same awning deck, stands another deck-house, including rooms for the Grand Duke Constantine and the captain of the ship.

The Livadia's gross burden is 7700 tons, and her displacement with coals on board for five days is 3920 tons, while her tonnage, according to yacht measurement, is no less than 11,600 tons. The vessel has three screw-propellers, driven by three sets of engines, each having three cylinders, the diameters of which are, for the high pressure, 60 in., and for the low pressure 78 in., with a stroke of 3 ft. 3 in. The propellers themselves are of manganese bronze, each 16 ft. in diameter, placed 18 ft. apart, each driven by its own engine. The aggregate indicated horse power is 10,500, and the vessel is expected to make fourteen knots an hour. She will be manned by a crew of 260 men. The yacht will carry three swift steam-launches, two life-boats suspended at the edge of the raft, and other boats—eleven in all. Her construction is an experiment, and great interest has been taken in her by the chief of the Russian navy, the Grand Duke Constantine, eldest brother of the Czar.

We give an Illustration of the launch of the Livadia on Wednesday week, and one showing the vessel as she afterwards lay in Messrs. Elder's dock. The naming ceremony was gracefully performed by the Duchess of Hamilton, and the launch was witnessed by his Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Alexis, with Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky, Russian Ambassador, Prince Shahovskvy, and a large number of spectators. This vessel has been constructed with a rapidity which proves in a striking manner the extraordinary resources of the builders. Eight months ago the yacht existed only on paper; now it is well advanced, and in a short time will receive its engines. It should be observed that since November last Messrs. Elder and Co. have launched and completed four large steamers for the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, two steamers for the British and African Steam Navigation Company, and three vessels for the British Government.

THE NEW FRONTIER OF GREECE.

A view of Jannina or Yanina, the capital of Epirus, and one of Mount Olympus, to the north of Thessaly, were given in our last week's publication. It was explained that nearly all the territory of those two provinces, Epirus and Thessaly, situated north of the present Greek or Hellenic Kingdom from the Ionian Sea and Gulf of Arta, across to the Ægean or the Gulf of Salonica and Gulf of Volo, have been conceded to Greece, at the expense of the Turkish Empire, by the recent decision of the Berlin Conference.

The Map we now give, including Epirus and Thessaly, is intended to illustrate the discussions upon the new Turko-Greek boundary. The Berlin Congress of 1878 had vaguely indicated the rivers Kalamas and Salamvria (Peneus), the one tributary to the Ionian, the other to the Ægean Sea, as forming a suitable base for direct negotiations between the two Powers principally concerned. But while Turkey objected to yielding anything, except a small slice of territory on the Gulf of Volo, Greece, encouraged by France, not only claimed the whole of the basins drained by the two rivers referred to in the Berlin instrument, but also several districts lying to the north of those basins.

A thinly-marked line indicates the boundary suggested by Greece in December, 1879. It embraced a territory of 9400 square miles, with a population of 650,000 souls. On geographical grounds, the line suggested by Greece has much to recommend it; but it is to be supposed that the terms of the Berlin Treaty did not admit of its being conceded by the mediating Powers. Greece, however, is to be put in possession of Jannina, which lies within the basin of the Kalamas. Its lake, draining into that river through underground channels, has been allotted to Greece, but not the main road, which connects the capital of Epirus with the coast opposite Corfu. The district of the Zagori, on the Upper Vovussa or Viossa, which has been since 1850 in the enjoyment of autonomous institutions, is cut in twain by the new boundary.

In Thessaly, on the other hand, Greece has obtained nearly all she demanded; and the Valley of Tempe and the lofty ranges of Olympus are to lie within the territory of the Hellenes.

The territories actually ceded to Greece have an area of 8500 square miles, with about 535,000 inhabitants. This is a wonderful accession for a kingdom whose present extent does not exceed 20,000 square miles. Of these 535,000 inhabitants about 47,000, or 88 per cent, are Greek Christians, 60,000 are Mohammedans, and 4000 Jews. The population is not therefore so homogenous as prudent politicians might desire; but, for all practical purposes, there are few unable to converse in Greek.

In Thessaly, the fertile plains extending between Larissa, Pharsala, and Volo are almost wholly in the occupation of Turkish agriculturists. The ranges of the Pindus, which separate Thessaly from Epirus, are inhabited by Zinzars, Kutzo or Pindo Vlakhs, a Latin race akin to the Roumanians, and, like them, supposed to be the descendants of Roman legionaries. These Zinzars are not likely to prove troublesome. They are a thrifty people, who readily amalgamate with the Greeks.

In Epirus, though the Greeks are in a majority, there exists a strong Albanian element. The Mohammedan Albanians, not exceeding 15,000 in number, seem to be averse to being severed from their countrymen in the north; but not so the Christian Albanians. None fought more vigorously for Greek independence than the Albanian Suliotes. Greek is universally understood throughout Epirus. According to nationality, there live in the ceded territory about 366,000 Greeks, 80,000 Zinzars, 50,000 Albanians, 45,000 Turks, and 4000 Jews.

Dr. J. H. Gladstone, F.R.S., has presented £100 to the Research Fund of the Chemical Society.

Conspiracy, with premonitory symptoms of awful deeds to be done, had begun to throw its grim shadow more strongly than heretofore over the pages in the June number of Sunrise: by William Black (Sampson Low and Co.); and the story, as regards both the course of true love and the progress of more terrible events, increased in interest and in promise of exciting incidents. The scene was laid partly in Venice; and the city of gondolas, with its labyrinth of gloomy canals, its lapping waters, its bridges and archways, its sombre palaces, and its meetings of secret fraternities or of a secret fraternity, offered opportunities, which of course were not neglected, for some picturesque writing. The figure of Natalushka still dominated the whole; and how far gone, both politically and romantically, was the apparently phlegmatic Brand, might be gathered from the words in which she greeted him at the end of the number: "Brother, I welcome you." But she had not yet presented him with an elegant dagger having a handle of lapis lazuli, though "the Council" had sentenced a Cardinal to death, and somebody will have to do the deed. And in the July number conspiracy and love, hand in hand, still advance, assuming rather more definite shape and more striking colours. A Russian, thirsting for blood, appears from the banks of the Dnieper; and Brand, determined to declare his feelings, writes a letter to Natalushka.

HOME NEWS.

Her Majesty has conferred the honour of a Baronetcy on the Knight of Kerry, Mr. Fitzgerald.

Lord Houghton on Monday opened a new and handsome market-hall at Castleford, Yorkshire.

Mr. Edmund Dwyer Gray, M.P., has declined to continue in the office of Lord Mayor of Dublin during the ensuing year.

A little girl, aged five, died last Saturday from poisoning, caused by eating some buttercups which she gathered in Newsham Park, Liverpool.

Sir Julian Goldsmid, Bart., has been elected Treasurer of University College, London, in place of the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, M.P., who has resigned.

Lord Reay has consented to accept the presidency of the Social Science Association at the Congress to be held in Edinburgh in October.

The forty-sixth High Court meeting of the Ancient Order of Foresters will be held at the Exhibition Palace, Dublin, during the first week of August.

The tenants of the Duke of Rutland, and those of the late Mr. Dunn-Gardner, of Fordham Abbey, have received a reduction of 10 per cent on rent due at Lady Day.

Mr. Francis Willis Taylor, of the local Chancery Bar, has been appointed Registrar of the Lancashire Court of Chancery, Liverpool division.

The Holiday Belgravia Number, just issued, contains pleasantly-written tales and verses by Percy Fitzgerald, Marian Hepworth Dixon, F. Boyle, James Payne, Dutton Cook, B. M. Ranking, and other authors of note.

Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, accompanied by Colonel Bray and the Hon. C. Byng, inspected the troops at Dorchester on Monday. The field movements, Prince Edward said, were satisfactorily executed.

There have been severe thunderstorms throughout the past week, especially in the north of England. On Tuesday a thunderstorm of great violence burst over Manchester, resulting in loss of life and destruction of property.

There will be an evening fête in the gardens of the Royal Horticultural Society next Wednesday at eight. The bands of the 2nd Life Guards and Royal Horse Guards (Blues) will perform, and the gardens will be illuminated.

One of the largest rose shows ever held was opened last Saturday in the great hall of the Alexandra Palace, and continued open up to Friday evening this week. The number of cut blooms exceeded sixteen thousand; and as they went off daily their places were taken by fresh supplies.

Damages, laid at £1000, were claimed in an action for breach of promise of marriage at the Oxford Assizes, the plaintiff being the daughter of a farmer, and the defendant a farmer of Finstock. The jury awarded £400 damages, but the Judge stayed execution.

The Trustees of the British Museum received a deputation from the Sunday Society last Saturday, in favour of opening the British Museum on Sunday. Earl Sydney, in replying to the deputation, said the Trustees could not grant their request without referring the matter to the Treasury.

The Birmingham Gazette says that Mr. Councillor Richard Tangye is the gentleman who has bought Mr. John Bragg's collection of Wedgwood ware for presentation to the Corporation Art Gallery. This gift follows upon the offer of £10,000 made by this firm towards the formation of an Art Gallery.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the first week in July was 83,219, of whom 46,163 were in workhouses, and 37,056 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 860, of whom 683 were men, 156 women, and 23 children under sixteen.

A Bluebook recently issued shows that the estimated number of children of school age in Scotland in 1878 was 645,076, whilst the number of school places was 685,098, or 40,022 places more than there were children. The number of public schools was 2503; of non-public State aided schools, 605; of efficient elementary schools, 508; and of higher-class public schools, 17.

A mass meeting of the agricultural labourers of Kent and Sussex was held on Monday in the recreation grounds, Chatham. Upwards of 30,000 adults and children, with thirty brass bands, were present. Mr. Burt, M.P., and Mr. Broadhurst M.P., gave political addresses, and resolutions asking Parliament to pass a County Franchise Bill were carried by acclamation.

The fourteenth annual flower show in connection with the Society for Promoting Window Gardening amongst the working classes in the united parishes of St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster, was held on the 8th inst., by permission of Dean Stanley, in the college garden, Great College-street. There was a large attendance, and amongst those present were Lord Shaftesbury, Sir Thomas Gladstone, Dean Stanley, and Lady Frances Bailey.

On Tuesday afternoon the Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley presented the prizes to the successful pupils of the London School of Medicine for Women. Mr. A. T. Norton, Dean of the schools, made a statement which showed that the institution had progressed satisfactorily during the past year. Amongst those awarded prizes was Miss Kenealy, daughter of the late Dr. Kenealy, who took the first prize in forensic medicine, first prize in midwifery, and a certificate in pathology.

There were 2510 births and 1326 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 136, whereas the deaths were 81 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 37 from measles, 62 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 30 from whooping-cough, 16 from different forms of fever, and 93 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 251 deaths were referred, against 189 and 227 in the two preceding weeks. These 251 deaths were 49 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 3136 births and 1530 deaths were registered.

The celebration of the granting of the charter of Victoria University began on Tuesday evening in Manchester, when a soirée was held at Owens College. It was given by the Court of Governors and the Senate, and the guests were invited to meet the Duke of Devonshire, the Chancellor, and the members of the University Court. Most of the 2000 invitations sent out were accepted. The whole college was open to visitors and a collection of scientific and other objects and pictures was on view. At noon on Wednesday the first meeting of the University Court was held in Owens College, the Duke of Devonshire presiding. In the afternoon the Mayor presented on behalf of the Corporation a congratulatory address to the members of the Court. Afterwards the Mayor entertained some 340 guests at a banquet in the Townhall.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF BELGIAN INDEPENDENCE.

The programme of the festivities which are to be held this summer to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the independence of Belgium has been published. The whole celebration will occupy nearly two months, and the following is the list of events:—

At Brussels, July 18, military fête, review of the civic guard and the army; 20th, national Rifle meeting; 21st, inauguration of the monument to King Leopold I.; 22nd, horticultural exhibition; 22nd, 23rd, and 24th, musical festival; 23rd to 26th, Botanical and Horticultural Congress.

At Namur, July 25, international regatta on the Meuse.

At Brussels, Aug. 1, inauguration of the Palace of Fine Arts and opening of the Historical Exhibition of Belgian Art; 2nd to 7th, Congress for the Study of Questions relating to Alcoholism; 8th and 9th, competition in chant d'ensemble.

At Namur, Aug. 8, night fête in the Parc de la Plante.

At Ghent, Aug. 15, opening of the Fine-Art Exhibition.

At Brussels, Aug. 12 to 16, Belgian Literary Congress; 15th, horse-races; 16th, patriotic fête and illuminations and fireworks; 17th, gymnastic and artistic fêtes; 18th, Cavalcade, concert and illuminations in the Grand Place; 19th, popular fêtes and horse-races.

At Antwerp, Aug. 21, reception of Belgian and foreign civic guards, inauguration of new rifle-shooting établissement and international competition, performance of a grand jubilee cantata by P. Benoît, grand military retreat; 22nd, international festival d'harmonies et de fanfares; 23rd, inauguration of new maritime établissements, international regatta on the Scheldt, and illuminations; 24th, grand nocturnal Venetian fête on the Scheldt, with fireworks; 29th, horse-races.

At Brussels, Aug. 22, Belgian Congress on Intermediate Education; 23rd to 29th, International Congress on Education; 29th, Medical Congress; Sept. 2 to 5, Belgian Congress on Primary Education.

At Namur, Aug. 29, musical fête at the theatre; Sept. 5, international festival d'harmonies, fanfares et chant d'ensemble; 12th, grand Venetian fête on the Meuse.

There is to be, in addition, a national exhibition at Brussels of industry, horticulture, agriculture, and ancient artistic industries, and this will remain open till Oct. 15.

The grant made by the Canadian Government towards the alleviation of Irish distress, which is being devoted towards permanently ameliorating the condition of the Irish fishermen, has been allocated to the extent of £18,671—viz., for fishing material, £8110; for piers, £10,341; and for boat-slips, £220.

Mr. F. A. Inderwick, Q.C., M.P., presented the prizes last Saturday to the successful candidates at the Cambridge Local Examination lately held at the Hastings centre. It was, in his opinion, in consequence of the feeling which was brought about by these examinations that Mr. Forster was enabled to bring forward his scheme for the education of the poor classes.

FOUR CENTURIES OF ENGLISH LETTERS. A Selection of 350 Letters by 150 Writers, from the period of the Paston Letters to the Present Time. Edited and Arranged by W. BAPTISTE SCOONES. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

"No one who takes the slightest interest in English history, English literature, or in human nature can fail to receive increase of delight from the perusal of this volume. . . . Mr. Scoones' editorial apparatus is excellently calculated to assist the enjoyment of a singularly enjoyable book—a book that Chesterfield would, we think, have included among his ideal books for spare half hours."—Pall-Mall Gazette.

"A rarely happy combination of the interesting and the valuable. Whether it be regarded as typical of individual character, or as displaying the manners of past times, the collection is admirable. The author has shown an excellent discrimination, whilst the little head-notes, which serve to introduce and explain the letters, are models of perspicuity. All is good; and Mr. Scoones has given us the most attractive literary treasure-house whose riches have been unlocked to us for many a long day."—World.

EPPS'S COCOA. GRATEFUL and COMFORTING. "By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. METZLER'S AMERICAN ORGUINETTE (as supplied to H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice).
The American Orguinette is a musical instrument, constructed somewhat on the principle of the American Organ, and adapted to be automatically worked by simple strips of perforated paper, each strip representing one or more tunes. There is no limit to either kind or quantity of music. It will play hymn tunes, popular airs, sets of quadrilles, polkas, waltzes reels and hornpipes, with a clearness, accuracy, and degree of execution which but few performers can equal. A mere child can play it.
Style A, with Six Pieces of Music, price £1 10s.
Style E, with Six Pieces of Music and Attachment, price £3 10s.
Cabinet Style, with Selection of Music, price 10 guineas.
Any description of Music from 9d. a tune.

THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects in
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

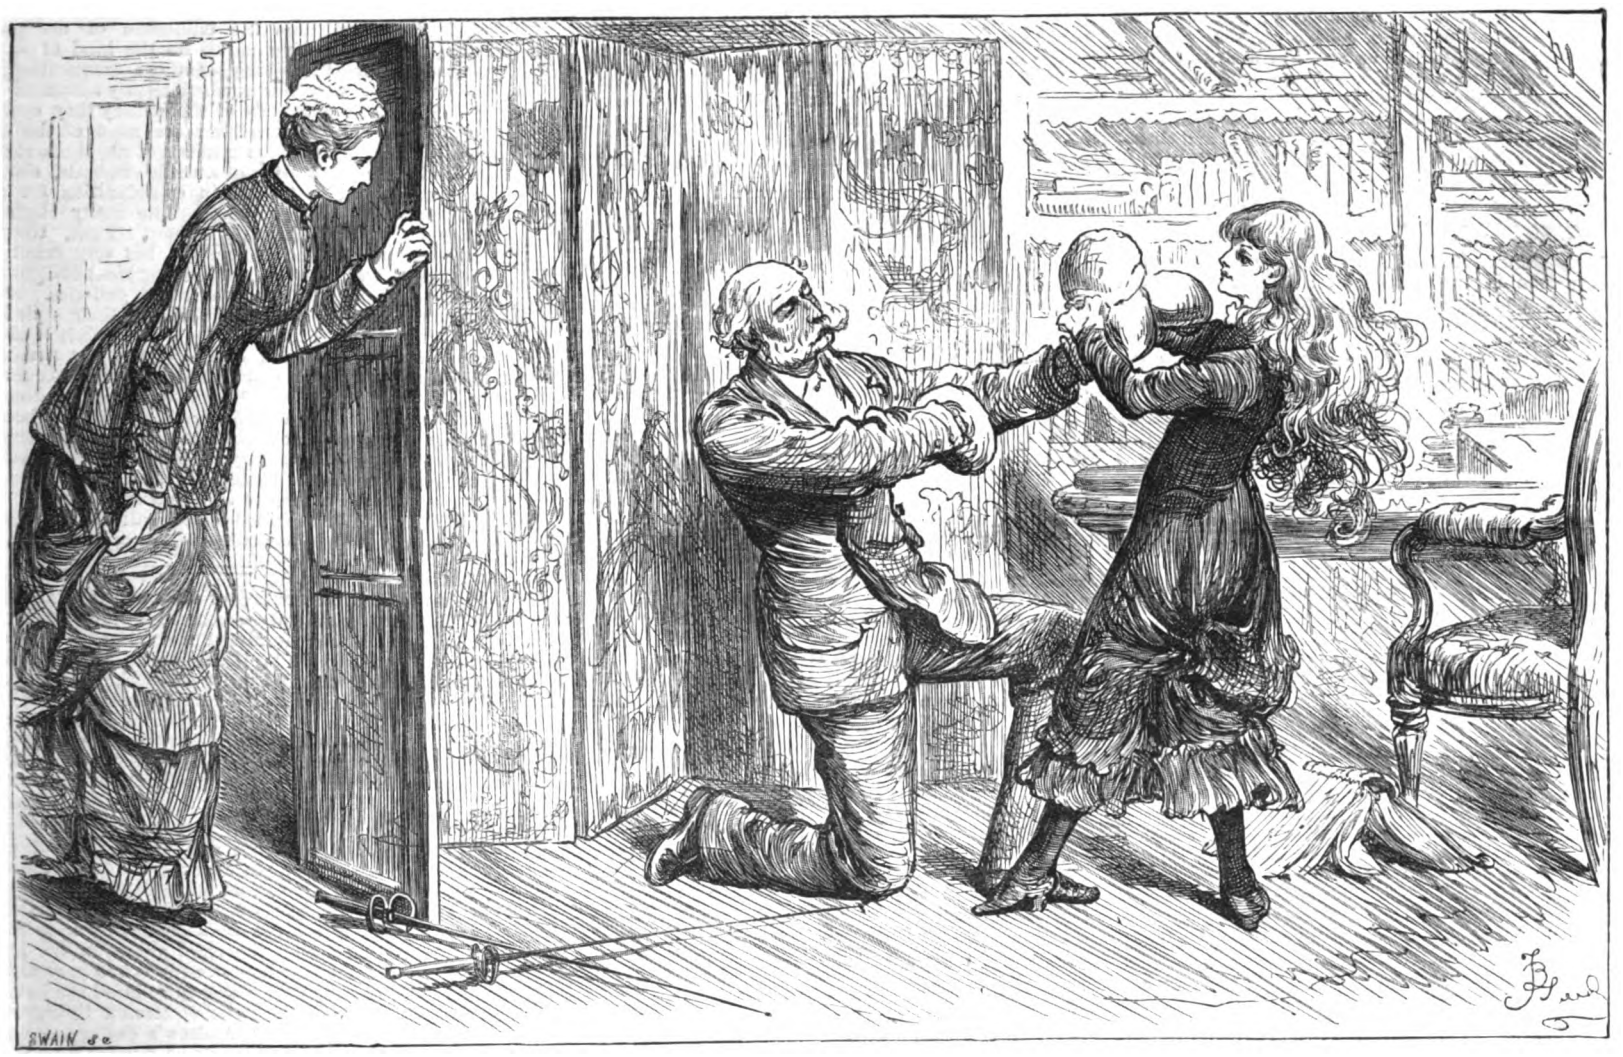
PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT ARTFUL VICAR."

No. IX.—THE FAVOURITE DAUGHTER.

Colonel Morton was an Indian soldier who had attained some distinction. He was a Companion of the Bath; and although honours are sometimes bestowed in the neighbourhood of Courts on small pretence or upon none, our Indian officers who win the ribbon are perhaps among the most meritorious body of men in the world. And if to be brave and kindly, loyal and true, are qualities which merit the recognition of authority, the Colonel deserved the reward he had received, and more. He had married early in life and had several children, which had perhaps given a manly gravity to his character when other young Captains of his age were over busy with brandy-pawnee and games of hazard. Certain it is that his home was cited as one of the pleasantest and best-kept houses in Madras, when first his wife sickened, then his children. The climate of India was not so well understood at that time as it is now; and Mrs. Morton was ordered home by the local physician most experienced in such cases. "You will never rear a family here," remarked the Doctor, who was frequently consulted in such emergencies; "the climate is unfavourable to the health and vigour of the English race in the second generation. Native air is the only remedy known to science, and it must be taken as soon as the mischief begins. I had to send my wife home last year; the best advice I can give you is to follow my example."

So Mrs. Morton, after some struggles with her love and pride, had to leave her husband, as other ladies have done before and since, with a sore heart. But there was no help for it; the brave and loving woman remained at her post, and smiled at her own danger, so that she could stay by his side who was more than life to her. Then nature gave way, and broke down utterly. She and her children were pale and thin as phantoms when they stepped on board the great ship, which was flying the blue-peter, accompanied by the sad-faced Major of Cavalry in undress uniform. He watched them with straining eyes, as they stood on deck waving scarf and kerchief to him, and the big steamer went out to sea. They had taken his heart away with them.



Mrs. Morton settled on the pleasant coast of Hampshire; partly to be in the neighbourhood of some rich kinsfolk from whom she had expectancies; and partly because her wifely fancy made her think that she was nearer him, so long as she remained by the sea and ready to return should he recall her, or did one whisper reach her that she was needed near him.

It was long before she rallied, and the roses came back to the sweet English faces of her little ones. Her husband could not afford to throw up his commission, which had cost him half his fortune; he could not go on half pay either with any prudence, or ask for leave while there was war on the frontier, and his regiment was ordered on active duty. So the honest gentleman served out the usual term of service, got his Colonelcy in due course, and was handsomely dealt with by John Company—a kinder master, it is said, than his successor.

When the Colonel arrived at Southampton, however, with all his honours thick upon him, he was a good deal altered. His stalwart military figure had not run into bulk, and had the same gallant cavalier look as when he rode with Havelock and Beatson on his first campaigns. But his hair, which had been black, was now of iron grey; his comely face had grown more stern, and his voice had the metallic ring in it of one accustomed to command. In truth, the Colonel was forty-six and looked fifty. Hard service and rough diet had done their work upon him. Barrack life is not all rose-colour.

About a year after Mrs. Morton had welcomed her husband to the Hampshire home she had made around her, another daughter was born to them. She was born at daybreak on a May morning, and the happy father, who was not wanting in poetic instinct, at once gave her the name of Aurora.

She was a frail, delicate child, with wondering blue eyes, and a transparent complexion faintly warmed by auburn hair, of the rich golden tint which looked as though a sunbeam played amongst its silken curls. Her fragile life appeared to hang upon a thread for years, and it was a touching sight to see the hard old soldier of a hundred battle-fields watching the feeble gambols of his little girl and rocking her to sleep in his strong arms when she tired, which was very soon. He could hardly bear to be apart from her, and carried her about at his saddle-bow when he rode along the Hampshire lanes. He had her beside him playing on a carpet when he fished for trout. He took her into the fields where his hay was making. He went gardening and boating on his lake with her. He was never tired of her pretty prattle, and by-and-by they began to romp together. The child's limbs developed into plumpness and vigour, till by the time she was ten years old she had become a wild, beautiful hoyden, full of high spirits and wilfulness. She could ride, she could sing, she could dance, and was ready for all kinds of fun and frolic. At twelve she could have commanded a troop of horse, and knew more of military tactics from the Colonel's talk than many a promising boy at Sandhurst. But her grand climax was reached when Mrs. Morton, suspecting with a woman's intuition that they were too quiet to be up to much good, stole in upon the pair one afternoon and surprised the Colonel on one knee behind a screen in the library teaching his pupil the noble art of self-defence. She had hit out, too, so straight from the shoulder that his face resembled the family plum dumpling which had been served for tiffin.

That night Mrs. Morton gave her husband a curtain lecture, and, after nearly choking him with kisses and laughter, formally took her daughter's education out of his hands. These good people were all of soldierly tastes, and loved pluck and spirit even in women. Mrs. Morton had allowed drill and fencing, and the broad-sword exercise, which might be good for the chest. She had looked on from her summer-house while the Colonel showed Aurora the proper management of the lance on charging infantry, and had smiled as Missy spitted poppy-heads in the hedges round the paddock with unerring precision. But when it came to boxing-lessons, she thought that even an officer's wife might be excused for being of opinion that physical development in this direction had gone far enough.

Aurora was then about the age when a girl begins to grow shy, and clings closer to her mother; so she became a prim and praiseworthy little Miss for several years, making progress in feminine ethics and deportment in a demure, docile way that was quite refreshing. The young witch had an inborn faculty of charming. All she did had a natural grace and winsomeness. She showed as great a taste for the accomplishments of young ladies as she had done for those of a different sort. She learned to dance, paint in water colour, to make cheeses before illustrious visitors, and to wield all the bright armoury of youth and loveliness as quickly and well as she had learned to ride and handle a hair-trigger; and though she would often say, "Mamma, I ought to have been my brother," she was a dainty young beauty indeed at seventeen. She possessed especially a remarkable talent for singing. There was an untaught melody in her voice which was almost amazing in an English girl. Her songs and her sweet, pretty whims and ways were enough to charm the heart of a cynic, and there was not a manor-house within twenty miles of Freshfields where she was not welcome as healthy weather.

In her own home she was light, she was joy. She gladdened the whole house—and ruled it. She kept her father's accounts and her mother's keys, being a shrewd little lady into the bargain; a soldier's daughter, who knew the fitness of things, also the price of them. Her brothers and sisters had married and gone out into the world, so that when the Colonel came home from India they were almost strangers to him; but Aurora had never been separated from him a day since her birth. She knew all the family affairs and interests and shortcomings from day to day. She knew of brother Tom's private allowance from his mother to pay off his Oxford debts, and of sister Mary's quarrel with sister Jane, and how it had to be kept secret from Aunt Hester for fear she should alter her will. There was also something about Jack, who was in the Navy, which she only knew herself; and, indeed, she was the most experienced person in the household, having much sound counsel in her, and might have seemed to a fanciful imagination, encircled in that sterling home love, like a fair jewel in a golden casket.

Her father's early training had taught her many of the plain truths of life. She could converse far better, and more reasonably as well, upon a greater variety of topics, than most young women. To her father she was what neither man nor woman could be but herself. She was his friend and yet his child, which is the tenderest of all connections that bind together human hearts. She knew all the strength and weaknesses of his character, which was by no means perfect. She governed but she obeyed him, and his unspoken wish was law to her proud and generous heart. He had accustomed her to military obedience of orders, and she would march off anywhere and everywhere at the word of command with amusing docility; for there was one thing which the Colonel could not bear, and that was opposition to his will. In the midst of her most wayward humours, and when she felt elate with all the royalty of her womanhood, she would not have angered him for the world. Perhaps part of the honeyed secret of the sympathy between them was that she had a true hero worship for the old soldier, and fought his campaigns over and over again with him with as much pleasure as he did. She knew how he had been mentioned in gazettes and despatches, and would tell with glistening eyes and bated breath the gallant story of how he had led a forlorn hope which saved a great city and won for him the Victoria Cross. Her language glowed with a poetry all her own when she spoke of her father's worth and courage. She treasured up his clasps and medals as of great price; his sword and sabretache were sacred in her eyes. As they talked together of sieges and of battles, of deeds of daring and of victory, she looked indeed the fairest vision that could smile on valour when its task was done.

Neither father nor mother could make up their minds to marry her, for they knew no one worthy of her hand; and her own heart never spoke, save in merry jests among the bumpkin squires of the county. Lord Mallowfield had sidled up to her at a wonderful ball she attended at Cowes; Mr. Dewdney, who owned the next parish, had been seen mooning about the lanes every time she rode out. But his Lordship was a robust widower who could only talk intelligibly of shorthorns; and Mr. Dewdney had a head of hair which seemed to be on fire. The Honourable and Reverend Mr. Mincyn Capre spoke, indeed, pleasantly enough of ecclesiastical architecture, having recently travelled over the grand old cities of Flanders, when he was appointed to a benefice within dining distance of the the Mortons. But he carried the practice of intoning into private life; and Miss Aurora, after trying some of her favourite canticles with him, unaccountably arrived at the conclusion that his intellectual standard was not high. This opinion was unquestionably erroneous, because the honourable and reverend gentleman, who must have known himself better than she could have known him, regarded his own mental stature with exceeding complacency; but she could not alter it. So things went on. One was dismissed with a smile, another with a sigh; but the girl made no choice till she was more than five-and-twenty, when her mother began to look grave. "Pooh, pooh," growled the Colonel, when his wife broached the subject; "'Queenie' can marry half England when she pleases." He would never allow treason to be spoken against his darling; and, indeed, he was constantly dodged about the covert side on hunting days by Aurora's admirers, who only waited a word of encouragement to declare themselves. Mrs. Morton was silenced, but not convinced, and she next spoke to the young lady herself; but her daughter only blushed a little, and declared that her home was too nice to run away from it."

"Humph," said her mother, drily.

About this time Miss Morton, who had been reading a great deal concerning artistic furniture, imbibed a taste for house decoration, and nothing would serve her but that the ceiling of her own room should be painted with an elaborate device of her own imagining. Her design was appropriate and well chosen, but far too complicated for any of the local workmen, so the Colonel wrote to one of the great firms in London to send down a special artist.

A few days afterwards there arrived a young artisan with the appearance of an Italian gentleman and the manners of good society. He spoke with a foreign accent, but he also spoke perfectly good English, and he was introduced to the Colonel as the most expert decorator known in the business. When the awkwardness of having so smart a labourer about the house had a little worn off, he was supplied with the necessary materials for his task, and then, day after day, might be seen lying on a sort of cradle he had made with ropes to a scaffolding set up in Miss Morton's private room. She had fully explained her plan to him, and she saw with delight that he was working it out with a brilliancy and elegance such as she had hardly dared to expect. Whenever she looked at his work as it went on she felt a new surprise and enchantment.

His name was Carmelo Williams, he said, for his mother only was Italian; and he was not offensively garrulous or obtrusive in any way. But he had dark lustrous eyes, and a soft caressing voice, which gave extraordinary expression and even pathos to his language. When he was alone he sang; sang with the marvellous melody which comes only of inborn genius.

Aurora listened, at first timidly and furtively, then entranced; then, Heaven knows, perhaps magnetised. It was beautiful summer weather. The rose and the lilac were ablossom and ablow, the scent of the lush woodbine came with an intoxicating odour through the windows, and those wondrous songs of the young painter made the air alive with music.

She fled with him before his task was over, and they were married. Married in Scotland, at a border village; and when the wilful thing was done the girl found, on her return to the inn where they had halted, a newspaper which told of her father's sudden and dangerous illness. The Colonel's anguish had, indeed, been terrible; and when he knew exactly what had happened he had fallen down as a stricken stag might do, and now hovered between life and death.

"I must go home at once," said the girl to her newly-made husband; and there was a decided ring in her voice which admitted of no dispute. "You must remain here, Sir, till I send for you or come to you."

The painter had no time to gasp out his astonishment, for before he could protest she was gone; and, taking the first train, she never stopped in her journey till she kneeled in her bridal dress, all disarranged, at her father's feet.

He had rallied partly; and he, with her mother, sat hand in hand, their faces very pale and wan. A big tear from the old soldier's eyes fell upon her forehead like molten fire.

"O papa! papa! she cried, in a very ecstacy of grief, "I am come home. I will never leave it again. I have married him because I knew he would never dare to contradict you!"

The annual meeting of the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain took place on the 8th inst., under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, at the Royal Institution, Albemarle-street. The annual address was delivered by Captain Douglas Galton, R.E., on Some Preventible Causes of Impurity in London Air. In the evening the anniversary dinner of the institute took place, Dr. B. W. Richardson in the chair.

The final arrangements for the Welsh National Eisteddfod, to be held at Carnarvon in the ensuing month, are being made. The gathering will be held in the Pavilion, a large permanent structure of glass and iron, capable of holding 7000 people. The bardic oak chair, a silver crown, and money prizes will be awarded to the successful competitors in the bardic and literary tournament. Silver medals, on which a sketch of Carnarvon Castle will be a prominent feature, will also be given in some instances. Sir Llewelyn Turner has granted the use of the castle in which to hold Gorsedd. Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, M.P., has consented to accept the presidency of one of the morning meetings. Major Cornwallis West, Lord Lieutenant of Denbighshire, has also consented to attend in a similar capacity. The Mayor of the town, Mr. Lewis Lewis, has given permission to the Cymrodorion Society to hold meetings in the Guildhall on the four days of the Eisteddfod, when Mr. Lewis Morris, M.A., author of the "Epic of Hades," will preside.

The fifth annual distribution of prizes to the pupil teachers of Westminster took place last Saturday at the Grosvenor Hall. The chair was occupied by Lord Hatherley. The report, which was read by Mr. W. H. Baker, showed that during the year the ordinary examinations had been held quarterly, fifty-seven males and 167 females having submitted themselves to the tests. Seventeen had been examined for the prizes for Latin and French offered by Mr. Matthew Arnold, one of her Majesty's inspectors of schools; but the prize for domestic economy had not been awarded. By the kindness of Baroness Burdett-Coutts, nineteen prizes had been given for needlework, as well as rewards for proficiency in religious knowledge. Her Ladyship had also invited the teachers to Holly Lodge; but the inclement weather preventing the visit, she provided them with a day's outing at the Alexandra Palace. In the unavoidable absence of Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Mrs. W. H. Smith presented the prizes to the successful competitors; and resolutions were subsequently passed recommending the scheme of the association to the consideration of the friends of education.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

A few comments should, it seems to us, be made in the public interest on the return (which we summarised last week) that has been made to the House of Lords of the resolutions passed by the trustees of the National Gallery on the question of keeping the Gallery open throughout the year and the admission of the public on "students' days." As might be expected, the trustees and director recommend that the system of closing the Gallery for several weeks in the autumn should be abandoned or greatly modified. This autumnal closing of the Gallery precisely when many persons residing in the provinces can only visit the metropolis, and when the main stream of Americans travelling to the Continent pass through London, was entirely indefensible; and one may wonder that, since the trustees have the power to take the initiative, this reform was not effected long since. Generally it may be observed that, considering merely what an enormous sum has been expended in providing the national collection, it is obviously false economy not to render the collection as widely and uninterruptedly available as possible. It is not to be supposed that the vote of a small increase of the annual grant, if this be necessary in order to provide a larger staff of assistants, would not be readily forthcoming. The Director, Mr. Burton, in the remarks he has added to the return, says he does not believe that any beneficial result would attend an extension of the hours of admission in summer. We submit, however, that there is a large number of professional and other persons engaged during the day in London who could only visit the gallery in the late afternoon or early morning.

The admission of the public on students' days might, the trustees object, be attended with injury to the collection, and would cause great inconvenience to the students. The director further observes that one of the two main objects in the formation of the National Gallery was to afford to professional students of painting a direct means of study and improvement. He says that the students need quiet for their work; that there would be a risk of accident to the pictures if the public were moving about among easels and other painting apparatus; that in foreign galleries there are neither so many students nor so many visitors as in our National Gallery; and that, as a matter of fact, the public would gain but little, as visitors to foreign galleries know, by being admitted when many pictures must necessarily be hidden from them by the easels. The students' days are utilised, too, for work which must be done by daylight, such as freeing the pictures from dust, &c., which could not be properly done with visitors present. For these and other reasons he strongly deprecates any change in regard to the reserved days. We cannot, however, but regret the Conservative spirit manifested by the trustees and director. Their nervous fears are surely needless, for the objections raised seem to us almost wholly imaginary, even in respect to the present arrangements as regards the students. At all events, any inconvenient influx of visitors might be easily regulated, if necessary—though we do not apprehend that it would be necessary—by making a small charge for admission on students' days, for this is proved to be perfectly effectual at the South Kensington Galleries. In the Louvre, as many copyists may be seen about a given picture as in our National Gallery on students' days, and we have never heard (although we have had frequent opportunities for doing so, if such were the fact) of any damage to a picture in the Louvre being made by a student's easel or otherwise. In regard to the public, probably not one picture in half a dozen, taking the whole collection, would be hidden from the visitor by the students' easels in Trafalgar-square. The objection that the dust could not be properly removed from the pictures if visitors were present is to us incomprehensible. The few men who leisurely rub over the canvases with silk handkerchiefs could perform their operations behind the rails as well under the gaze of visitors as of students.

But we have been assuming the desirability of always admitting as many students as hitherto. If, however, the number were limited to those really prepared and qualified for copying the old foreign and deceased British masters—if a proper test of efficiency were applied—the difficulty as regards the admission of the public would disappear. Knowing as we do the kind of students that form the great majority of those frequenting Trafalgar-square—how very few are sufficiently advanced to derive a profit by their monopoly of the gallery they could not gain elsewhere, and how worthless are most of the copies there made—we think that the interests of the public at large, which includes the great body of outside students, should not for one moment be set aside in consideration for a generally undeservedly privileged body. The really eligible students may be divided into two classes. First, the professional copyists, useful persons enough, but very small in number, who would welcome the visitor, seeing that he might occasionally prove a customer, as in Continental galleries. Secondly, the advanced artists desirous of finishing their style in execution in colour or what not from the great models of old—certainly a still smaller section of the whole. At present the only appreciable crowding at Trafalgar-square occurs in the old and generally small rooms containing works of deceased British artists; but nearly all the students here might be relegated to South Kensington or a hundred other places where they could work with equal advantage to themselves. The large majority of the remaining students are, as already intimated, mere tyros who are learning to apply paint to canvas; and that the public should be excluded nearly half the year for the benefit of such appears to us neither right nor expedient.

At the annual meeting of the Council of the Royal School of Mines the prizes and associateships were awarded as follow:—The Edward Forbes Medal and prize of books to H. M. Platnauer; the De la Beche Medal to John Greene; the Murchison Medal and prize of books to H. M. Platnauer. Associates—Mining and Metallurgical Divisions: E. B. Lindon, P. W. Stuart Menteath, Ralph Scott; Mining Division: John Greene, B. Mott, H. E. Trederoft; Metallurgical Division: R. S. Benson, J. J. Beringer, D. B. Bird, H. S. Cotton, W. Cross, W. L. Grant, G. S. The annual speeches and distribution of prizes at the Malvern College took place on the 7th inst. The meeting was one of unusual interest, as Mr. Faber, who has presided over the institution since its foundation, in 1865, is resigning his post. The proceedings were opened by a speech from Mr. Faber recapitulating the chief events in the history of the college, and showing how steadily it had grown. The speeches followed, and then Mr. Faber introduced the Rev. C. D. Cruttwell, Fellow and late Tutor of Merton College, Oxford, and late Head Master of St. Andrew's College, Bradfield, as his successor. Next day there was a presentation to Mr. Faber, in the Great School, of two candelabra, weighing about 360 oz.; and the Rev. Dean, a colleague of Mr. Faber's from the school's foundation, was deputed by the old and present boys and the body of the masters to offer it on their behalf.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

After a most animated discussion in the Chamber on Signor Cavalotti's motion that the House should sit permanently to discuss the Reform Bill, it was decided by 246 against 21 to postpone the discussion until November.

The resignation of General Bonelli, the Minister of War, has been accepted.

In the Parliament last Saturday the general discussion closed on the bill for the abolition of the grist tax. By 269 to 128 votes, the House resolved to pass to the discussion of the clauses of the measure. On Sunday the Chamber continued the debate on the Government's financial measures.

A Papal "Bluebook" has been printed giving the correspondence which resulted in the recall of the Belgian Envoy to the Vatican. The Belgian Premier wrote to Cardinal Nina threatening the discontinuance of relations unless the Pope retracted his letter to the Archbishop of Malines. The Cardinal refused to yield under the pressure of a threat.

GERMANY.

The Emperor left Ems on Saturday for the Palace of Coblenz, the favourite residence of the German Empress. His Majesty made a stay of a few days in the Rhenish city, and inspected the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein. On Tuesday he joined the Grand Ducal family of Baden on the Mainau Isle, in the Lake of Constance.

The Princess Albrecht, wife of Prince Albrecht, nephew of the Emperor William, has given birth to a son.

An invitation has been given to the Duke of Connaught by the Emperor to assist at the manœuvres of the combined Guards and 3rd Army Corps, which begin near Berlin at the latter end of August.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Baron Majthenye, member of the Upper House of the Hungarian Parliament, and Deputy Verhovay, have been sentenced by the Civil Tribunal of Pesth—the former to six weeks', the latter to a fortnight's imprisonment, for fighting a duel. The seconds were acquitted.

In last Saturday's sitting of the Bohemian Diet the report of the Committee on the ordinance relative to the use of the German and Czech languages was discussed, and, after a debate lasting several hours, the motion of the minority to pass to the order of the day over the petitions against the ordinance was rejected by 125 votes to 81. The Diet then adopted the motion of the majority, that the petitions should be referred to the Government, with a request that they should be seriously taken into consideration, and that relief should be afforded.

RUSSIA.

The Czarevitch and Czarevna arrived at St. Petersburg from Hapsal on Sunday, in order to be present at the special masses for the late Empress in the Fortress Cathedral, Monday being the fortieth day from the decease.

The Russians have formed three camps on the eastern shore of the Caspian Sea, and are assembling large bodies of men there preparatory to an advance against the Turcomans. General Skobeleff is strongly fortifying and arming Bami, and expects to have finished these works, and to take the field, in about two months.

A new tariff upon iron and steel goods has been published. It raises the rates upon several classes of articles.

TURKEY.

The rumours of impending changes in the Ministry have proved correct. Osman Pasha, the Minister of War, has been superseded, and Hussein Husni Pasha, formerly Governor of Scutari, has been appointed to succeed him. The command of the Imperial Guard has also been transferred from Dervish Pasha to Hakki Ismail Pasha. The Constantinople correspondent of the Daily News says that the real opposition to the demands of Europe now comes from the Sultan himself, and is due to a religious scruple. He cannot surrender Moslem territory to infidels, except under compulsion. When, however, there is a sufficient show of force his religion will allow him to yield.

GREECE.

The King arrived at Berlin yesterday week, and in the afternoon drove with the Crown Prince of Germany to Potsdam. On leaving Berlin, the King proceeded to Copenhagen, where he arrived on Sunday evening.

EGYPT.

Zekij Pasha has been appointed Director-General of the Egyptian Daira Sanieh, but no successor has been named for the post of English Director of the Daira, rendered vacant by the nomination of Mr. Alonzo Money as English member of the Caisse of the Egyptian Public Debt.

AMERICA.

Mr. Garfield has formerly accepted his nomination as Republican candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and officially endorses the platform of the party. He urges the widest hospitality to immigrants, except Chinese, and he regards the influx of so much servile labour as an evil which must be restricted.

Speaking on Saturday night last at a meeting at Terre Haute, Indiana, Mr. Thompson, the Secretary of the United States Navy, declared that at the coming election the whole power of the Government, supported, if necessary, by the military and naval forces of the country, would be employed for the protection of the citizens in their right of voting.

Three hundred men from Kansas City, acting in defiance of President Hayes's proclamation, have invaded Indian territory with the object of seizing land for cultivation.

CANADA.

The Right Hon. Sir J. A. Macdonald, the Canadian Premier, accompanied by the Hon. Sir C. Tupper, Minister of Railways, and the Hon. J. H. Pope, Minister of Agriculture, left Quebec on the 9th inst. for England.

The Orangemen of Montreal unveiled the Hankett monument on Monday. The celebration passed off quietly, the proceedings being confined to the lodge-room of the association. The leading members of the Catholic Union Society assembled at their rooms, but, on finding there was to be no Orange demonstration of a public character, shortly after dispersed.

SOUTH AFRICA.

In the sitting of the House of Assembly on the 9th inst. the Premier, the Hon. J. Gordon Sprigg, read a telegram which he had received from Mr. Griffith, the Resident in Basutoland, expressing the opinion that there would be no general surrender of arms on the part of the Basutos. The despatch added that Letsea was in favour of obeying the summons of the Government, but that the chief Masupha had made a speech against surrender. Great excitement is said to prevail in Lower Basutoland.

A mail from Cape Town gives an account of the solemnities with which the anniversary of her son's death was observed by the Empress Eugénie upon the spot where he fell.

INDIA.

Intelligence was received by the Viceroy on Saturday last from Cabul stating that large numbers of persons were going to meet Abdul Rahman at Charikar, where his arrival had not, however, then been reported.

In Afghanistan, according to the Times' correspondent at Cabul, "events are progressing fairly well towards a final settlement." Abdur Rahman still professes his desire for friendly relations with the British Government, although a great number of tribesmen are flocking to Kohistan in the belief that the Sindar is about to lead them against the English. Measures have been taken to meet any outbreak that may arise out of the excitement consequent on Abdur Rahman's arrival in Kohistan. The correspondent thinks that probably the Sirdar is not anxious for the British troops to leave Afghanistan until he has established his authority. In the city of Cabul there is said to be great distress from the scarcity and high prices of provisions; but the harvest is now nearly gathered, and should bring relief. It is understood that, on the withdrawal of our troops from Cabul, the defences which our security has demanded will be demolished. A despatch from Bombay, published by the Daily Telegraph, says that there is some reason for believing that the Indian Government intend to bring the railway to a stop at Quetta, and eventually to withdraw from Candahar.

A telegram from Sydney on the 13th inst. announces that the New South Wales Parliament has been prorogued.

Mr. George M. O'Rorke, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Colony of New Zealand, has been knighted.

Mr. G. W. Des Vœux, C.M.G., lately Administrator of the Government of Fiji, has been appointed Governor of the Bahama Islands.

An exhibition of objects brought home by the Vega Expedition from their voyage to the Arctic Seas has been opened at Stockholm.

The last Census of Sweden was taken at the end of 1879, and showed that the population of that kingdom (without Norway) amounted to 4,577,783 souls.

Baden-Baden is fixed upon as the place of meeting of the Old Catholic Congress this year. The congress will last three days—namely, from Sept. 19 to 21 inclusive.

The Agent-General for New South Wales has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Samuel Plimsoll, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in April last.

The youngest son of the Comte de Paris was christened last Saturday at the Castle of Eu. Only the nearest relatives and friends of the family were present. The infant Prince received the names of Jacques Marie Antoine Clement.

Intelligence has been received at Madrid of an unsuccessful attempt to land in Cuba having been made by Antonio Maceo, the insurgent leader, who left San Domingo with a small number of followers, but was chased by the Spanish gun-boats to the neighbourhood of Jamaica.

Naila Mohamed, the bearer of an autograph letter from Queen Victoria to King John of Abyssinia, has returned to Cairo, after a favourable interview with the Abyssinian Monarch, who expressed himself desirous of maintaining friendly relations with Egypt.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

Earl Stanhope has succeeded the Earl of Wharncliffe as President of the Council of the National Rifle Association; and the noble Earl and Countess have gracefully dispensed the hospitalities of the Cottage at the Wimbledon Camp, which has again drawn Volunteer riflemen from the furthermost corners of England, Scotland, and Wales, and from the other side of the Atlantic. The United States are this year represented; and the Canadian team, who have again come over to compete in friendly rivalry with the crack shots of the mother country, arrived on Saturday, receiving a warm greeting. Their camp, a little way inside the principal entrance, shelters twenty-three Dominion Volunteers, inclusive of the Commandant, Colonel Williams, of the 1st Canada Regiment.

A religious service was held, as usual, in the spacious tent of the 1st Surrey on Sunday morning, and a large and attentive congregation of Volunteers and visitors assembled. The officiating clergymen were the Rev. J. T. Athawes, of St. John the Divine, Kennington, and the Rev. H. R. Verry, of Dulwich College, an appropriate sermon being preached by the latter upon the text furnished by the passage in the sixth chapter of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians, in which the Apostle exhorts all men to put on "the whole armour of God." There was also a service in the South Middlesex Camp, where the sermon was preached by the Chaplain of the regiment, the Rev. E. Ker Gray, Rector of St. Michael and All Angels', Kensington. Late in the afternoon a considerable number of persons were attracted to the camp, no charge for admission being made.

The members of the executive committee who assist Lord Stanhope in the management of affairs are Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Wilmot, V.C., M.P., Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Fletcher, M.P., Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley, and Mr. G. T. Biddulph. Captain E. St. John Mildmay is again the secretary, with Lieutenant-Colonel Lennox Peel at the head of the executive and squadding department, and Major Thompson as leader of the statistical staff. The camp commandant, as for many years past, is Lieutenant-Colonel Phillips, of the Grenadier Guards.

The competition for the first stage of the Queen's Prize began on Tuesday. For the Queen's Prize the entries were but 2315, as against 2369 last year, which witnessed a falling off in this respect from 1878, when the number was largely augmented by the desire of the men to take advantage of the change in the rifle from the Snider to the Martini-Henry. In the first stage the competitors fired seven shots at each range of 200, 500, and 600 yards, the aggregate value of the 360 prizes given by the National Rifle Association being £1668. The competitor making the highest score in the first stage takes £60 in money and the National Rifle Association silver medal and badge, the next fifty-nine in merit taking £12 each. There are also 100 prizes of £4, 100 of £3, and £100 of £2. In the second stage the first sixty winners in the previous stage fire seven shots at each of the 800, 900, and 1000 yards ranges, the competitor making the highest score at the three ranges taking £250 in money, the gift of her Majesty the Queen, and the gold medal and gold badge of the National Rifle Association. Owing to the strong and rather uncertain wind that prevailed early in the day, no very high scores were made on Tuesday, but when the wind fell in the afternoon four highest possible scores were made by Corporal Scott, of the 13th Cheshire; Sergeant Stone, of the 17th Stafford; Private Hunter, of the 16th Lanark; and Private Haines, of the 3rd Wiltshire. Next in order of merit came twenty-six thirty-fours, followed by fifty-seven thirty-threes, and 148 thirty-twos. Major Pearse, 4th Devon, also made seven consecutive bull's-eyes for the Snider Association Cup. The still more remarkable score of ten consecutive bulls at 900 yards making fifty points, was made by Mr. Jackson, an American, for the St. Leger Stakes.

The Daily Telegraph Prize, open to all comers, was on Tuesday shot for at 200 yards range with the Snider rifle, seven shots being allowed. The prizes given in the competition are a fifty-guinea cup, given by the editor of the Daily Telegraph to the highest scorer, and £100 given by the National Rifle Association, divided into thirty-six prizes, varying from £10 to £2. The contest resulted in nine ties of 34 each for the cup, which had to be shot off.

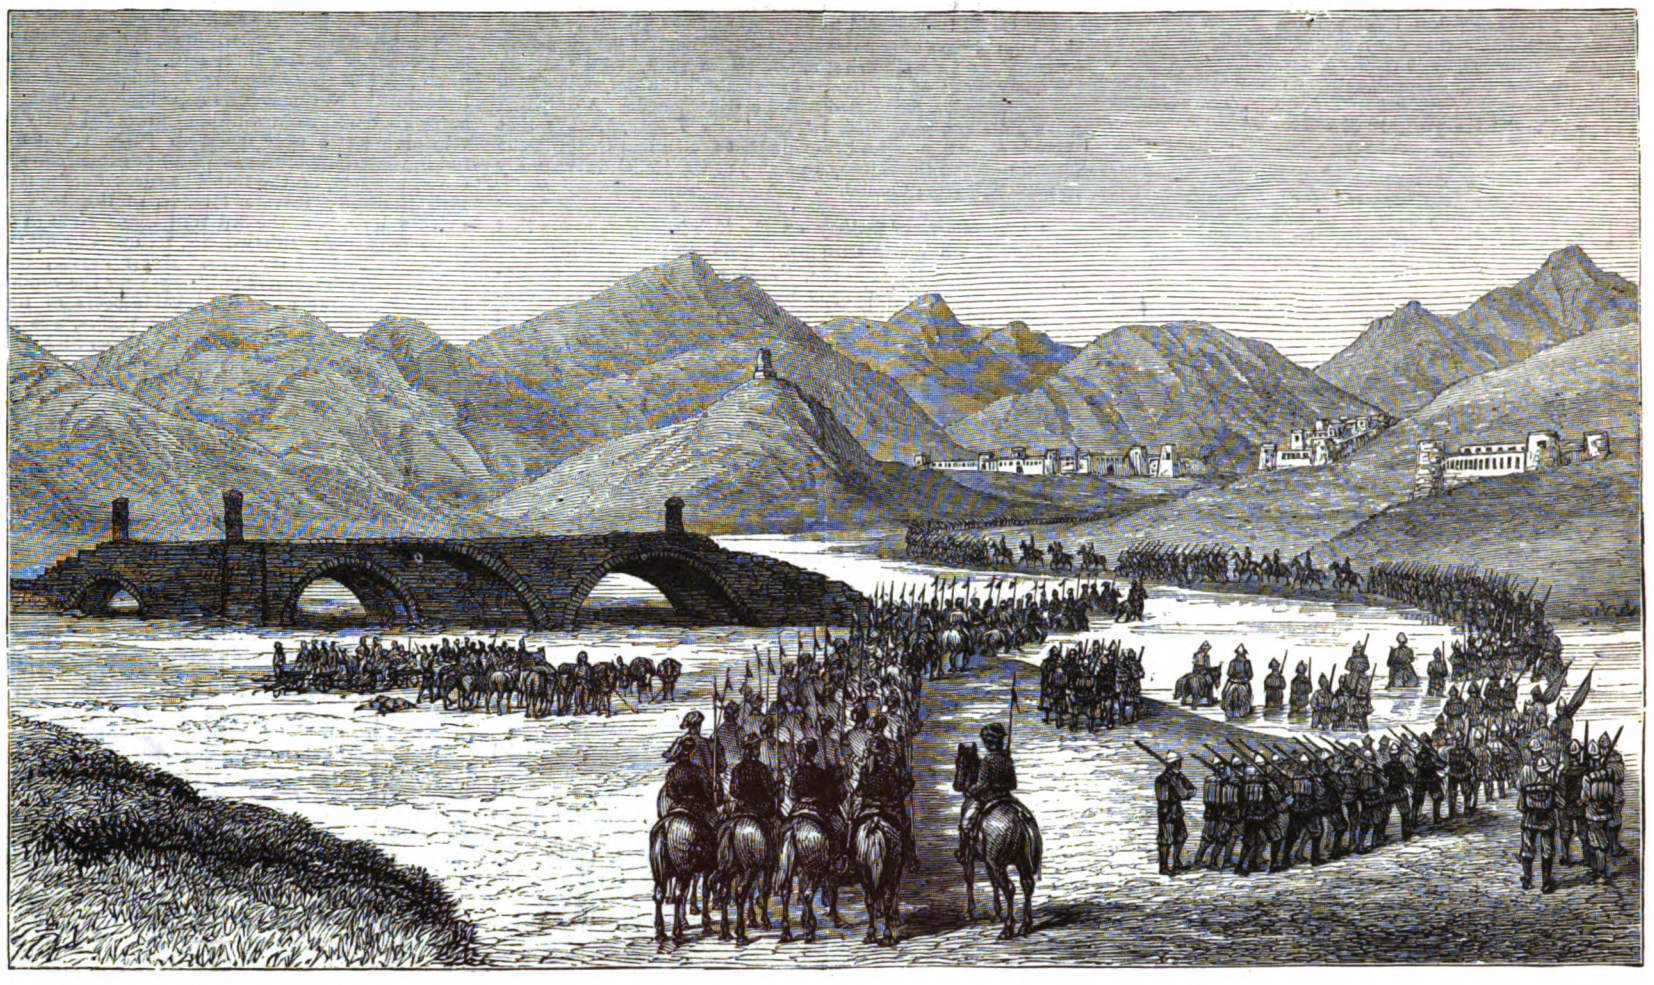
The match between the Lords and Commons will take place at three o'clock on Saturday (to-day), when also the China Cup and the Belgian Challenge Cup will be competed for. The following are the other principal fixtures:—Queen's Prize, second stage, July 20; Prince of Wales's Prize, July 16; St. George's Prize, July 16; Albert, July 19; Arthur, July 19; Duke of Cambridge's, July 20; Army and Navy Challenge Cup, July 20; Public Schools Veterans' Match, July 20; Chancellors' Challenge Plate (Oxford and Cambridge), July 21; General Eyre's Army Prize, July 21; International Rifle Match (Elcho Shield), July 22; Ashburton Shield and Spencer Cup (Public Schools) Matches, July 22; Volunteer Cadet Corps' Trophy, July 22; Rajah of Klapore's Cup, July 22; Army and Navy, second stage, July 22; Loyd-Lindsay (mounted contest), July 23; Mappin Brothers', July 23; America v. Great Britain (match at 800, 900, and 1000 yards), July 24; Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy (mounted contest), July 24—followed by the distribution of the principal prizes by her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Prince.

VOLUNTEERS.

The Royal London Militia and the 1st City of London Rifle Volunteers (better known as the London Rifle Brigade), of which the Duke of Cambridge is honorary Colonel, were inspected by his Royal Highness in Hyde Park last Saturday evening, when there was a good muster of both regiments.

Other regiments inspected on Saturday were the 1st London Engineers, in Regent's Park and at head-quarters, by Colonel Dawson-Scott, commanding Royal Engineers, Home District; the 4th Middlesex (West London) Rifles, in Hyde Park, by Colonel Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards; the 46th Middlesex (London and Westminster) Rifles, in Regent's Park, by Colonel Logan, C.B.; and the 7th Surrey (Southwark) Rifles, in the grounds of Lambeth Palace, by Colonel Sprott.

At the Government ranges, Milton-next-Gravesend, last Saturday a rifle contest for prizes of the value of several hundred pounds was held among upwards of 200 of the best shots of the 28th Middlesex (London Irish) Volunteers. The first prize, £12, presented by the Duke of Connaught, and a challenge cup value £25, was won by Sergeant H. J. Browne; second prize of £8, presented by the Duke of Connaught, Private English, 57; third prize, £6 (the Marchioness of Donegall's), Private E. Rodgers, 55; fourth prize, £5 (the Marquis of Donegall's), Captain Hardy, 54; fifth and sixth prizes, £4 each (Sir Richard Wallace's), Private Glover, 53, and Captain Roberts, 52. In the volley-firing contest, the prizes for which were the regimental challenge cup and money prizes given by the Duke of Connaught, the winners were A company (Captain Howland Roberts), who made the fine score of 47 out of the possible 50 hits. Major-General Daubeney's challenge cup, to be held by the captain of the company any eight of whose men make the highest aggregate score in series A, was won by C (Captain Vaughan Jones's) company. The staff-instructors' prizes were won by Sergeant Reynolds and Sergeant Fitzgerald. A large number of company prizes were shot for.



The camp of instruction for Volunteer Engineers was opened at Chatham last Saturday. The detachments at present forming the camp are the 1st Cheshire, 1st and 2nd Gloucester, 1st Durham, 1st Hants, 1st Lanark, 1st Lancashire, 1st London, and 1st Middlesex, comprising 24 officers and 352 non-commissioned officers and men. The camp will remain open until the 24th inst., but some of the detachments which have already joined will only remain until to-day (Saturday), when their places will be taken by others. The camp during the second week will be occupied by the following detachments:—1st Aberdeen, 1st Cheshire, 1st Durham, 1st Flint, 1st and 2nd Gloucester, 1st Lanarkshire, 1st and 2nd Lancashire, 1st London, 1st Middlesex, 2nd Tower Hamlets.

Under the presidency of Baron Henry de Worms, the annual meeting of the Anglo-Jewish Association was held on Sunday morning, for the election of the council, the adoption of revised laws, and for other business.

The arrivals of live stock and fresh meat from the United States and Canada during last week show a large decrease as compared with the previous week. The steamers conveying live stock were as follows:—The Brazilian, with 569 cattle, 1314 sheep, and 524 pigs; the Lake Manitoba, with 548 cattle; the Bulgarian, with 438 cattle; the Mississippi, with 311 cattle and 353 sheep; and the Erin, with 59 cattle. The steamers bringing fresh meat were as follows:—The Arizona, with 1900 quarters of beef and 500 carcases of mutton; the Bulgarian, with 1531 quarters of beef; the City of Richmond, with 800 quarters of beef, 150 carcases of mutton, and 121 dead pigs; and the Baltic, with 580 quarters of beef and 150 carcases of mutton. The total being 1923 cattle, 1667 sheep, 521 pigs, 4811 quarters of beef, 800 carcases of mutton, and 121 dead pigs.

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

GENERAL ROSS'S DIVISION CROSSING THE LOGHUR RIVER ON ITS WAY TO MEET SIR DONALD STEWART.

Our Illustration, from a sketch by Major C. J. Cramer Roberts, of the 9th Foot, represents the division commanded by General Ross, C.B., on April 24, crossing the Loghur river. This was on its way from Cabul to meet Sir Donald Stewart with the Candahar column of the army from its position near Ghuzni. The old bridge that formerly stood over the Loghur appears in this view as a bridge over the adjacent dry ground, the river having altered its course. The fortified village here seen, with the tower perched on the summit of a rock, and one or two neighbouring forts, is Shahabad, where in 1866 Abdul Rahman fought and gained a signal victory over the late Ameer Shere Ali. At this place, also, in the disastrous year 1841, Captain Woodhouse, with a hundred and thirty men, cut off from the British army, was enticed into one of the forts. They trusted to the Afghans swearing to be their friends; but the whole party were massacred in the night. We observe that the Ghuzni field force, which had been quartered at Cabul, has returned to the Loghur valley for greater convenience of getting supplies.

Another sketch by the same Correspondent presents a view of the fort and village belonging to Mollah Abdul Guffoor, a chieftain in the Lunga Valley. He had given so much trouble, in harassing the columns of troops passing that way, that General Ross determined to inflict signal punishment on him. Brigadier-General Charles Gough, V.C., C.B., with four mountain guns, a troop of the 9th Lancers, a squadron of Bengal Cavalry, a wing of the 9th Foot, one of the 4th Goorkhas, and detachments of the 23rd and 24th Regiments of Native Infantry, was sent from Shahabad on April 29. The fort and village lay about ten miles distant. The place was found quite deserted, so the troops entered and took what was to be found there. Among the booty were some valuable china and Arabic manuscripts. An attempt was made by the Engineers to blow up the towers of the fort. This was not very successful; but all the buildings were set on fire and completely burnt out.

Miss Firth, daughter of Mr. Mark Firth, on Monday laid the corner-stone of the north transept of the parish church, Sheffield, which is now being restored at a cost of £18,000.

A leading firm in the city of London has promised £500 to the building of Truro Cathedral, on condition of other firms contributing a similar sum.

Both Houses of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury assembled on Tuesday, when a message was read from the Queen in reply to the Address which was presented.

Following the example of last year, an Exhibition of Ecclesiastical Art will take place at Leicester during the forthcoming Church Congress.

On the 5th inst. the Bishop of Worcester reopened a portion of Aston church, which is in process of rebuilding and of enlargement to nearly twice its old capacity. The work is carried out under the direction of Mr. J. A. Chatwin.

The anniversary service of the Free and Open Church Association was held on Wednesday evening at St. John's, Red Lion-square, Holborn. The Ven. the Archdeacon of Northampton preached.

The annual conference of the Evangelical Protestant Union will be held at Manchester on Thursday, Oct. 14. The sermon will be preached on the previous evening in St. Catherine's Church by the Rev. Dr. Hewlett, Vicar of Astley.

The company appointed for the revision of the authorised version of the Old Testament concluded their sixty-fourth session yesterday week at the Chapter Library, Westminster. The revision of the Book of Job was continued as far as chapter xxxviii. 35.

A new reredos has recently been erected in the Colne Engaine church, the gift of Mrs. Keymer, in memory of her husband, the late Rector of the parish, and their son, who died abroad. The design represents the Good Shepherd, under a central canopy, with carved side panels ornamented with foliage. The work is executed in Caen stone, with pillars in alabaster, from the drawings of Mr. Noel Armfield.

A work of great importance, in the shape of the large window in the east end of the chapel of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, has been put up by the authorities of the college, the subject represented is the Crucifixion of Our Lord, occupying the whole of the window. It is designed in character with the old Flemish glass, of which there are one or two good examples in the chapel. The window was designed and executed by Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Bayne.

The Church of Week St. Mary, Launceston, has been reopened by the Bishop of Truro, after partial restoration, under the direction of Mr. St. Aubyn. Immediately after his appointment to the rectory, about four years ago, the Rev. G. H. Hopkins took this much-needed work in hand, but the total cost being estimated at £2200, a portion of it has had to stand over. What has been done, however, has cost £1350. The parish is chiefly notable for the good deeds of a rustic belle, named Thomasine Bonaventure, who was taken to London towards the end of the fifteenth century by a merchant, as his servant. She soon became his wife, and afterwards made two other brilliant matches; but, having no child, she expended much wealth upon her native village.

The Bishop of Rochester consecrated St. Crispin's Church, Southwark Park-road, on the 7th inst. The cost of building, together with the parsonage, amounts to £15,870, which sum is made up by £6000 for the church contract for building, £2800 for the cost of the site, £5000 for the endowment, £1600 for the parsonage, and £470 for the architects. Towards this £11,500 has been given by the following members of the Fitzwygram family:—Major-General Sir F. Fitzwygram, Miss Fitzwygram, Lady Baker, Rev. J. Fitzwygram, and Mr. Loftus Fitzwygram. The Church-Building Society has subscribed £225, and the Rochester Diocesan Society £500, leaving but the very small deficiency of £395. The building is in the Gothic style, with red bricks and stone facings. The tower and spire remain to be completed, at an estimated cost of £900. At the conclusion of the consecration service a bazaar was held in the mission hall.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishop of London, laid last Saturday the corner-stone of the new parish church of Fulham. The old edifice had a remarkably fine tower, built about the fourteenth century, and this tower is the only remnant of the original parish church, for the body of the edifice, which is now being rebuilt, was of a much later date. The reconstruction will be proceeded with as funds are received, the total cost being estimated at £9480, of which about £5000 has been obtained. At Saturday's ceremony there were a large number of clergymen present. These, with the choir, marched in procession from the vicarage. A very fine musical service, with the accompaniment of the reed instruments belonging to the Coldstream Guards' band, was one of the features of the ceremony. The stone having been laid, the Archbishop of Canterbury delivered a short address, in which he said that as they still had the old tower, which was a beauty to the neighbourhood, it would not do to attach to it anything but a very handsome church. There was every reason to expect, from the interest taken in the day's proceedings, that they would not have long to wait for the funds needed. Fulham itself was extending rapidly. New houses were being erected everywhere; and it was right that they should enlarge their parish church to meet the wants of the district. A bazaar, which was well patronised, was held in the garden of the vicarage during Friday and Saturday.

The annual meeting of the Church of Ireland Sustentation Fund was held on Monday in the Library at Lambeth Palace, when great regret was expressed at the limited response to the urgent appeals of the committee, the amount received during the past year being only about £2000. It was hoped, however, that the depression in trade was the cause of this, and the meeting was congratulated by the Earl of Harrowby on the fact that since the disendowment of the Irish Church the society has been able to help her with between £50,000 and £60,000.

The Pope has raised the Very Rev. Dr. Neville, Rector of the Catholic University of Ireland, to the dignity of domestic prelate at the Vatican, which carries with it the title of Monsignore and the right to wear the purple.

The next Wesleyan Conference will be held in London, commencing on Tuesday, the 20th inst.

Official returns of emigration from Liverpool during June show that 20,757 passengers emigrated from that port, of whom between 17,000 and 18,000 went to the United States.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

The Clothworkers' Company have made a grant of thirty guineas in aid of the funds of the Hospital for Consumption at Ventnor.

The eleventh annual fête of the combined bodies of metropolitan and City police took place on the 8th inst. in the Crystal Palace and its grounds. The entertainments were exceedingly multiform.

Yesterday week the Lord Mayor, the Lady Mayoress, and the Sheriffs paid a visit to Margate, where his Lordship laid the foundation-stone of an extension of the Margate Branch of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum in the Old Kent-road. The object is to increase the accommodation at Margate, without actually closing the original institution. The cost of the extension will be about £11,000.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presided on the same day at the annual distribution of prizes to the boys on board the Arethusa and Chichester training-ships, which belong to the organisation known as the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children and Ragged and Industrial Schools, and are stationed off Greenhithe, Kent. About 200 friends and supporters of the movement were present, and lunched on board the Arethusa.

Lord Houghton in the evening presided at the public commemoration dinner of the Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Society, which was held at the Freemasons' Tavern. In proposing success to the society, the chairman said that it now numbered 2000 persons, and assisted the members who fell into difficulties, and their families when they were gone, besides providing a certain number of almshouses for the decayed members. Thus the institution was dispensing its funds in a way which commended itself to all generous feelings. Mr. W. Spottiswoode responded. Mr. G. A. Sala gave "The Health of the Chairman" in a eulogistic speech. Sir W. Pollock gave "Success to Literature," and Dr. S. Manning replied. Other toasts followed, and subscriptions to the amount of over £500 were announced.

Special interest has lately been taken in the musical training of the blind, and has increased by the arrival and by the performances of the pupils of the French Blind College in London. The Norwood College for the Blind gave a concert at the Crystal Palace last Saturday, when the Duchess of Westminster distributed the prizes gained by the pupils during the past year.

On Monday a visit was paid by the Surrey Magistrates' Club to the training-ship Cornwall, lying off Purfleet. This club has long taken an active and helpful interest in the reformatories of which this ship is an example. Until Monday the visits to the Cornwall have had an individual and occasional character. The extra need of funds, however, caused those who take particular interest in the School Ship Society and its work to make an extra effort on its behalf. Mr. William Hardman, treasurer of the Surrey Magistrates' Club, and Mr. Hudson, one of its most actively philanthropic members, planned a steam-boat excursion to the training-ship for the purpose of enlisting the sympathy and gaining the pecuniary aid of as many members of the club as possible, and also, perhaps, of the public at large. This idea was yesterday carried out with the utmost success.

Miss Edith Goldsbro' gave a concert on Tuesday evening at Steinway Hall in aid of the fund for building the south wing of Miss Sharman's Orphanage; and on Thursday the Irving Amateur Dramatic Club performed at St. George's Hall in aid of the funds of the Samaritan Free Hospital for Women and Children.

By permission of the Duke of Westminster, a meeting of the council of the Coffee Music-Halls Company was held at Grosvenor House on Wednesday afternoon. The main object would appear to be the institution of entertainments of an attractive and improved kind, at which non-intoxicating liquors are to be provided, and to which a man may take his wife and daughters, or even permit them to go alone. The council announce that they have secured possession of the Victoria Theatre, in the New-cut; but that, before it can be opened as a coffee music-hall, a sum of £1500 is required in addition to the amount already subscribed.

A morning concert, under distinguished patronage, took place, by permission of Lady Clifford, at 19, Stratford-place, Hyde Park, on Thursday, in aid of the funds of the International Association for the Total Suppression of Vivisection.

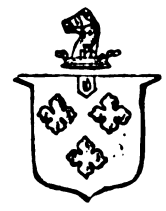
Lord Shaftesbury presided on Tuesday night at the annual meeting of the Golden-lane Mission, held at the Foresters' New Hall, Clerkenwell-road. The proceedings began with a tea, to which about 350 costermongers and their wives sat down. There was an exhibition of about twenty donkeys and fifty ponies and cobs used in business by the costermongers. The animals all showed evidence of good grooming and kind treatment.

At a meeting at St. James's Hall on Tuesday, convened by the ladies' committee of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Baroness Burdett-Coutts distributed the prizes to the successful competitors for prizes offered for essays on "The Duty of Kindness to Animals." No less than 15,326 essays were submitted, and there were 350 recipients of prizes or certificates.

Under the immediate patronage of the Dukes of Edinburgh and Connaught, the Duchess of Connaught, Princess Mary Duchess of Teck, the Duke of Teck and Count Gleichen and the Countess Gleichen, an evening concert, in aid of the funds of the People's Entertainment Society, was, by permission of Sir Coutts Lindsay, Bart., to be given in the Grosvenor Gallery on Thursday.

Mrs. Stephen A. Ralli holds a drawing-room meeting at her residence, Cleveland House, Clapham Park, to-day (Saturday), on behalf of the Princess Mary Village Homes for Little Girls, Addlestone, Surrey.

Next Monday an entertainment on behalf of the Home for Invalid Ladies at Cannes will take place at Grosvenor House, under the patronage of Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and many ladies of rank. Mdlle. Rosina Isidor and Madame Trebelli, with other artists, will take part in the entertainment, which will conclude with a play in one act, entitled "La Pluie et le Beau Temps," by Léon Gozlan, in which Miss Geneviève Ward will act, assisted by Messrs. Marius and Beerbohm Tree.



The Duke of Westminster will lay the foundation-stone of a new wing of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, next Wednesday. The band of the Coldstream Guards will be in attendance. The new wing will cost about £9000, of which £6300 has been contributed.

In consequence of the Review at Windsor on Wednesday afternoon, the Prince and Princess of Wales were unable to attend the Fête at the Farningham Home for Little Boys; but their Royal Highnesses have promised to visit the institution next year.

Early in the present year the editor of Little Folks' Magazine made a special appeal to his readers on behalf of the permanent establishment of "Little Folks'" cots in the East London Hospital for Children at Shadwell. Although only a few months have elapsed since this appeal was made, the subscriptions already received from the little readers of this magazine have reached, we are informed, a total of £1350, and £1000 of this amount has recently been forwarded by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin, and Co. to the treasurer of the hospital for the endowment, in perpetuity, of a cot, to be called "The Little Folks' Cot."

OBITUARY.

SIR FRANCIS VINCENT, BART.

Sir Francis Vincent, tenth Baronet, of Debden Hall, Essex, who died on the 6th inst., was the elder son of Sir Francis Vincent, ninth Baronet, by Jane, his wife, daughter of the Hon. Edward Bouverie, and granddughter of Jacob, first Viscount Folkestone. He was born in 1803, and succeeded his father in 1809. Sir Francis married, in 1824, Augusta Elizabeth (who died in 1876), only child of the late Hon. Charles Herbert, R.N., and granddaughter of Henry, first Earl of Carnarvon, by whom he leaves an only daughter, Blanche, who inherits the estate of Debden Hall, in Essex. She married, Jan. 10, 1871, John Raymond, second surviving son of the late Maurice Cely Trevilian, Esq., of Midelney, Somerset. Sir Francis was M.P. for St. Alban's from 1832 to 1835; and was a D.L. for Essex, but latterly lived in retirement. He is succeeded by his cousin, now the Rev. Sir Frederick Vincent, eleventh Baronet, M.A., J.P., Canon of Chichester, son of Henry Dormer Vincent, Esq., of Lily Hill, Berks, by Isabella, his wife, daughter of the Hon. Felton Hervey, and granddaughter of John, Earl of Bristol. He was born in 1798, and has been twice married—firstly, to Louisa, daughter and coheir of John Morris, Esq., of Hughenden, Bucks; and, secondly, to Maria Copley, daughter of R. Herries Young, Esq., of Auchensbrugh, Dumfriesshire. He has, with other issue, two sons, the Rev. William Vincent, Rector of Postwick, Norfolk, who married, in 1865, Lady Margaret (who died 1873), daughter of Henry, twelfth Earl of Buchan; and Charles Edward Howard Vincent, Barrister-at-Law, Director of Criminal Investigations. The family of Vincent is one of great antiquity, possessed of the manor of Swinford, Leicestershire, so far back as 1264. They removed to the county of Surrey upon the marriage of Thomas Vincent, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, with Jane, only daughter and heiress of Thomas Lyfield, Esq., of Stoke d'Abernon, Surrey. This Thomas Vincent had the honour of a Royal visit at Stoke D'Abernon when Queen Elizabeth conferred knighthood on him; his son, Sir Francis Vincent, was the first Baronet.

THE HON. W. PORTER.

The Hon. William Porter died at Lennox Vale, Belfast, on the 13th inst., in his seventy-fifth year. He was the son of the Rev. William Porter, of Newtownlimavady, county Derry, and brother to the Rev. John Scott Porter, the well-known Unitarian minister, whose death preceded his by but a few days. Mr. Porter was at first intended for a mercantile career, but abandoned it and studied for the Bar in Dublin and London, and became a member of the North-East Circuit. He accepted the office of Attorney-General at the Cape of Good Hope, and held the post for upwards of thirty years, during which he was virtually the mainspring of Cape affairs. His retirement a few years ago gave occasion to a great display of feeling in the colony. On his departure for Europe, the Cape Parliament voted him a large increase on his official pension as a special mark of appreciation. The whole of the amount so voted, in excess of the strict official pension, he set apart and funded as an endowment for educational purposes in the colony.

CANON MILLER.

The Rev. John Gale Miller, D.D., Canon of Rochester and Vicar of Greenwich, died on the 11th inst., in his sixty-seventh year. He was son of Mr. John Miller (who held an appointment in connection with the American Embassy in London), was born at Margate, in 1814, and received his education at Brompton Grammar School, and in the University of Oxford, where he graduated First Class, Classics, in 1835. In 1837 he was ordained, and after some time passed as Curate of Bexley and Incumbent of Park Chapel, Chelsea, he was transferred to St. Martin's, Birmingham, where, during a ministry of twenty years, he gained great popularity and influence. In 1866 he was given the Vicarage of Greenwich, and in 1871 a Canonry at Worcester, changed for a Canonry at Rochester in the following year. In 1866 he had been nominated Select Preacher to the University of Oxford, and in 1877 had acted as Examining Chaplain to Bishop Thorold. He was one of the original members of the London School Board. In Canon Miller the Evangelical party has lost one of its most eminent men.

MAJOR-GENERAL CRAWLEY.

Major-General Thomas Robert Crawley died on the 2nd inst., at York-terrace, Regent's Park, aged sixty-two. He entered the Army in 1834, and was present at the closing operations before Mooltan, and the surrender of the citadel, in January, 1849. He was extra A.D.C. to Sir Henry Dundas in the march from Mooltan, and served during the Sikh War. He became Major-General in 1870.

MR. TOM TAYLOR.

Mr. Tom Taylor, who had for several weeks been suffering from a severe attack of suppressed gout, died on the 12th inst. at his residence at Lavender Sweep, Wandsworth. The deceased gentleman, who was born in 1817, graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1845. For two years he was Professor of English literature at University College, London. Abandoning the legal profession, he took to literature, writing for the Morning Chronicle and Daily News. He was also one of the earliest contributors to Punch, of which he was appointed editor on the death of Mr. Shirley Brooks. Mr. Tom Taylor's reputation, however, is chiefly based upon his dramatic works, of which he produced more than a hundred, most of which are well known from frequent performance upon the stage. Among the most popular of his dramas may be mentioned "Still Waters Run Deep," "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," and "The Overland Route." One of his last and most successful pieces was "Lady Clancarty." Mr. Taylor was also well known as an art critic. In 1850 Mr. Taylor was appointed assistant secretary of the Board of Health, of which he subsequently became secretary. He retained a departmental secretaryship when the duties of the Board were transferred to the Home Office, and retired on a pension on the formation of the Local Government Board in 1872. We intend to give a portrait of Mr. Taylor next week.

The deaths are also announced of—

entered the Army in 1838, served at Sidon and the bombardment of Acre, and was made Major-General in 1877.

Joseph Sharpe, Esq., LL.D., barrister-at-law, on the 2nd inst., at Pembroke Lodge, Kensington, aged fifty-three.

Henry John Hunter, Esq., barrister-at-law, formerly of Worcester College, Oxford, and of the 3rd and 4th Regiments of the British Italian Legion, on the 1st inst., aged sixty-one.

Theodosia, Lady England, wife of General Sir Richard England, G.C.B. She was the daughter of Richard Fountayne Wilson, Esq., of Melton Park, York, and was married, as his second wife, to General Sir Richard England in 1844.

The Rev. Walter Macgilvray, D.D., of Aberdeen, a well-known Scotch divine and writer on religious subjects. He married a daughter of Sir William Hooker, the botanist, sister to Sir J. D. Hooker, now Curator of Kew Gardens.

Charles Trevor, Esq., formerly Controller of the Legacy Duty Office, on the 5th inst., in his eightieth year. He was for a long period engaged in the Stamp Office, and afterwards in the Legacy Duty Office, and retired in 1865.

William Unett, Esq., J.P. and D.L., late of Venwood, Herefordshire, on the 26th ult., at Kingsdown, Bristol, aged eighty-four. He was the only surviving son of Henry Unett, Esq., of Freen's Court, in the county of Hereford, and was formerly in the 43rd Regiment.

Mr. John Hervey, late Grand Secretary of English Freemasons, on the 3rd inst., at an advanced age. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and held a leading position amongst the Freemasons, the Grand Lodge granting him a substantial pension on his retirement from the post of Grand Secretary.

Pierce Egan, the novelist, on the 6th inst., at Ravensbourne, Lee, Kent. He was born Dec. 19, 1814, the son of Pierce Egan, author of "Boxiana," and "Life in London." He contributed largely, both as author and artist, to periodical literature, amongst others to this Journal on its start by Mr. Ingram in 1842, and produced many leading novels.

The Rev. Richard Seymour, Canon Residentiary of Worcester Cathedral, and for forty years Rector of Kinwarton and Great Alne, Worcestershire, on the 6th inst., aged seventy-four. He was a man of deep piety, and the author of several religious works. He graduated at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1828, and was an active member of the Convocation of Canterbury.

The Rev. William Frederick Radclyffe, Rector of Tarrant Rushton and Tarrant Rawston, in the county of Dorset, at Okeford Fitzpaine, near Blandford, on the 8th inst., aged seventy-four. He was fourth son of the late Robert Radclyffe, Esq., of Foxdenton Hall, Lancashire, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Thomas Patten, Esq., of Bank Hall, near Warrington.

Major-General Thomas Raikes, C.B., on the 10th inst., in the fifty-ninth year of his age. He entered the Army in 1840, and obtained a captaincy in 1854. He served with the 1st Madras Fusiliers in the Burmese War of 1852-3, and in the suppression of the Mutiny in 1857-8. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (military division) in 1869, and became Major-General in 1877.

Aldborough Jonn Brydges Henniker, Esq., of Mayfurlong and Grindon, Staffordshire, and of Catcott, near Bridgwater, Somerset, at the age of eighty-three. The deceased gentleman, who was the third son of the late Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir Brydges Trecothic Henniker, took his degree at Jesus College, Cambridge, in 1817, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1826.

The Rev. Edward Freke Lewis, M.A., Rector of Portskewett and St. Pierre, Monmouthshire, on the 2nd inst., aged eighty. He was only son of the late Rev. Edward Lewis, also Rector of Portskewett, by Mary, his wife, eldest daughter and coheir of William Freke, Esq., of Hannington, Wilts, and grandson of Morgan Lewis, Esq., of St. Pierre, the representative of a very ancient Monmouthshire family descended from Cadifor, Prince or Chieftain of Divet.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Charles Newhouse, formerly of the 65th Foot and of the 5th Fusiliers, at St. Kilda's, The Park, Cheltenham, in his eightieth year. He entered the Army a few months after the Battle of Waterloo, and served in the Mahratta War, being wounded at the engagement at Ashta, in 1818, and receiving a medal for the capture of Poonah. He was subsequently in the two expeditions to Cutch, and in those to the Gulf of Persia.

Henry de Stafford O'Brien de Stafford, Esq., of Blatherwycke Park, Northamptonshire, and of Tixover, in the county of Rutland, J.P. and D.L., High Sheriff of the former county in 1868, on the 2nd inst., in his sixty-eighth year. He was educated at Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and assumed the surname of de Stafford in 1868. He was brother of the late Augustus Stafford O'Brien, Esq., of Blatherwycke Park, M.P., Secretary to the Admiralty in 1852, and second son of Stafford O'Brien, Esq., of Cratloe Woods, in the county of Clare, by Emma, his wife, sister of Charles, Earl of Gainsborough.

THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S SHOW.

The exhibition of the Royal Agricultural Society, which opened at Carlisle on Monday, was, with the exception of that of last year in London (when the show partook of the nature of an international one), one of the largest which the organisation has ever held, the entries of live stock numbering 1500, including 487 horses, 434 head of cattle, 434 of sheep, and 146 of pigs; while the implement yard comprised nearly 10,000 feet of shedding, with 288 stands, in which over 4000 articles of more or less agricultural interest are displayed. We gave an engraving of the show-yard last week. The total value of the prizes amounted to £5700, of which over £1000 was contributed by the Carlisle local committee.

Amongst the exhibitors were the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Marquis of Exeter, the Duke of Hamilton, the Earl of Zetland, the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and the Duke of Westminster. The Prince of Wales gained the first and second prizes for Southdown shearing rams, the Earl of Ellesmere receiving the first prize for the best four-year-old agricultural horse.

At a general meeting on Tuesday of the members of the society, presided over by the Duke of Bedford, votes of thanks were passed to the Corporation of Carlisle for their hearty co-operation, and to the railway companies for the admirable manner in which they had done their part of the work. After a cordial acknowledgment of the services of his Grace during his presidential year of office, Mr. Wells, the President elect, was, on the motion of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, duly inducted.

A testimonial, consisting of a handsome silver table-service, of the value of £450, was presented on the 8th inst. to Colonel Shadwell H. Clerke, at the Hall of the Supreme Council, 33, Golden-square, on his resigning his office of Grand Secretary-General of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, in recognition of his services in that capacity for the last seven years. The Supreme Council presented one part of the testimonial, and the members of the Ancient and Accepted Rite the other.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

EAST MARDEN and H W T.—You are right. An impossible position of Pawns or pieces is a defect in a problem that would disqualify it in a competition; but we are not disposed to strain such a point against a problem of conspicuous merit intended for publication. These are too rare to be otherwise than welcome.

F Sr (Blandford-square).—Is there not a solution to your problem by 1. Q to Kt sq?

A C (Abergavenny).—We are always glad to receive solutions from our readers, casually or regularly. Yours are duly acknowledged below.

J D (Somerset).—We are obliged for the trouble you have taken.

R L (Winchester).—There is no collection of chess stories so admirable as Walker's "Chess and Chess Players."

VA (U.S.).—Thanks for your very interesting letter. The inclosure shall be forwarded to Mr. Gossip if we can ascertain his address. Solutions of Nos. 1892, 3, and 4, correct.

W H T (Yokohama).—Very good and very acceptable.

H F A (Manchester).—Much too simple.

M CUMMING (Augusta, U.S.A.).—Correct solution of No. 1894.

J A (Broadmoor).—We accept your assurance that you had not seen the published solution of No. 1895 when you forwarded yours.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1896 received from H Hampton, P S Shenele E L G, G C Baxter, Mrs A Clifford, M Gonzales, F Junta, Juan Carrasco, J Touliquié, H T Young, W T R, and Onne.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1897 received from P S Shenele, H Hampton, W D Jones, G C Baxter, Alfred W Hale, Mrs A Clifford, M Gonzales, F Junta, Juan Carrasco, J Touliquié, James Atkinson, H T Young, Ch Pompe, M Dawson, Smutch, W T R, J Lindley, Vleurgat, Ina, Barton and Co, and Emile Frau.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1898 received from H B, East Marden, Shadforth, H Hampton, Norman Rumbelow, Cant, Alfyn, R H Brooks, Frank E Purchas, Alpha, W D Jones, Julia Short, B L Dyke, R Jessop, Elsie, C S Coxe, S Farrant, C Darragh, Jupiter Junior, H Langford, Nerina, L Sharswood, E Sharswood, C Oswald, T Roberts, R Ingersoll, An Old Hand, H Barrett, Kitten, D Templeton, E Elsbury, R Blacklock, Ben Nevis, H Brewster, M O'Halloran, T Greenbank, P S Shenele, Dr F St, E L G, Mrs A Clifford, J H Brown, H W Tsenchard, C J Stephen, J W W, H T Young, William Scott, Smutch, W Biddle, Vere V King, M Dawson, George Roe, J Tucker, V Vleurgat, Hereward, A C Edwards, Emile Frau, and E H H V.

By EAST MARDEN.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played between Mr. MASON and an Amateur.

(King's Gambit declined.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)	WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	11. Q takes B	Kt to K 2nd
2. P to K B 4th	P to Q 4th
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P takes K P
4. Kt takes P	B to K 3rd
5. P to Q 4th

Better than 5. Kt to Q B 3rd, a move which is sometimes adopted by good players.

5.	P takes P (en passe.)	12. R takes P	Q Kt to B 3rd
		13. B to B 4th	Castles (Q R)
		14. Q Kt to B 3rd	K R to K sq
		15. P to K Kt 4th	Q to R 6th
		16. Kt takes Kt	Kt takes Kt (dis. ch)
		17. K to B 2nd	R to Q 7th (ch)

If 5. Kt to Q 2nd, then follows 6. B to K 3rd, Kt takes Kt; 7. B P takes Kt, P to K B 4th; 8. Q to Q 2nd, B to K 2nd; 9. P to Q B 4th, &c.

6. B takes P	B to Q B 4th
7. P to B 5th	B takes P

Of course, he should have played the Bishop to Q 4th; the capture of the Pawn was a miscalculation, we presume.

8. B takes B	Q to B 3rd
9. Q to Q 5th	Q takes B
10. R to B sq	Q to R 4th

He might have saved the Bishop, at the cost of a very bad game, by 10. Q to K 3rd. If then White continue with 11. Q takes B, Black's answer is 11. Kt to Q 2nd, &c.

A very ingenious attempt to draw the game.

		18. B takes R	Q takes P (ch)
		19. K to B 3rd

If 19. K to B sq, then 19. Q to R 6th (ch), and white must play the King to B 3rd eventually, to avoid the perpetual check.

		19.	Kt to K 4th (ch)
		20. Q takes Kt

The coup juste.

		20.	Q takes Q

20. R takes Q might have prolonged the game, but could hardly have influenced the result.

		21. B to B 4th, and wins.

Played at Pursell's Coffee-House between Messrs. EARNSHAW and MACCONAS.—(Centre Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. E.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)	WHITE (Mr. E.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	9. Kt to K 2nd	Kt to K R 3rd

		12. Kt takes P	Q to Kt 8th (ch)
		13. K to Q 2nd	Q takes R

Black adopts a defence the whole tendency of which is to develop the first player's game. The right move here is 3. Kt to K B 3rd.

The termination of this chess-kin is a good illustration of fatality in chess. Black imprisons his Queen, leaves a mate open, and—wins a Rook!

4. P to B 3rd	P takes P	14. Q to K Kt 3rd	P to K Kt 3rd
5. P takes P	Q to B 3rd	15. Q to Q B 3rd,
6. P takes B	Q takes R	and Black resigned.

The Chessplayer's Chronicle for July contains a good selection of original games, much less space being devoted to reprints in the present than in the last number. The "Useful End-Games" are continued by "W. W.," who writes this month of the position King, Knight, and Bishop against King; and the problem department is all that could be desired. It can hardly be news to the accomplished editor that the anecdotes quoted from an American paper were published at least sixty years ago in London, and subsequently in almost every newspaper and periodical with which the late Herr Löwenthal was associated. It was one of Löwenthal's amiable weaknesses to relate these fanciful legends of chess in reply to some inquiring correspondent. Like the head of Charles I. in Mr. Dick's memorial, the chessplaying King and the chessplaying Duke were always turning up in Löwenthal's work, and furnished a never-failing clue to his identity whenever he happened to write anonymously. The Era was specially favoured in this way; indeed, we believe the chess columns of our excellent contemporary contain a complete reprint of the anecdotes compiled by that miraculously learned trifler of the last century, Richard Twiss.

The Huddersfield College Magazine for July, as usual, bestows more attention upon problems than upon play, although the latter is not wholly ignored. We look forward with interest, as many chessplayers are doing now, to the issue of this capital chess periodical in a new form on Oct. 1.

The "Chess Primer," by Mr. Cook (the author of the "Synopsis of the Chess Openings"), published by Smart and Allen, Paternoster-row, will be welcomed by young players, to whose first steps in chess theory it should prove an admirable guide. The tyro is first introduced to the game by an epitome of its history, then follow the arrangement and powers of the pieces, explanations of technical terms, the laws, games, with explanatory reasons for every move, and several highly instructive end games. So far as the scope of the little book extends, the author's work is well done.

The Wiesbaden tourney was brought to a close on Sunday last, in accordance with the official programme. There were sixteen competitors in the Meister Tourney, each to play one game with the others, so that 120 games were contested in the brief space of eight days. The result was a tie, with a score of eleven between Messrs. Blackburne, Englisch, and Schwartz, who therefore divided the prizes. Most of the players engaged in this tourney have proceeded to Brunswick, where a tourney will be commenced to-day.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Aug. 9, 1879) of Dame Henrietta Katherine Burrell (the widow of Sir Percy Burrell, Bart., M.P.), late of Castle Goring, Sussex, who died on March 4 last at Hyères, France, was proved on the 28th ult. by Hervey Charles Pechell and Lord Zouche, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. The testatrix bequeaths £100 each to her executors; the diamond necklace and earrings given to her on her marriage to Mrs. Burrell, the wife of her nephew, Charles Raymond Burrell; £1000 to the Holt Middle-Class School; and £500 to her friend Mrs. Glover. All her real estate and the residue of the personalty she leaves to her sister Mrs. Adelaide Harriet Somerset.

The will (dated July 28, 1874) of Dame Jane Bottrall Jephson (wife of Sir James Saumarez Jephson, Bart.), late of Brighton, who died on July 20, 1879, was proved on the 29th ult. by Andrew Lawrie and David Ligat, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. The testatrix gives numerous legacies, and the residue of the property she has power by will to appoint, to her said two executors.

The will (dated Dec. 16, 1875) with a codicil (dated July 31, 1879) of Mr. William Henry Chicheley Plowden, late of Ewhurst Park, Hants, who died on March 29 last, was proved on the 22nd ult. by Miss Annette Sophia Plowden, the daughter, and Frederic William Steward, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths the piece of plate presented to him by the Hong merchants of China to his son William Chicheley Plowden. The residue of his real and personal estate is divided in various proportions between his sons and daughters.

The will (dated March 5, 1870) with two codicils (dated Dec. 13, 1873, and Jan. 6, 1875) of Mr. George Pritt, late of Helm Undermillbeck, Windermere, Westmoreland, who died on May 10 last, was proved on the 29th ult. by George Ashley Pritt, the son, Richard Pennington, and Mrs. Agnes Pritt, the widow, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife his furniture, plate, pictures, wines, and household effects, £1000, and certain stocks, shares, and securities, and some other legacies. The residue of his property, real and personal, is left upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his seven children.

The will (dated Sept. 18, 1878) with a codicil (dated Oct. 21 following) of Mr. Henry Bond Royds, late of No. 27, Albion-street, Hyde Park, who died on the 5th ult., was proved on the 26th ult. by Charles Duncan Royds and Henry Francis Auldjo, the nephews, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Royds, his leasehold residence in Albion-street, with the pictures, plate, wines, household goods, furniture, chattels, and effects; and all his real and the residue of his personal estate between his nephews, Charles Duncan Royds, Clement Royds, Robert Rendlesham Royds, Henry John Royds, George Fournereaux Royds, Henry Francis Auldjo, and John Rose Auldjo.

The will (dated Feb. 24, 1874) of Mr. Edwin Barnett, formerly of Belsize Park, but late of No. 5, Lexham-gardens, Cromwell-road, who died on the 10th ult., was proved on the 25th ult. by Mrs. Susan York Barnett, the widow, and Christopher George Barnett and Edwin Augustus Barnett, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £100 and furniture, plate, and effects to the value of £600; he also leaves £16,000 upon trust for her for life or widowhood, and then to his said two nephews. There are some considerable gifts to his relatives Fanny Eliza Sanders and Emily Ann Sanders, and legacies to others; and the residue he divides between his wife and the Misses Sanders.

The will (dated Dec. 12, 1879) of Mr. Edward Nathan, late of No. 8, Magdalenenstrasse, Harvestepude, Hamburg, who died on March 18 last, was proved in London on the 23rd ult. by Daniel Hertz, the executor, the personal estate in England being sworn under £30,000. The testator, subject to legacies to his relatives, makes, ordains, constitutes, and appoints as his heirs his wife, Mathilde, and his children, John, Adolphe, and Helène.

CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.

Her Majesty has been pleased, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, to grant pensions from the Civil List to the undermentioned persons:—

Lady Goss, £70 a year, and her two daughters £60 a year, jointly, in consideration of the services rendered to music by the late Sir John Goss.

Dr. Henry Dunbar, £80 a year, in consideration of his services to classical literature.

Mrs. Brown, £75 a year, in consideration of the services to science of her husband, the late Mr. J. A. Brown, F.R.S.

Lady Fothergill Cooke, £50 a year, in recognition of the services of her husband, the late Sir W. Fothergill Cooke, in connection with the introduction of the telegraphic system into this country.

Miss Georgiana Jackson, £45 a year, in recognition of the value of her philological researches.

On the 8th inst. the Brighton and Sussex Natural History Society held their annual excursion, going to Steyning and Wiston, the places of interest in those localities being visited, and many objects connected with the churches examined. The company were entertained by the Rev. John Goring, and a most agreeable day was spent.

Mr. Lehmann, the Liberal candidate for Evesham, was on the 9th inst. returned by 378 votes as against 376 given to to Mr. Dixon Hartland, the Conservative candidate.—At Plymouth Mr. Edward Clarke, Q.C., who stood in the Conservative interest, was elected by a majority of 144 over Sir George Young. The polling in the Tewkesbury election took place on Saturday, when Mr. Martin, the Liberal candidate, was returned by a majority of 82 over his opponent, Mr. Fowler; thus leaving the representation unchanged.—Mr. Baldwin, the Liberal candidate for Bewdley, was on Monday returned by a majority of 120 over Mr. Marcy, Conservative. The representation is unchanged.

The Cobden Club held its annual dinner at Greenwich last Saturday. Earl Spencer, who presided, addressed the members upon the relation of the principles of the club to the politics of the day, in respect to free trade, our foreign policy, the objects at which the Government will aim in reforming the land laws, and religious toleration. M. Challemel-Lacour, who said he had been a member of the club for ten years, acknowledged the toast to the foreign friends. He alluded to the opposition which their principles met with, and expressed his admiration of the dexterity and courage of the Protectionists. But, in spite of all resistance, the desires of the Freetraders in England and France would be attained. M. de Lesseps also responded, and said his Panama Canal scheme might be regarded as certain of success. Among the other speakers were Mr. Baxter, M.P., Mr. J. W. Garratt, Professor Laughlin, Mr. Potter, M.P., Mr. Herbert Gladstone, M.P., and Sir Louis Mallett.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER

THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandruff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

SWEET SCENTS AS WAGERS.—In accordance with a suggestion which has been made—namely, that a Morocco Leather Case or Fancy Wooden Box containing a Bottle of Jockey Club Bouquet, Opoponax Perfume, or any other of the thousand and one sweet scents from flowers made by PIESSE and LUBIN, would be a suitable object for a wager, and far superior to a dozen of gloves as a memento of the race, the time, and the place, PIESSE and LUBIN now announce that they have a variety of such cases, containing various odours. Two-Bottle Cases, 21s.; Three-Bottle Cases, 31s. 6d.; Four-Bottle Cases, 42s.; Six-Bottle Cases, 63s. All filled with any perfume to order. No charge for engraving monogram on cases. The cases are made of cedar wood, king wood, myall wood, and others, lined velvet, bottles cut all over. They have also a variety more expensive, inlaid, and with gold and silver caps, from £5 to £10. Orders, with a bank note inclosed, attended to with dispatch.
PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London, W.

BREIDENBACH'S WOOD VIOLET. Fresh as the flower itself. Price 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s. Bottle. Sold at all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the Universe; or Breidenbach and Co., Distillers of Wood Violet to the Queen, 157B, New Bond-street, W. Trade-Mark, the "Wood Violet."

"AND TEETH LIKE ROWS OF PEARLS."
THE ORIENTAL TOOTH-PASTE.
The celebrated original and only genuine Oriental Tooth-Paste is signed "JEWSBURY and BROWN, Manchester. Established 50 years." PEARLY WHITE and SOUND TEETH, a healthy action of the gums, producing that firmness and rosy brightness of colour so essential to beauty, and fragrant breath, are all insured by the use of this most perfect Dentifrice. Pots, 1s. 6d.; double, 2s. 6d. All Perfumers and Chemists.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark, "Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT
is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."
"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 210 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly,
"GEORGE BOYD."

THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.
"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 29, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Snedeker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 219 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."

Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1880.

The Eastern Question forces itself upon public notice very inopportunely at the present moment. It has not received, it is true, much Parliamentary attention, nor can it be said to have seriously obstructed the progress of domestic business, so far, at least, as legislation is concerned. But it hangs as a cloud over the Commercial enterprise of the country, and, hardly less than the fluctuations of the weather, depresses the energies which ordinarily seek their outlet in the direction of industry and trade. It seems not a little humiliating that all Europe should be waiting with anxiety the determination of the Sultan and the Porte in regard to the Collective Note recently presented to them by the Powers on the subject of the Frontiers of Greece.

The rumours which have been originated in Constantinople, and which fly with electric speed to all the Courts of Europe, have been various and contradictory. Two queries have excited public speculation—what the Turks will do, and what, if they will do nothing, the Treaty Powers can agree to undertake. Much reliance seems to be placed by our Government upon the ultimate submission of the Porte to the fiat of European diplomacy. It is to be wished that this reliance is not misplaced. Resistance on the part of the Government at Constantinople (which means the will of the Sultan) would, it is said, be mere madness—contrary to all former experience in similar circumstances, and a simple prelude to the ruin of the Ottoman Empire. Yes; but it must be remembered that the alternative is one which, from the Turk's point of view, is equally desperate. If the rectification of the Frontiers of Greece and the settlement of the Montenegrin dispute, in conformity with the Berlin Treaty, could be looked upon as a guarantee for the perpetuation of Turkish rule where it yet exists, the pressure brought to bear upon the Porte by the United Diplomacy of the European Powers might succeed in extorting an acquiescent response. But can the Turk so regard it? Can the Pashas entertain for a moment this view of it? Is the status quo of the Sultan's Empire after these two points have been disposed of to be one of finality, assured by adequate protection against even proximate contingencies?

There are Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, for instance, more or less openly working for a structural union one with the other, with a view, no doubt, to throw off entirely the authority of the Sultan, even as Suzerain. Is this to be permitted to take effect, or do the Powers regard themselves as under a Treaty obligation to prevent it by force, if need be? Should the last question be answered in the negative, may it not be better to resist at once and to stake everything upon the cast of the die, than to submit to a perennial loss of its Territory, and to the no less certain destruction of the Empire, in Europe at least, by the somewhat slower process of internal decay? Of what avail, in the eyes of rapacious and arrogant Pashas, would be such an administrative reform of Turkey as would ensure the ascendancy of just Government in all its Provinces? The whole system of predatory dominion would collapse. Not a verdant spot would be left upon which political locusts could find for themselves an area for their ravages. It comes, then, to this—the prospect, looked at through the medium of Reform, is almost as hopeless to the dominant clique as that which is presented by utter destruction. Who is to say to which choice madness attaches? Reform, in the estimation of the great majority of the Pashas, is ruin. Resistance to the will of Europe is also ruin. "Kismet," as Punch's recent cartoon has put it, is the doom which, in any case, is suspended over Turkish rule in Europe. Under these circumstances, it is, perhaps, somewhat premature to count upon Turkish acquiescence in European Councils, however mad resistance to them may seem in the eyes of Western Civilisation.

It may be presumed, we apprehend, that Lord Granville has not only thought out the policy which he has adopted, but that he has come to something like agreement with the other great Powers as to the general course to be pursued in case of the refusal of the Sultan to abide by the decision of the Diplomatic Conference lately assembled at Berlin. Of course, there would be force enough at the disposal of either of the Treaty Powers to give their "Collective Note" full effect, so far as Greece is concerned. England, if it were so determined, could probably do so by a naval demonstration. The question is not whether the operation can be performed, but what are the probable consequences to the patient in the event of its being performed. Have our leading statesmen foreseen them? Have they so arranged their plans, as either to forestall them, or, at any rate, to put a limit to their ulterior development? When they have done their best, there cannot be a doubt that the introduction of force into the settlement of the question there must needs be a considerable range of risk and possibly of disaster. It is felt, we may suppose, by them, as it is surmised by most reflecting people, that the crisis is one of profound gravity. Until it be overpast nothing is settled, nothing can be taken for granted. Hence, perhaps, is due in great part the absence of a more decided growth of commercial confidence, here as well as elsewhere.

It is not impossible, of course, that the immediate occasion of present uneasiness—"the thorn in the flesh" of European Politics—may be disposed of by peaceful negotiation. The Porte, after all, may choose the alternative of submission. It seems much to be desired that it should do so. But we are unable to lay the flattering unction to our soul that this will be the end of trouble, so far as the East of Europe is concerned. It will take a great deal of nice steering in avoiding Scylla, to escape Charybdis; or, to change the figure, it will require the adoption of a truly scientific regimen to heal one eruption without provoking the outbreak of others. The questions which have come down to the present generation to deal with have been maturing for two or three centuries past. We cannot get rid of them. We cannot safely avoid them. We may easily make mistakes with regard to their treatment, but it is certain that we must bear their results. Meanwhile let us hope that no means will be resorted to by any of the great Parties of the State calculated to increase the difficulties in this matter with which her Majesty's Government have to contend. That they will take the Estates of the Realm into Council with them before they commit the Country to any irrevocable decision may be gathered from their own assurances. That all Parties are desirous of preserving peace is certain. That care will be taken not unnecessarily to wound the susceptibilities of any ruling Power we may, we think, be confident. And there we must leave the question. For the ultimate solution of it belongs to agencies beyond the control of individual or even national wisdom.

Yesterday week the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and the Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs, went in state to the ceremony of the trooping of the colours, of the Royal London Militia, which was held in the spacious drill ground of the regiment, adjoining their barracks in Finsbury.

An Industrial Exhibition was opened on Monday at Leicester by General Burnaby, M.P.

Mr. Baldwin Brown has been elected Professor of Fine Arts in Edinburgh University. The chair is a new one.

Mr. Thomas Fry, J.P., has been appointed City Treasurer in Dublin, in the place of the late Mr. Curtin.

The State apartments at Windsor Castle, were reopened on Thursday for public inspection, and will remain open on the usual days during the absence of the Queen.

Mrs. Gladstone on Monday distributed, in the Egyptain Hall of the Mansion House, Lady Peek's prizes to old and present scholars of the National Orphan Home.

Florence Marryat will begin a Reading Tour on Aug. 10, which will continue nightly to Dec. 15, and embrace visits to the principal watering-places and towns of England.

The Select Committee on the London Water Supply met on Tuesday to consider their report, but did not finish their labours, and will meet again on Tuesday next.

A new cricket-ground of eight acres, which has been leased by the Bradford Cricket Club and laid out at a cost of £4000, was opened on Tuesday by Alderman Holden, the Mayor.

A vacancy in the representation of Liverpool has been caused by the death of the Earl of Dalhousie, and the consequent succession of Lord Ramsay to the peerage.

Mr. Arthur Stanley Butler, B.A., of Exeter College, Oxford, has been elected to the Chair of Natural Philosophy, in the United College of St. Andrews, in room of Dr. Swan, resigned.

A verdict of £4500 damages was on Monday awarded at the Manchester Assizes, in an action brought against the Yorkshire Railway Company by Mrs. Hindle for the loss of her husband, a cotton manufacturer, of Blackburn.

A coal merchant has been fined twenty pounds, at the Hammersmith Police Court, for not providing a proper weighing machine when supplying a ton of coals to a customer. Three sacks were found to be eighty pounds short.

The Medical Press is glad to hear that the Secretary of State for War has sanctioned an additional allowance of four ounces to the three-quarters of a pound of flesh with bone that for a long time past has constituted the daily meat ration of the British lion, as represented by the infantry of the Line.

During the prevalence of a thick fog last Saturday evening the screw-steamer Centurion, and the ship Hydaspes, of 2093 tons, were in collision five miles off Dungeness, and the latter vessel was so severely injured that she sank in sixteen fathoms of water. The crew and passengers were saved.

Mr. Courtney, M.P., presided on the 15th inst. at the annual meeting of the National Society for Women's Suffrage. The report, which was adopted, urged that the efforts of the society should now be directed to remove the electoral disabilities of women as a part of the next Reform Bill.

Mr. G. F. H. Milne, owner of the fossil forest recently discovered at Oldham and pronounced by eminent geologists to be the only one of the kind in Great Britain, has offered to allow the Oldham Corporation to have care of it, and make a charge to visitors, the money to be applied towards a muscum.

At the annual general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society, held at the hall of the society yesterday week, Mr. John Moxon Clabon, of 21, Great George-street, Westminster, was elected president, and Mr. Druce, of 10, Billiter-square, vice-president of the society for the ensuing year.

The supply of live stock from the United States and Canada was less last week than that of the preceding week, but the arrivals of fresh meat and pigs showed a slight increase on the previous week; the total being 1341 cattle, 1526 sheep, 5487 quarters of beef, 844 carcases of mutton, and 125 pigs.

The Metropolitan Board of Works, at their meeting yesterday week, adopted a recommendation of the General Purposes Committee that the application of the National Sunday League for permission to place a band in Finsbury Park on Sunday evenings during the summer months should be granted.

The Rev. J. G. Wood, M.A., author of "Homes without Hands," &c., gave the third of the course of lectures on the "Seaside," at Dr. Chaning-Pearce's Geological Museum, Brixton-rise. The audience was large, and thoroughly enjoyed the lecturer's beautiful coloured sketches and graphic descriptions.

On Tuesday the new Townhall of Kingstown was formally opened by Lord Longford, in the absence of the Lord Lieutenant, who was prevented from attending owing to the illness of a near relative. A grand déjeûner was given on the occasion, and in the evening a ball on a scale of unusual magnificence.

The First Division of the Court of Session at Edinburgh gave judgment on Tuesday in an action by the City of Glasgow Bank liquidators asking that their remuneration should be fixed. The Court spoke highly of the tact, energy, and skill the liquidators had displayed, and fixed their remuneration at £35,400.

Dr. J. H. Gladstone distributed on Monday, at the office of the School Board for London, Victoria Embankment, the certificates and prizes awarded to the successful candidates in the examination on the "Science made Easy" course of twenty illustrated lessons, given to teachers in Metropolitan Board Schools, by Mr. John A. Bower, on behalf of Mr. T. Twining.

Earl Fortescue presided last week at the annual meeting of the Charity Voting Reform Association, held at the Westminster Palace Hotel. In moving the adoption of the report his Lordship dwelt at length upon the evils which the system of charity voting engendered, and warmly advocated the principles of the association.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the second week in July was 83,219, of whom 46,070 were in workhouses, and 36,924 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 797, of whom 582 were men, 170 women, and 45 children under sixteen.

A lofty obelisk, which is in course of erection on Tower-hill, Beaumaris, as a public memorial to the late Sir Richard Bulkeley, formerly Lord Lieutenant of Carnarvonshire, fell on Monday morning, a number of workmen having a very narrow escape. It stood in an exposed situation, and it is supposed that the recent heavy storms weakened its foundations.

At University College, London, the Hollier Scholarship for Hebrew, of £80 a year, has been awarded to Miss Ada Ballin, youngest daughter of Mr. Ballin, of 14, Tavistock-square. Miss Ballin, who is the first lady who has been successful in this examination, is the authoress of a Hebrew Grammar, which Messrs. C. Kegan, Paul, and Co., have just announced as in the press.

Earl Spencer and Mr. Mundella, M.P., opened the Central Schools at Sheffield on the 15th inst., in the presence of a large gathering, amongst whom were the Archbishop of York, Mr. Wortley, M.P., and a number of members of School Boards from a distance. The schools which, with the Board offices, have been erected at a cost of £50,000, will be devoted to the higher education of promising scholars draughted from the public elementary schools, and have in connection with them a number of scholarships. There is provision for the teaching of chemistry and cookery and for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, as well as for imparting technical education.

Messrs. Mayer and Co. have placed in the Burngreave-road Wesleyan Chapel, Sheffield, two magnificent stained-glass windows, consisting of a three-light east window and a five-light west window. They are in memory of the late Henry Fisher, of Norwood Grange, who was a prominent member of the Wesleyan body, and who left £700 for an organ, already put up, and £500 for the two windows just completed.

The grants made by the different City Companies in aid of technical education have given a great stimulus to work, and largely increasing numbers of students are presenting themselves for examination. The prize of £5 and a silver medal for technical telegraphy have this year been awarded to Mr. Sayers, of the Central Telegraph Department, Mr. Pink, of the same public office, obtaining the second award.

The newly elected Council of the Victoria University held its first sitting in Manchester on the 15th inst., and appointed six external examiners, including two pro-electors of Trinity College, Cambridge; one professor each of Oxford, the University College, London, and the Yorkshire College, Leeds. Professor Ward, of Owens College, was elected chairman of the General Board of Studies.

Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., presided last Saturday at a "drawing-room meeting" held at Cleveland House, Clapham Park, on behalf of the Princess Mary Village Homes for Little Girls, and in the course of his speech he appealed for funds to the extent of an additional thousand pounds per annum. The object aimed at in the "Homes" is to rescue girls form criminal influences. Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson, M.P., also spoke in support of the appeal made by the chairman.

A deputation from the Council of the Society of Arts waited on the Postmaster-General last Saturday to urge upon him the desirability of reducing the cost of inland telegrams. After going at great length into the financial statistics of his Department Mr. Fawcett said the question was one which could not be determined by himself, but must be considered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Government generally.

With the object of promoting the comfort and sobriety of the British soldier in the establishment of a military coffee tavern in the garrison of Woolwich, the park of Sir Spencer Maryon Wilson, at Old Charlton, was on Monday devoted to a tournament, in which the troops in garrison at Woolwich took part. The foundation-stone of a public hall in the village, to be erected by the Baronet, was laid by the young heir; and after a dinner to the tenantry from the Essex and Sussex estates the sports commenced.

Colonel Levett, the Conservative candidate for the representation of Lichfield, was on the 15th inst. returned by a majority of thirty-four votes over Sir John Swinburne, Liberal, in succession to Colonel Dyott, the unseated Conservative member. The election at Berwick-on-Tweed, last Monday, caused by Mr. Strutt's succession to the Belper peerage, ended by Captain Milne Home, the Conservative candidate, being returned by a majority of two over the Lord Advocate (Liberal).

Pursuant to a warrant of the Lords of the Treasury and her Majesty's Order in Council the annual "trial of the pyx" was held last week at Goldsmiths' Hall, where it has been conducted for very many years past. The trial this year was one of more than ordinary interest, as it not only marked a decade of the conduct of the trial under the new Coinage Act of 1870, but, as the Prime Warden of the Company pointed out in his speech at the banquet in the evening, it concluded ten years' work at the Mint as reorganized in that year.

At the Burlington Middle-class School for Girls, in Boyle-street, Regent-street, Mrs. W. H. Smith on Thursday, the 15th inst., distributed the prizes to the successful pupils, in the presence of a numerous assemblage of their parents and friends. The rewards which were given included a prize by the Bishop of London, another by the Rector of St. James's, several Scholarships from the bequest of the late Mr. Rickards, of Piccadilly, some prizes for needlework (which had been adjudged by Countess Spencer) and several additional ones for the special excellence of papers at the recent examination.

The gold medal of the British Medical Association will this year be awarded by the Committee of Council of the British Medical Association to William Farr, M.D., F.R.S., D.C.L., C.B., "as an expression of their high appreciation of his long, unwearied, and successful labours in behalf of statistical and sanitary science; as a recognition of the light he has thrown upon many physiological and pathological problems, and on account of the extraordinary services his work has rendered to the advancement of the health of the nation."

King's College Hospital was closed last Saturday evening, for the first time in its history, for the purpose of extensive repairs and a thorough cleansing and painting, arrangements having been made by the authorities for the removal of the patients to St. Thomas's, Middlesex, and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, while those who were deemed fit were removed to the Convalescent Home attached to King's College Hospital at Hemel Hempstead. The authorities hope to be able to reopen this institution on or about Sept. 20 next.

At the meeting of the Wesleyan Conference, in the City-road Chapel, on Tuesday, the Rev. Ebenezer Jenkins was elected President for the year, in succession to the Rev. B. Gregory. He received 281 votes; the Rev. C. Garret 54, the Rev. W. T. Radcliff 52, and the Rev. Thomas McCullagh 49. Mr. Jenkins has been much engaged in missionary work, and has since spent twelve years in circuit work, principally in London. We intend to give his portrait next week. The Rev. Marmaduke C. Osborn was elected secretary of the Conference by 319 votes, the Rev. R. N. Young receiving 22 votes.

A meeting of the Mansion House committee of the Rowland Hill Memorial Fund was held yesterday week, when it was stated that space would not permit of the erection of the statue to Sir Rowland Hill beneath the portico in front of the General Post-Office, and it was determined to ask the Commissioners of Sewers to allow it to be placed at the south-east corner of the Royal Exchange, facing Cornhill. Dean Stanley, Mr. Whitehead said, had consented to a memorial tablet being placed in Westminster Abbey, near the grave of the Post Office reformer.

The Clothworkers' Company have subscribed £105 to the fund being raised at the Mansion House for the relief of the sufferers by the loss of her Majesty's ship Atalanta; and Mr. Willing, the proprietor of the Alexandra Palace, has remitted the Lord Mayor a cheque for the same amount, as the proceeds of a recent fête there.—The Clothworkers' Company have voted £21 in aid of the Royal Hospital for Children and Women, which is situate in the Waterloo-road.—Mr. S. S. Forster, the Head Master of the College for Blind Sons of Gentlemen at Worcester, states that the Clothworkers' Company has added to the scholarship endowment fund of the college the sum of 100 guineas a year, to provide for three scholarships of the annual value of 20, 30, and 50 guineas respectively. The endowment fund had previously reached £1000, which supported wo small scholarships.

In the presence of the Commander-in-Chief the Army Corps, numbering 10,000 men, 2300 horses, and eight batteries of artillery, divided into two opposing forces, had its first great sham fight at Aldershott on Tuesday, under the direction and superintendence of General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B. Major-General Cameron commanded the southern and Major-General Peyton the northern force. The fight lasted about three hours. For the first time in the history of mimic warfare, balloons were employed to reconnoitre the positions. The troops were under arms about five hours.

The directors of the Crystal Palace have decided to hold a series of technical exhibitions, and will begin them next year with one of wool and woollen manufactures. Everything relating to wool, from the fleece to the perfected cloth, will be shown, and visitors will be able to see the various processes of manufacture at work under the care of skilled artisans. Next year's exhibition will include all that relates to hair, fur, and feathers, and their many commercial applications. It is arranged that these exhibitions shall be under the management of Mr. P. L. Simmonds, who has for a long time been known in connection with such exhibitions at South Kensington.

A deputation, consisting of representatives of several important inland towns and of various Cattle Trade Associations, waited upon Earl Spencer, President of the Council, on Tuesday, to urge the strong objections entertained as to the restrictions which exist on foreign supplies of meat, particularly as to American cattle. Lord Spencer expressed his sympathy with the objects of the deputation, and promised to do all in his power to make the restrictions as light as possible, so that, whilst affording an absolute protection to the farmer, as much latitude as possible should be given for the introduction of foreign and dead meat into our markets.

Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of the Dominion of Canada, Colonel Dennis, Deputy Minister of the Interior, Sir Charles Tupper, Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Hon. John Henry Pope, Minister of Agriculture, arrived at Liverpool on Monday by the Allan Mail-steamer Circassian. They were met by Sir A. T. Galt, High Commissioner for the Dominion, and in the afternoon the whole party proceeded to London, where for the next few weeks their address will be the Westminster Palace Hotel. It is understood that the chief object of the visit of these official representatives of the Canadian Government is to arrange the finances in connection with the completion of the Pacific Railway.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely rearranged, revised, re-written, annotated, and brought down to the present time, with a copious Introduction, by R. S. Guttridge, M.D. The present edition contains many important new chapters and sections, with new features and matter pertaining thereto, including the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of women and children. Diseases of Tropical Climates are fully considered, and the volume may be pronounced of the greatest value to families, emigrants, and missionaries.
Of this work a Physician of high standing writes:—
"I have gone pretty well through your Edition of Laurie's Domestic Homœopathic Medicine, and I can truly say that it is the most perfect work of its kind ever published; in fact, it is, to my mind, too good for the general public, as it enlightens them too much in the art and mystery of medicine and surgery. For young medical beginners such a work is invaluable, as it would save them a great amount of reading. It is really superior to any Domestic yet published. I have the First and Second Editions of Laurie, and your Edition only shows what the work has developed into."

Just out, Thirtieth Edition, post 8vo, cloth, price 5s.,

EAU DE SUEZ.
There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore a cure for this evil, not only immediate but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which, although so perfectly innocuous that it may taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris "Figaro" and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath, will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M Suez recommends his Orange Tooth-Paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of Tooth-Brush made from the finest badger-hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by this great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336, Oxford-street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s.; Yellow Thread, 2s. 9d.; Red Thread, 3s.; Orange Paste, 4s. 6d.; Tooth Brush, 1s. 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage-free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name Suez stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of Wilcox and Co. on the labels.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark, "Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT
is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."
"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 219 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly, "GEORGE BOYD."
THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.
"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 29, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Suedeker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 219 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."
Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

SWEET SCENTS AS WAGERS.—In accordance with a suggestion which has been made—namely, that a Morocco Leather Case or Fancy Wooden Box containing a Bottle of Jockey Club Bouquet, Opoponax Perfume, or any other of the thousand and one sweet scents from flowers made by PIESSE and LUBIN, would be a suitable object for a wager, and far superior to a dozen of gloves as a memento of the race, the time, and the place, PIESSE and LUBIN now announce that they have a variety of such cases, containing various odours. Two-Bottle Cases, 21s.; Three-Bottle Cases, 31s. 6d.; Four-Bottle Cases, 42s.; Six-Bottle Cases, 63s. All filled with any perfume to order. No charge for engraving monogram on cases. The cases are made of cedar wood, king wood, myall wood, and others, lined velvet, bottles cut all over. They have also a variety more expensive, inlaid, and with gold and silver caps, from £5 to £10. Orders, with a bank note inclosed, attended to with dispatch.
PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London, W.

TOURISTS.—Their skins always suffer. Blotches, roughness, and general coarseness disfigure it. THE ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the whitest and purest of all soaps, and by its wonderful purifying action preserves it soft and free from complexionable blemishes. Recommended by the entire Medical Profession. A boon to sensitive skins. Retail Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. Chief Dépôt, 532, Oxford-street, London.

BREIDENBACH'S WOOD VIOLET.
Fresh as the flower itself. Price 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s. Bottle. Sold at all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the Universe; or Breidenbach and Co., Distillers of Wood Violet to the Queen, 157B, New Bond-street, W. Trade-Mark, the "Wood Violet."

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.
Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post-free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—ROBARE'S AUREOLINE produces the beautiful Golden Colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Prices 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., of all Perfumers. Wholesale, HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough-street, W.; and 93 and 95, City-road, E.C., London. Pinaud and Meyer, 37, Boulevard de Strasbourg, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; 44, Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

18, WIGMORE-STREET, LONDON, W.,
For the superiority of their Pianos exhibited at the
PARIS INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION of 1878.

"There is but one class of Gold Medals for the Exhibition, and the DECORATION OF THE CROSS OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR CONSTITUTES A SUPERIOR RECOMPENSE."
Extract from the Special Report signed by M. A. FETIS, Official Reporter.

The value of this Award is still further enhanced by the fact that the Decoration was CONFERRED ON NO OTHER British Pianoforte Manufacturer.

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
The principal of the previous honours gained by the BRINSMEAD PIANOS are:—
THE DIPLOMA OF HONOUR and GOLD MEDAL, South Africa, 1877.

throughout Europe and America.

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Nov. 4, 1878.
"I have attentively examined the beautiful pianos of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons that are exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. I consider them to be exceptional in the ease with which gradations of sound can be produced, from the softest to the most powerful tones. These excellent pianos merit the approbation of all artists, as the tone is full as well as sustained, and the touch is of perfect evenness throughout its entire range, answering to every requirement of the pianist.
"CH. GOUNOD."

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Sept. 8, 1878.
"We, the undersigned, certify that, after having seen and most conscientiously examined the English Pianos at the Universal Exhibition of 1878, we find that the palm belongs to the Grand Pianos of the house of Brinsmead."
NICOLAS RUBINSTEIN,
D. MAGNUS,
Chevalier ANTOINE DE KONTSKI, Court Pianist to the Emperor of Germany.

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"I have pleasure in expressing my opinion that the Paris Exhibition Model Grand Pianofortes of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons are unsurpassed. The tone is deliciously sweet, sustained, and extraordinarily powerful; the touch responds to the faintest and to the most trying strains on it, and the workmanship is simply perfect. W. KUHE."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Illustrated London News."
"The French papers have been unanimous in their expressions of admiration of these splendid instruments. The grands especially have enchanted the Parisian professors and amateurs of music by their noble sonority, their enormous power, and the sympathetically voice-like quality of tone. The touch is so beautifully light, elastic, and certain, that many pianists of every nation, from the Abbé Liszt downwards, who have tried these instruments, have highly complimented the enterprising manufacturers on their success."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Daily Chronicle."
"In tone the instrument is exceedingly rich and sweet, and in touch the very perfection of lightness. Messrs. Brinsmead may certainly be congratulated upon their success."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Morning Advertiser."
"The Legion of Honour. In addition to the other distinctions awarded to Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the founder of the firm has been created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Daily News."
"A new Pianoforte, recently manufactured by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, claims notice, not only on account of its beauty and richness of tone, but specially for some ingenious mechanical novelties, the most important being the addition of a third pedal, by means of which the sound of any note or notes may be sustained indefinitely prolonged at the will of the player. Thus bass notes may be sustained after being struck by the left hand, which may then be taken away, and, with the right hand, may execute the most brilliant staccato passages, thus giving almost the effect of four hands. The patent 'check-repeater action,' a speciality of Messrs. Brinsmead, enables the performer to command with ease the most rapid reiteration of the same note; the facility of the key movement in general being such that glissando passages can be executed with such perfect ease as to render them practicable with the lightest touch. The volume of tone is intensified by a peculiar construction of the sounding-board, another improvement being the system of bridging, by which the vibrations are increased and rendered sympathetic. The Pianoforte is capable of all degrees of delicacy and power, its massive structure rendering it less liable to get out of tune than usual; and the instrument is altogether calculated to extend the reputation of its makers."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PIANOS
may be obtained of all the principal Musicsellers.
Prices from 35 guineas to 250 guineas.

THE EARL OF KINTORE.

The Right Hon. Francis Alexander Keith-Falconer, eighth Earl of Kintore, Lord Falconer, of Halkerton, and Lord Keith of Inverurie, in the Peerage of Scotland, and Baron Kintore, in that of the United Kingdom, Lieutenant and Sheriff Principal of Aberdeenshire, died suddenly, on the 18th inst., at his town residence, 31, Half Moon-street. His Lordship was born June 7, 1828, the second son of Anthony Adrian, seventh Earl of Kintore, by Louisa, his wife, youngest daughter of Francis Hawkins, Esq., and succeeded to the peerage at his father's death, July 11, 1844, his elder brother, William Adrian, Lord Inverurie, having been killed while hunting in December the previous year. The Earl was formerly Lord Lieutenant of Kincardineshire, and lately of Aberdeenshire. He married, June 24, 1851, Louisa Madeleine, second daughter of Francis Hawkins, Esq. (brother of the late Countess of Kintore), and leaves two sons and three daughters. The elder son and successor, Algernon Hawkins Thomond, Lord Inverurie, now ninth Earl of Kintore, &c., was recently the unsuccessful Conservative candidate for Chelsea. He was born Aug. 12, 1852; married, Aug. 14, 1873, Lady Sydney Charlotte Montagu, second daughter of George, sixth Duke, and half-sister of the present Duke of Manchester, K.P., and has issue. The present Earl is Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and of the Royal Society of Scotland and Provincial Grand Master of Freemasons in Kincardineshire.

SIR C. BEADON.

Sir Cecil Beadon, K.C.S.I., died on the 18th inst. at Latton, Wiltshire. He was the youngest son of the late Mr. Richard Beadon, and was born in the year 1816. Educated at Haileybury College, he entered the Bengal Civil Service and proceeded to India in 1836. He was appointed Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal in 1843, Secretary to the Board of Revenue in 1847, and Secretary to the Government of Bengal in 1852. In 1854 he was appointed Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department, and was transferred to the Foreign Department in 1859. He was nominated a member of the Supreme Council of India in 1860, and was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in 1862. He received the Order of the Star of India, in recognition of his long services, on his retirement in 1866.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL NORTHEY.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Brook Northey, of Sevenoaks, Kent, late Coldstream Guards, J.P. and D.L. for Kent, Lord of the Manors of Box and Hazlebury, Wilts, and patron of one living, died on the 10th inst., aged seventy-five. He was second son of the Rev. Edward Northey, M.A., Canon of Windsor, by Charlotte, his wife, sister of General Sir Herbert Taylor, and was grandson of William Northey, Esq., M.P., LL.D., F.R.S., one of the Commissioners for Trade and Groom of the Chamber to King George III. He married, Dec. 3, 1829, Agnes, daughter of General Boreel, Grand Ecuyer of King William II. of the Netherlands, and niece of Baron Fagel, Ambassador in England. His eldest son, William Brook Northey, of the 71st Highland Light Infantry, died in the Crimea.

We have also to record the deaths of—

The Earl of Dalhousie, on the 20th inst. His memoir is deferred until next week.

John Sanders, Esq., of Hookwood House, Charlwood, Surrey, on the 8th inst., suddenly, aged sixty-five.

The Rev. George A. W. Downing, Chaplain to the Manchester Adult Deaf and Dumb Society, on the 13th inst.

The Rev. Edward John Treffry, D.C.L., of Place, Cornwall, on the 10th inst., at Fowey, aged seventy-one. Dr. Treffry was a considerable landed proprietor in his county.

David Inglis Money, late Judge of the High Court of Appeal, Calcutta, on the 16th inst., at Stodham Park, Petersfield, aged seventy-two.

John Guest, Esq., F.S.A., suddenly, at his residence at Rotherham, on the 18th inst. Mr. Guest was well known for his industry in historical researches. His latest work was "The History of Rotherham."

Reymond Hervey de Montmorency, Major Bengal Staff Corps, and Deputy Commissioner of Oude, on the 15th inst., at Elmfield, Streatham, aged forty-four. He was son of the late Major Reymond Hervey de Montmorency, 65th Regiment Bengal Native Infantry.

Mrs. Harvey, of Ickwell Bury, Rosa Frances, wife of John Edmond Audley Harvey, Esq., Bedfordshire, J.P. and D.L., and sixth daughter of Admiral the Hon. Keith Stewart, on the 12th inst., at Davos Platz Engadine, aged twenty-four, leaving one son and two daughters.

The Rev. Charles B. Snepp, Vicar of Perry Barr, Birmingham. He was editor of "Songs of Grace and Glory," a work evidencing great pains and research. He also edited "Pastoral Addresses and Sermons," and "Eastern Tour to the Holy Land and the Great Pyramid of Egypt."

Henry Phillpotts, Esq., J.P., of Longcroft, Devonshire, on the 9th inst., at Hazlemere, Torquay, aged seventy-one. He was second son of the late Dr. Phillpotts, Bishop of Exeter, by Deborah Mary, his wife, fifth daughter of William Surtees, Esq., of Seaton Burn, Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was formerly Captain 29th Regiment.

Herbert Henry Shadforth Spoor, Esq., Lieutenant 25th Regiment, on May 31 last, at Pezwau, in Afghanistan. He was the only son of the late Captain Appleby Spoor, also of the 25th (King's Own Borderers) Regiment, of Whitburn, Durham, and Warkworth, Northumberland, and volunteered last year for service in India.

The Rev. Edward Otto Trevelyan, on the 9th inst., at Ashwick Hall, Marshfield, Gloucestershire, aged seventy. He was next younger brother of Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., and fifth son of the late Ven. Archdeacon George Trevelyan, Rector of Nettlecombe, by Harriet, his wife, daughter of Sir Richard Neave, Bart.

Margaret, Dowager Duchess of Somerset, on the 18th inst., at her town residence, Somerset House, Park-lane. Her Grace was the eldest daughter of Sir Michael Shaw-Stewart, Bart., Lord Lieutenant of Renfrewshire, by his wife, Catharine, youngest daughter of Sir William Maxwell, Bart., of Sprinkell. She was married, as his second wife, July 28, 1836, to Edward, eleventh Duke of Somerset, who died Aug. 15, 1855 (father of the present Duke of Somerset, K.G.), but had no issue.

F St (Blandford-square).—In your description of the position there is a White Bishop on K R 7th and a Black Pawn on K R 2nd, identical squares! You probably intended the Pawn to be placed on K R 3rd, but in that case there is a solution by way of 1. B to Q R sq. Why not use diagrams?

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played in the Wiesbaden Tourney on the 10th inst., between Herr W. PAULSEN and Mr. MASON.
(Irregular Opening.)

WHITE (Herr P.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 3rd

Although irregular in its course, this opening is soon developed into a form of the Fianchetto.

1.	P to K B 4th
2. P to Q B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd
3. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to K 3rd
4. P to K Kt 3rd	B to K 2nd
5. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3rd
6. B to Kt 2nd	Castles
7. K Kt to K 2nd	P to B 3rd
8. P to Q 5th	B P takes P
9. P takes P

This manœuvre has the effect of weakening the adverse Queen's Pawn, but it cannot be said to have strengthened his own centre. It is worth noting that of all White's army these two adventurous Pawns alone succeeded in penetrating the enemy's territory.

9.	P to K 4th
10. Castles	Kt to R 3rd
11. P to Q R 3rd	B to Q 2nd
12. P to Q Kt 4th	Q to K sq

19. B to Kt 2nd	R to K Kt sq

WHITE (Herr P.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
20. Q to R sq

We see no better move here, for White, than 20. Q to K sq, as Black seems to be armed at all points. The move in the text turns out to be lost time.

20.	R to Kt 2nd
21. K to R 2nd	Q R to K Kt sq
22. Q to K sq	B to Q sq

Forseeing the course of the game, and therefore opening the file for his Rook.

23. Q to B 2nd	P to Kt 3rd
24. R to K R sq

It is necessary to move the Rook to clear the road for the King's retreat.

24.	P to K R 4th
25. K to Kt sq	P to R 5th
26. P to Kt 4th	P to K 6th

An excellent stroke.

27. Q takes P	P takes P
28. K to B sq

Clearly his best move. If 28. P takes P, then 28. Kt takes P, followed by 29. Kt to K 4th, in reply to 29. Q to B 3rd.

28.	R to K sq
29. Q to B 2nd	P to Kt 6th
30. Q to B 3rd	K to Kt sq
31. Kt to Q 4th	Kt to K Kt 5th

A good finish to an interesting game.

32. P takes Kt	B takes P
33. Q to Q 3rd	Q takes P (ch)
34. Kt to B 3rd	B takes Kt
35. B takes B	R to K 6th,

and White resigned.

When announcing the result of the Wiesbaden tourney last week we had not space to acknowledge our indebtedness to the courtesy of Mr. Mason for that information and for the full score which appears below. From other accounts which have since come to hand we gather that the meeting was a successful one, although there was, of course, the inevitable wrangle, this time in relation to the rules and their interpretation. An open rupture was happily averted by the self-denial of the amateur section of the competitors. Taking the minimum of lost games as a standard, the best score was made by Herr Englisch, who did not lose one, and the next best by Messrs. Schwartz and Blackburne. Herr Schallop's losses were gains only to competitors below him in the score-list, and the same may be said in Mr. Mason's favour. The others were out of the running on this occasion; indeed, it seems clear that a competitor who loses more than one game has small chance of taking one of three prizes in a single-game pool.

The annual inter-colonial chess-match between Victoria and New South Wales was played, as usual, by telegraph on the Queen's birthday. It was won by Victoria with a score of four games to three. Mr. Wisker, a well-known London chessplayer, who has been sojourning in Queensland for some time past, and is now at Melbourne, played on the winning side, but contributed nothing to the victory, for he was defeated by Mr. Russell, of Sydney. Messrs. Burns, Goldsmith, Hamel, and a promising "colt" named Ealing won the match for their colony.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated July 17, 1873) with two codicils (one bearing even date with the will and the other dated Feb. 25, 1878) of Mr. John Alexander Hobson, late of Manchester, and of Green Hall, Bollin Fee, Wilmslow, Cheshire, merchant, who died on May 14 last, was proved on the 7th ult. at the Chester district registry by Richard Hobson, the nephew, Alfred Thomas and Robert Hammond, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths to his sister, Mrs. Sarah Sumner Hammond, all his furniture, plate, pictures, household effects, horses and carriages; to his executors, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Hammond, £300 each; to his great-nephew, John Alexander Hobson, and his great-niece, Amy Ann Hobson, £7500 each; upon trust for his niece, Elizabeth Ann Hobson, for life, £6000; to Mrs. Mary Ann Van Grinsen for life or until she shall marry again, an annuity of £120; and to such of his servants who have been one year in his service at his decease, £10 each. The residue of his real and personal estate is left upon trust for his said sister for life, and then for his said nephew Richard Hobson, his wife, and children.

The will (dated Feb. 28, 1876) with three codicils (dated Feb. 28 and March 3, 1876, and May 6, 1880) of Mr. Alfred Swaine Taylor, M.D., F.R.S., late of No. 15, St. James's-terrace, Regent's Park, who died on May 27 last, was proved on the 5th inst. by Frederick John Methold and John Bonham Croft, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator gives to his son-in-law, Mr. F. J. Methold, £2500, and all his furniture, plate, pictures, household effects, horses and carriages, also his freehold house at Northfleet and his leasehold house in St. James's-terrace, Regent's Park-road; and the residue of his property, real and personal, is to be held upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Edith Caroline Methold, her husband and children.

The will of Mr. Thomas White, of Aldershot, Hants, has been recently proved by Henry Harris Gatelee and Robert Loveband Fulford, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000.

The will (dated Feb. 6, 1873) with two codicils (dated Sept. 19, 1879, and Feb. 7, 1880) of Mr. Biggs Andrews, Q.C., late of Heavitree House, near Exeter, who died on April 28 last, was proved at the Exeter district registry on the 12th ult. by the Rev. Charles Robert Ferguson Davie, Joseph Kaye, and Francis Elliott Kitchener, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to his sister-in-law, Miss Joanna Gibson Craig, £500, and an annuity of £150; to his late clerk, Francis Gough, an annuity of £52; to his son-in-law, the Rev. C. R. F. Davie, £5000; to his daughter, Mrs. Anne Clarissa Ferguson Davie, £5000, and all his furniture, plate, pictures, and effects; to his executors, £100 each; and legacies to his servants. The real estate is directed to be sold, and the proceeds, with his residuary personal estate, held upon trust for his said daughter for life, and at her decease for her children or issue, as she shall by deed or will appoint. The deceased was the senior Bencher of the Middle Temple and the last Commissioner of Bankrupts for the Exeter district.

The will (dated April 22, 1879) of Mr. James Diggle, late of Hindley Green Hall, Hindley, near Wigan, colliery proprietor, who died on May 19 last, was proved on the 3rd inst. by Edward Potts, the nephew, George Swallow, Timothy Boddington, James Thorp, and James Hart, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths to his executors £50 each; to his children, Mrs. Sarah Peters, Mrs. Mary Jane Thorp, and Arthur Allen Diggle, £100 each; to his wife, Mrs. Charlotte Letitia Diggle, £200, an annuity of £300 for life, and the use of his residence, Hindley Green Hall, with the furniture, plate, pictures, household effects, horses and carriages, for life or widowhood, and he confirms the settlement made in 1879 of his freehold estate, known as "Ranicars," at Hindley, in favour of his wife and children. The trustees are authorised to carry on his colliery, and the residue of his real and personal property is to be divided between his three children.

The will (dated Feb. 28, 1853) of Mr. Richard Baker Wingfield Baker, J.P., D.L., late of Orsett Hall, Essex, and of Lowndes-square, who died on March 25 last, was proved on the 7th inst. by the Hon. George Pepys, the nephew, and Rowland Nevitt Bennett, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator leaves all his real and personal estate to his son, Digby Hanmer Richard Wingfield, the legacies to his wife, Mrs. Margaret Maria Wingfield Baker, having lapsed by her death in testator's lifetime. The deceased was formerly M.P. for South Essex.

The will (dated Sept. 8, 1873) with a codicil (dated March 24, 1879) of Mr. William Howard, late of Ryde Villa, Burnt Ash-lane, Lee, Kent, who died on the 15th ult., was proved on the 30th ult. by Herbert Howard Keeling, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator gives £100 each to the Kent Dispensary and the Dreadnought Hospital Ship, Greenwich; £50 each to the South-Eastern London Auxiliary of the London City Mission and the Lee National Schools; £5500, his household furniture and effects, two cottages, and an annuity of £200 to his sister-in-law, Miss Susan Neales; and some other legacies. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his only child, Mrs. Frances H. Keeling, her husband and children.

The will (dated Nov. 19, 1873) of Mr. Thomas Leedham Robinson, formerly of Croydon, but late of No. 40, Queensborough-terrace, Kensington, who died on July 15 last, was proved on the 13th inst. by Henry Drake, the personal estate being sworn under £9000. The testator settles certain freehold house property on his daughter Mrs. Elinor Katharine Miller, and he confirms the settlement of other properties made on his daughter Mrs. Elizabeth Courtauld. The residue of his estate he gives to his daughter Miss Flora Elizabeth Robinson.

The will (dated June 6, 1878) of Mr. William Thomas Thornton, C.B., late of the India Office, and of No. 7, Cadogan-place, Sloane-street, who died on the 17th ult., was proved on the 12th inst. by Captain Edward Zohrab Thornton, the son, and Thomas W. C. Jones, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £8000. The testator desires to be buried in an unbricked grave, and in a wicker coffin of some such sort as that lately recommended by Mr. Seymour Haden; and he leaves all his property in succession to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Evelyn Thornton, his said son, and his son's wife; and on the death of the survivor to his grandchildren, being the children of his said son and of his deceased daughter, Mrs. Evelyn Danvers Jones.

The will (dated April 16, 1878) of Mrs. Ann Cash, late of No. 5, Weymouth-terrace, Hackney-road, who died on the 13th ult., was proved on the 1st inst. by Frederick Liquorish and Isaac Cash, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £6000. The testatrix bequeaths £300 each to the Central London Ophthalmic Hospital, Gray's-inn-road; the German Hospital, Dalston; the North-Eastern Hospital for Sick Children, Hackney-road; the London Hospital, Whitechapel-road; the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, Bishopsgate; the Providence Baptist Chapel, Hackney-road; and the Wesleyan Chapel, Hackney-road; and £100 to the Royal Hospital for Incurables.

A NORWEGIAN VIKING'S SHIP.

On the farm of Gokstad, not far from Sandefjord, a favourite watering-place of the Norwegians, situated on the western coast of the Christianiafjord, is a large mound, about 150 ft. in diameter, which for centuries has been called Kongshaugen, or the King's Hill; and there was a local tradition of some king or mighty chief being buried there. Last winter, however, the people of the farm began excavating the hill, and soon came upon some timber and wooden materials. This discovery was at once reported to the Norwegian Society for the Preservation of Ancient Northern Monuments at Christiania. They sent down the well-known antiquary Mr. Nicolaysen, under whose guidance the excavation was continued during last April and May. It has resulted in a discovery of uncommon interest.

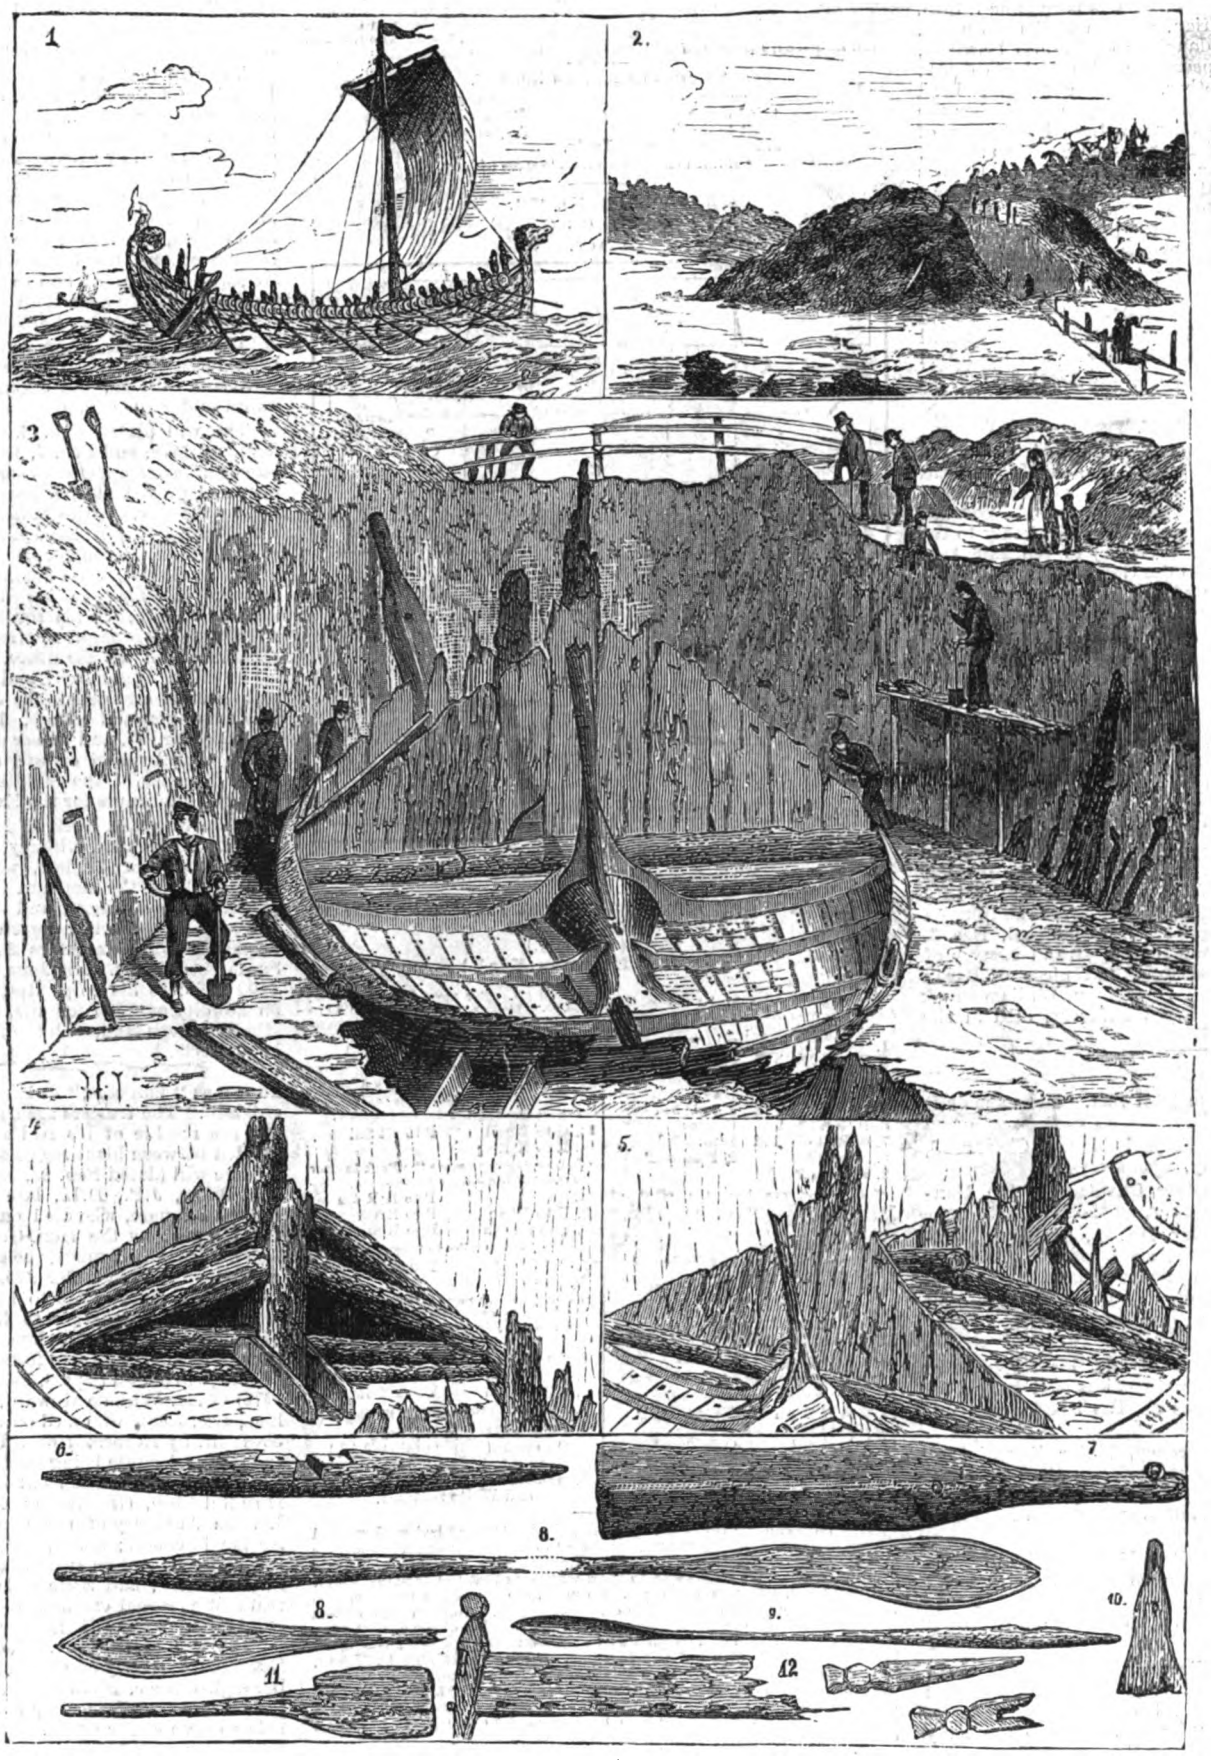
The hill contained the entire hull of an old ship from the Pagan times of the Vikings, in a remarkably good state of preservation. As estimated by the antiquaries, it dates from the period called the "younger iron age," and must be rather more than 1000 years old. In 1863 a vessel, 45 ft. long, was dug out at Nydam, in Schleswig; and in 1867 another, 43 feet in length, was discovered at Thune, in Norway; but the ship now found at Gokstad is not only much larger, but much better preserved, and contains a great number of articles, weapons and implements, which will aid in throwing light upon the life and customs of the old Norsemen.

The Gokstad vessel, built entirely of oak, is 75 English feet long between stem and stern, and 16 ft. broad amidships; and appears, like the Thune vessel, to be of a low build, drawing only 5 ft. The deals were riveted together by iron nails; and the ribs, of which there are twenty, are connected with the deals at the top by rivets, but at the bottom with ties, as in the vessel found at Thune. Amidships, in the bottom of the ship, is a heavy beam, both ends of which are fashioned in the shape of a fish's tail. This beam served as a support for the mast, of which there is still a piece standing in its place; while the upper part, which had been cut off, was found in the vessel. The mast appears to have been about 22 ft. long. Remains of two or three small boats were found; some pieces inside the ship, and some close to it.

In the fore-part of the vessel was a collection of various articles and utensils, such as a very large and well-made copper kettle; also a large wooden cask, which it is supposed must have been the water-cask of the crew; bits of sail and ropes, a great number of oars, some about 20 ft. long, and a rudder.

It appears, from the latest examination, that the ship had been built for sixteen oars only on each side, not for eighteen, as was at first supposed. One piece of timber turns out to be the stock of an anchor; the anchor was an iron one, of which only a few remains have been found. Several pieces of wood, of an unusual form, but quite sound and beautifully carved, and about 1½ foot long, are thought to have been the blocks used for the rigging. Each block is perforated with circular holes, which have the appearance of being worn by the ropes having been run through them. A wooden spade was also found. This, judging by its shape, is one of the implements of daily life, which during the course of a thousand years has undergone least alteration.

A number of shields were placed in a row inside the gunwale of the ship, like the scales on a fish. The chief part of these shields was made of wood, but of this nothing remains; only the centre pieces of iron, or bosses, which protected the outer side of the shields, were found here, at intervals of about eighteen inches from each other. The number of these shields, in all about one hundred, seem to have corresponded with the number of the crew. This arrangement of the shields on the inside of the gunwale of the ship is exactly the same as what is represented in the famous tapestry at Bayeux, in Normandy, which dates from the latter part of the eleventh century. That tapestry, as is well known, represents the ships of William the Conqueror on their way across the Channel to England. It is supposed, we believe, that these shields, being made of very thin materials, were only intended for ornament, as they were not strong enough to resist a heavy blow of the swords used at that time.



In the middle of the ship was a sepulchral chamber, to contain the body of the dead chieftain. It was built of strong spars and boards, in the shape of the roof of a house; but the pressure of the soil on top had proved too heavy, and one side had broken in. A great disappointment, however, met the antiquaries here. The sepulchral chamber had evidently been broken into, and at some time robbed of its contents. Some human bones, parts of a costly garb, richly embroidered with gold and silver, and bits of bridles, mounted with ornaments of lead and gilt bronze, were the only remains of any interest. A portion of the vessel under this chamber had been cut away; and it is supposed that the robbers had effected an entry by digging in under the ship and breaking through the bottom of it. The bones of three horses and a dog were found around the ship.

It was generally the custom in the time of the Vikings to bury a deceased Viking chief in his vessel, which had carried him from shore to shore in search of glory, fame, and wealth. The ship was usually placed with its stem towards the sea; so that when Odin, the mighty god of the northern mythology, should call the gallant chief, he could set sail straight off land, bound for Valhalla.

The hill is about one English mile distant from the shore of the fjord; but, judging from the appearance of the neighbourhood and the nature of the alluvial soil, it is evident that in olden times the sea washed close up to the base of the hill. Blue clay has principally been used in covering the ship, and this accounts for its excellent state of preservation.

According to the latest Norwegian papers the authorities have now decided on removing this interesting relic to Christiania. Workmen are already engaged in building a kind of movable supporting stage under the hull of the ship, upon which it will be drawn to the shore, where it will be put on board a large raft and towed up to Christiania by a steamer. On its arrival in Christiania, the ship will be taken to the University Museum, where a house will be built for its reception, and where it is intended to repair it as far as may be found advisable. When the work is completed and all the different objects of interest found in the ship and the excavated hill are properly arranged, the public will be admitted to view this unique piece of antiquity.

1. Supposed original appearance of the ship, fully equipped.
2. The "King's Hill," where the ship was found.
3. The ship on May 27, after being excavated.
4. Remains of fore-part of sepulchral chamber, seen from the stern.
5. Remains of sepulchral chamber, seen from the stem.
6. Stock of the anchor, 19 ft. or 20 ft. long.
7. The rudder, above 12 ft. long.
8. Oars, 19 ft. or 20 ft. long.
9. Smaller oars, for the small boats found in the ship.
10. Rudder for small boat.
11. Spade, 5 ft. long, somewhat damaged.
12. Remains of a bedstead.

THAMES AND ISIS STEAM-BOAT TRAFFIC.

During five years past there has been regular summer passenger traffic, once a week both ways, between Kingston and Oxford, by the steamer Isis, which belonged to Mr. H. Astrop. But last year he transferred it to the Thames and Isis Steam-Boat Company, taking the appointment of managing director. The Company has now got a new boat, the Thames, very superior to the Isis, built for its service by Mr. G. Davis, jun., of St. Helen's Works, Abingdon. This is the subject of our Illustration.

The Thames is a saloon-steamer, 95 ft. long by 13 ft. beam, built of Siemens steel, ¼ inch or 5-16th inch thick, with double sheer-strake. She is of extremely light draught, specially constructed for the somewhat difficult navigation of the Thames, with new and original arrangement of stern-post and stern-tubes, designed by her builder. The internal construction comprises a main saloon, 35 ft. in length, handsomely upholstered in blue Utrecht velvet, with ladies' cabin and lavatory communicating therewith. There is also a conveniently arranged and commodious smoking-saloon aft, with lavatory attached, besides captain's cabin, steward's pantry, and all other conveniences usually found in a seagoing vessel. The whole of the fittings are of teak. The boat is propelled by twin screws driven by a pair of engines, each of 7 in. cylinders, with 9 in. stroke; the boiler is of the return tubular type. This steamer is capable of the speed of twelve miles an hour. She has obtained the usual Board of Trade certificate, and carries 186 passengers. The engines, as well as the boat, were constructed by Mr. G. Davis, jun.

The arrangements for this season are very inviting to Londoners who have leisure for a few days' holiday trip up the river. The fare to Oxford is eighteen shillings: return fare thirty shillings. The steamer leaves Kingston on Monday a quarter before twelve at noon, and reaches Windsor at twenty minutes past five in the afternoon. You have the whole evening for a stroll in Windsor Park and comfortable dinner in the town, where you take your bed. Next morning brings you to Caversham Bridge, where you land at half-past six and stay the night. The third day's voyage brings you to Oxford at six o'clock on Wednesday evening. The return passage down from Oxford to Kingston is performed in two days, Thursday and Friday, stopping at Henley for the Thursday night.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1880.

Lord Hartington, the Secretary of State for India, in reply to a question put to him by Mr. A. Arnold, made a statement to the House of Commons on Monday last elucidatory of the present position of affairs in Afghanistan. It was clear as to the facts already known, and cautious as to the inferences which some may be disposed to draw from them. It indicated, as might have been reasonably expected, a desire on the part of the Marquis of Ripon, as Viceroy of India, to avoid any visible break in the policy that had been sanctioned by his predecessor, Lord Lytton, and, at the same time, to give to it a general direction conducive to the main object of the present Cabinet. Indeed, when the noble Marquis arrived at the seat of Government in India there appeared to be no obvious reason for any abrupt change in the administrative course then being pursued in reference to Afghanistan. It had been already decided that, pending the occupation of Candahar and protection of the Frontier which had been assigned by the Treaty of Gundamuk, our troops should return as early as possible from Cabul and Northern Afghanistan. As it was extremely desirable, previously to this military withdrawal, that a strong and capable Ruler should be found to assume the Government of Cabul and of that district, Lord Lytton had opened communications, in March last, with Abdurrahman Khan. Ever since that time these communications have been in progress. They have extended over a length of time not anticipated in the first instance. The distance between Turkestan, where Abdurrahman had fixed his quarters, and Cabul necessarily made all intercourse between him and the Indian Government slow, and, therefore, comparatively infrequent. The Grandson of Dost Mahomet was, as Lord Hartington candidly admitted to be not unnatural, in the circumstances, somewhat distrustful of the apparently disinterested offer made to him by the British Government. Moreover, he wished to be recognised, if possible, as the Ameer of an undivided Afghanistan. His position in Turkestan itself was not by any means securely established, and he had to observe the utmost caution among the tribes in the direction of Cabul, to ascertain how far he might depend upon their support. For some time, therefore, he fought rather shy of negotiations with the British Government. Lord Lytton, however, no doubt anxious to terminate as speedily and as satisfactorily as he could the invasion which he had commenced in some haste, and which had involved the Indian Government in such unexpected embarrassment, wisely determined to follow up his communications with Abdurrahman to a definite practical issue.

At this stage of affairs the new Viceroy could only continue the general plans which had been devised and set on foot by Lord Lytton. The outcome seems to have been so far successful. Abdurrahman has reached the neighbourhood of Cabul; has been well received by the Sirdars and the people; has been proclaimed Ameer at a Durbar held at Cabul with the assent of the British Government; and seems likely to be accepted by the "National party" in Afghanistan. The troops, therefore, of the Indian Government will shortly retire to positions selected partly with a view to their health, partly for the facilities they will give to the British authorities to watch the course of events and to afford protection to those Chiefs and Tribes who have been friendly to us; and, in the Autumn, will, it is hoped, return to India through the Passes. The Ameer has been simply recognised by the British Government, and such temporary assistance offered to him as may help him to establish his authority. No formal engagements have been entered into with him. No interference with the internal Government of Afghanistan is intended, or will be attempted. No British Resident is to be forced upon him; but, when occasion calls for it, a Mohammedan Envoy will be sent to Cabul. But the Ameer has been informed that he can have no relations with any other Foreign Power but ourselves, and that if he acts in conformity with our advice we shall support him against any "unprovoked aggression."

Lord Hartington did not speak very confidently upon the future prospects of Abdurrahman, or of the permanent pacification, through his instrumentality, of the Afghan tribes and people. None but those who are ignorant of the country—of its population, its chiefs, and its past history—would venture to do so. Our recent experience (to say nothing of that which is more remote) teaches us that the less we meddle with affairs in Afghanistan the better it will be both for our Indian Empire and for the well-being of the United Kingdom. Military dominion—less, perhaps, in that than in most countries—is not to be regarded as identical with social order, prosperity, or peace. We can wield the sword in the East with full assurance of success; but it is not by the sword that its resources are to be developed. This, perhaps, is beginning to be better understood than it once was. Meanwhile, we have to pay a heavy penalty for our knowledge. The Secretary of State for India has not yet told us the exact cost in money of the Afghan Campaigns, nor how much of it will have, in reason, to be shared by the people of this country with those of India. No doubt, however, the new burden to which both they and we are doomed to look forward will be a heavy one. The glitter and glory of military enterprise is found to be very expensive. It is a happy thing that such should be the case. Mankind, not alone of one race, or of one nation, but of all races and nations, are sufficiently prone to hostile aggressions to require being held to heavy bail for the preservation of the peace; and this especially in those cases in which what we call "civilisation" comes in close contiguity with semi-civilised or uncivilised races.

We are now threatened with another South African trouble. Great firmness, as well as care, on the part of the Colonial Government will be required to prevent another collision as dangerous and as unjustifiable as that with the Zulus. Indeed, when once the spirit of war has been let loose, it is scarcely possible to restrain it within intended limits. We know not that we have yet done with bloodshed in Afghanistan. It is not, by any means, unlikely that we shall see, or hear, more of it in South Africa. What passes under the name of "spirited Foreign Policy" in theory very easily, and sometimes even necessarily, passes into a practical shape terribly exacting in its demands, both upon life and upon the means of it. No blow, once struck, with whatever just intention, can be fully recalled. It is sure to leave behind it results which are to be deplored. Whatsoever we sow, that shall we also reap. It is true, in a much wider sense than is commonly understood, that they who take the sword shall perish by the sword.

It is understood that the Earl of Aberdeen will succeed the late Earl of Kintore as Lord Lieutenant of Aberdeenshire.

The Lord Mayor presided at the first annual meeting of the Parkes Museum of Hygiene, which was held at the Mansion House on Tuesday. Amongst the speakers were Earl Fortescue, Sir W. Jenner, Sir Joseph Fayrer, Mr. George Palmer, M.P., Mr. Erichsen, and Mr. Erasmus Wilson.

The Lord Mayor's fund for the widows and children of those who perished in the Risca explosion has reached £4000, and the Mayor of Newport has collected £1500. It is computed that at least £18,000 will be required to make the same allowance as was made in the Abercarne catastrophe.

The returns made up to the end of June show that during that month eighty-eight ships left the Mersey, with 20,757 emigrants. Of these, 7840 were English, 220 Scotch, 3679 Irish, 8832 foreign, and the nationalities of 186 were not known. Of the whole, 17,505 were bound for the United States, while 3023 sailed for British North America, 106 to South America, 67 to the East Indies, 3 to the West Indies, 6 to China, and 31 for the West Coast of Africa. There is a decrease of 8535 as compared with the previous month, but the emigrants were 9206 more than in June last year.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I read in that highly respectable journal the Standard, in its issue for the 27th inst.,

> The mask of philanthropy and enthusiasm is gradually being lifted, and under its benevolent features we are permitted to discern the grim visage of war. Sympathy for the Hellenic race is slowly darkening into hatred of the Turk, and, having been lured into a pacific Conference, Europe is now being invoked to assume a martial attitude. Once more the apostles of the "bag and baggage" gospel are assailing our ears, and they perform their task with so little discretion that we are bluntly told we must be prepared to set our navies and armies in motion in order to do away once and for all with that "nuisance" the Ottoman Empire.

I hope, as we all hope, that grim-visaged War may have to hide his face again; but, touching Europe being lured into a pacific Conference and then invoked to assume a martial attitude, I should like to quote the opinion on the Eastern Question, generally, of one Torquato Tasso, who wrote a poem called "Jerusalem Delivered." Hear Tasso, in Fairfax's translation:—

> For, if the Christian Princes ever strive
> To win fair Greece out of the Tyrant's hands
> And those usurping Ishmaelites deprive
> Of woful Thrace, which now captivèd stands,
> You must from Realms and Seas the Turk forth drive
> As Godfrey chas'd them from Judæa's lands;
> And in this Legend all that glorious deed
> Read while you arm you; arm you while you read.

It will thus be seen that the "bag and baggage" policy, so sternly reprehended by the Standard, is no new thing. It dates, indeed, from the sixteenth century. Earlier. It dates, indeed, from the year 1453, when Mahomet the Conqueror entered Constantinople. Mr. Gladstone is frequently reproached by the more frenzied among his opponents with having "needlessly reopened the Eastern Question." That question, I take it, has never been closed since the Christian Church of St. Sophia was violently converted into a Mahometan mosque; and it never will be, nor can be, nor should be closed until the Greek Patriarch says mass again at the high altar of the Church of St. Sophia, aforesaid.

One is getting rather tired of "Dr." Tanner from Minnesota (they say that he is an Englishman, and he certainly seems mad enough to be one) and his fast. I notice that my esteemed contemporary the Observer, of last Sunday, in an intelligent leader on the fasting man of New York, cites, seriatim, all the historical starvation cases which I quoted in this column last week—to wit, the murthering widow Cecilia Rygway, John Scott of Borthwick in Teviotdale, Mary Waughton of Wigginton, Christine Michelot, and so forth. But I am not about to bring any charge of "stealing my thunder" against the writer in the Observer: for the reason that I fancy we are both indebted for our starvation lore to the same admirable source of information, "Chambers's Book of Days." Scarcely, I think, could the modern journalist get on without the aid of that wonderful treasury of knowledge contained in two stout volumes of eight hundred pages each.

If I were asked by a young journalist to furnish him with a list of books for a library that would be eminently of service to him in the daily pursuit of his vocation, the following would be about the library of reference that I should suggest. The Bible, Cruden's Concordance thereto; Shakspeare, with the Cowden Clarke concordance; Burke's Peerage, Blackstone's Commentaries, De Lolme on the Constitution, Junius, Edmund Burke's works (and as many of the Bohn's Edition of Anything as he can get hold of), Murray's home and foreign guide books (old editions can be picked up for a song at the bookstalls), Chambers's Book of Days as aforesaid, Chaucer, Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Southgate's "Many Thoughts of Many Minds," Buckle's Miscellanies and Commonplace Books, Montaigne, Rabelais, Paterson's Book of Roads, Cobbett's English Grammar, Pilkington's Dictionary of Painters, Cassell's Dictionary of Cookery; Hone's Table Book, Year Book, and Every Day Book; Paley's Natural Theology, Wood's Natural History, and the Newgate Calendar. You see that I have omitted both Lemprière's Classical Dictionary and Haydn's Dictionary of Dates. I did so omit these two books of reference purposely. Try to get up, either in your head or your commonplace book, a Lemprière and a Haydn of your own.

But here is another fasting memorandum, which I cheerfully place at the disposition of my esteemed confrère of the Observer. It is from Underhill's—well, we will say, Underhill's "Petroleum Broke Loose." "In Colchester Jail," says Underhill, "within this last two years, Parnell, the Quaker, would needs fast forty days and nights; who, after he had fasted eight or nine days, suffered some food to be applied to him; but his body by fasting having lost its power of reception and concoction, he died."

That "library of reference" which I spoke of just now reminds me that there is lying before me a little, thin, quaint-looking volume of about a hundred and fifty pages entitled "Journals and Journalism, with a Guide for Literary Beginners." The book (published by Messrs. Field and Tuer) purports to be by "John Oldcastle," but this is probably a pseudonym. The type is old-fashioned; the paper has the hue and texture of old papier de Holland; and, altogether, "Journals and Journalism," so far as its bibliographical aspect goes, might have been disentombed from the crypt of old St. Paul's (where the Paternoster-row booksellers kept their stocks) after the Great Fire. How many First Folios of Shakspeare perished in that monumental blaze, I wonder.

"John Oldcastle" discourses of "journals and journalists" from the different points of view of "introductions to editors,' "how to begin," "journalism as a career," both as regards its "fair" and "seamy" sides, "pounds, shillings, and pence" (this is a very curious chapter, and it told me a variety of things which I never knew before), "how to correct proofs," and so forth. The text is pleasantly interspersed with facsimiles of the autographs of well-known journalists and men of letters. I should say that to young men anxious to enter upon a career of the laboriousness and the thanklessness of which young men have generally only a very vague idea—in which the kicks are many and the halfpence are few—"John Oldcastle's" little book will be a very useful one. It is full of useful hints and bits of advice to journalistic aspirants.

Still, were I a young man, I should certainly not adopt journalism as a profession. With very rare exceptions, the career leads, eventually, to little beyond premature old age and indigence. Arguing from the mere brutal "pounds, shillings, and pence" standpoint, I would much rather, as things go at present, be an actor. A "walking gentleman" at a prosperous London theatre earns a much handsomer income than does an average journalist; and the walking gentleman's work is ridiculously light.

I hasten to correct an error into which I fell last week in a matter concerning the electric communication of the "latest news." That which I inadvertently called the "MacMahon Telephonic Company" is, in reality, the "MacMahon Telegraphic News Company," which is specially licensed by the Postmaster General for the purpose of supplying its subscribers with a telegraphic service of Parliamentary, sporting, and general news. In the United States the instruments or indicators are in general use in Stock Exchanges, clubs, theatres, hotels, restaurants, counting-houses, police-offices, and banks; and even in the drawing-room the "indicator," which is entirely self-acting, and requires no local batteries, no winding up, and no knowledge of telegraphy on the part of those who use it, is rapidly becoming popular.

There would seem to be a tolerably unanimous consensus of opinion, both among intelligent English travellers and unprejudiced native Americans, that the United States are not what is commonly termed a "picturesque" country, and that the aspect of American cities and the dress and manners of the inhabitants are, as a rule, prosaic. At the same time, it is worthy of curious remark that a love for the "processional picturesque," for cortéges, cavalcades, and spectacular outings of the Belgian kermesse kind seems to be rapidly growing in the States. The Shrovetide Carnival at New Orleans is really a magnificent pageant; but it seems to have found a rival in a procession organised in San Francisco in honour of the "Glorious Fourth of July," which is described in the San Francisco News Letter as "the most Gorgeous Celebration ever presented on the Pacific Coast."

Among the leading attractions in this most "spanglorious" of shows, I note the "Independence Car," drawn by six snow-white horses, and supporting the Goddess of Liberty (Miss Jennie Sherman) surrounded by thirteen beautiful young ladies, representing the Thirteen original States of the Union, all busily engaged in signing the Declaration of Independence. How many times, I wonder, did they sign that immortal document between Oakland Ferry and the Pacific Hotel? Then there was a car with a Tableau Vivant picturing Life in the Sunny South, with "real darkies picking real cotton," and "jubilee songs and dances." On another car Washington crossed the Delaware on real ice. "Buffalo Bill" and other Californian pioneers on horseback preceded a team of emigrant waggons drawn by oxen and containing a large number of real babies. Columbus Discovering America was attended by a train of real Indians; and the seventh and last car bore a representation of the Battle of New Orleans, with real cotton-bales, real cannon, and real powder-stained gunners. It is gratifying to learn that no advertising-vans were allowed to join in the procession. Otherwise the picturesque aspect of the pageant might have been rendered slightly too realistic by colossal chariots covered with placards symbolical of the virtues of the celebrated Hoodlum Chewing| Tobacco, the Explosive Sewing-Machine, and the Automatic Complexion-Heightener.

I venture to suppose that although Dean Stanley and (I hope) a good many more persons (including my most humble and insignificant self) have been ignominiously defeated in the matter of the proposed memorial to the Prince Imperial in Westminster Abbey, the susceptibilities of the celebrated Mr. Briggs, M.P., will not be very violently outraged by reading that the Empress Eugénie, on her return from her dolorous pilgrimage to Zululand, was received at Southampton with manifestations of the most cordial and affectionate sympathy. It is pleasant to learn that Princess Beatrice came in one of the Royal yachts into the Southampton water to welcome back the Bereaved Lady to her adopted home. I hope that she will not think of going away. John Bull, in the long run, generally turns out to be both just and generous; and some of these days full justice will be done in England to the memory of the Napoleons.

As for the very trifling part which I was so impertinent to take in suggesting in this column, and in the leading columns of a daily paper, the erection of the now proscribed memorial, I very frankly confess that I was moved simply by sentimental reasons of a politically Liberal or, if you will, Radical nature. A Radical may be permitted to be sentimental once or twice in the course of a lifetime. Ever since I was a boy I have been an indefatigable student of the Napoleonic Legend; and in that Legend, down to its minutest details, I am ready (profoundly ignorant as I am in most branches of knowledge) to submit to a competitive examination with Anybody. I have said, and I repeat that the bitterest political and personal enemies of the First Napoleon—from William Pitt to Lord Bathurst—were the Tories. It was the Tories who sent him to St. Helena and slowly killed him there, and who had the inexpressible meanness to restrict the table allowance of champagne for himself and the gentlemen of his suite to a single bottle per diem; thus denying him, as the Tory Sir Walter Scott, half ironically, half compassionately remarked, "even the solace of intoxication." As it happened, Napoleon was the most temperate of mortals; but surely one bottle of champagne was but a Barmeside pabulum for a dinner party of six or eight.

It was the Tory reviewer John Wilson Croker who, in the Quarterly for years and years before and even after the death of the captive, most persistently and most malignantly slandered and abused him. It was the Tory editor of Blackwood who, in some bombastic verses, bade the Liberal Lady Holland scornfully reject the legacy (a beautiful cameo) which the banished man had left her as a testimonial of gratitude and esteem. The Whig Charles James Fox, the Whig Lord Holland, the Liberal Duke of Sussex, were friends of Napoleon; the Radical Examiner shaded his cause when he was writhing under the tyranny of the Tories; and (the statement will bear repetition) the most eulogistic Life of Napoleon ever penned by an Englishman was written by the Ultra Radical William Hazlitt. How the times do alter! To be a Radical à la mode nowadays, you must hate all the Bonapartists, root and branch, and insult the memory of a gallant young Prince (read the memorandum which Sir Evelyn Wood has brought home from Zululand) who died fighting in our quarrel. But I have yet full faith in John Bull coming round to the right way of thinking in this matter, sooner or later. Meanwhile and henceforth I will keep my growls to myself, and, so far as Bonapartism is concerned, couch apart, like an old bear in a cave, hatching vain empires.

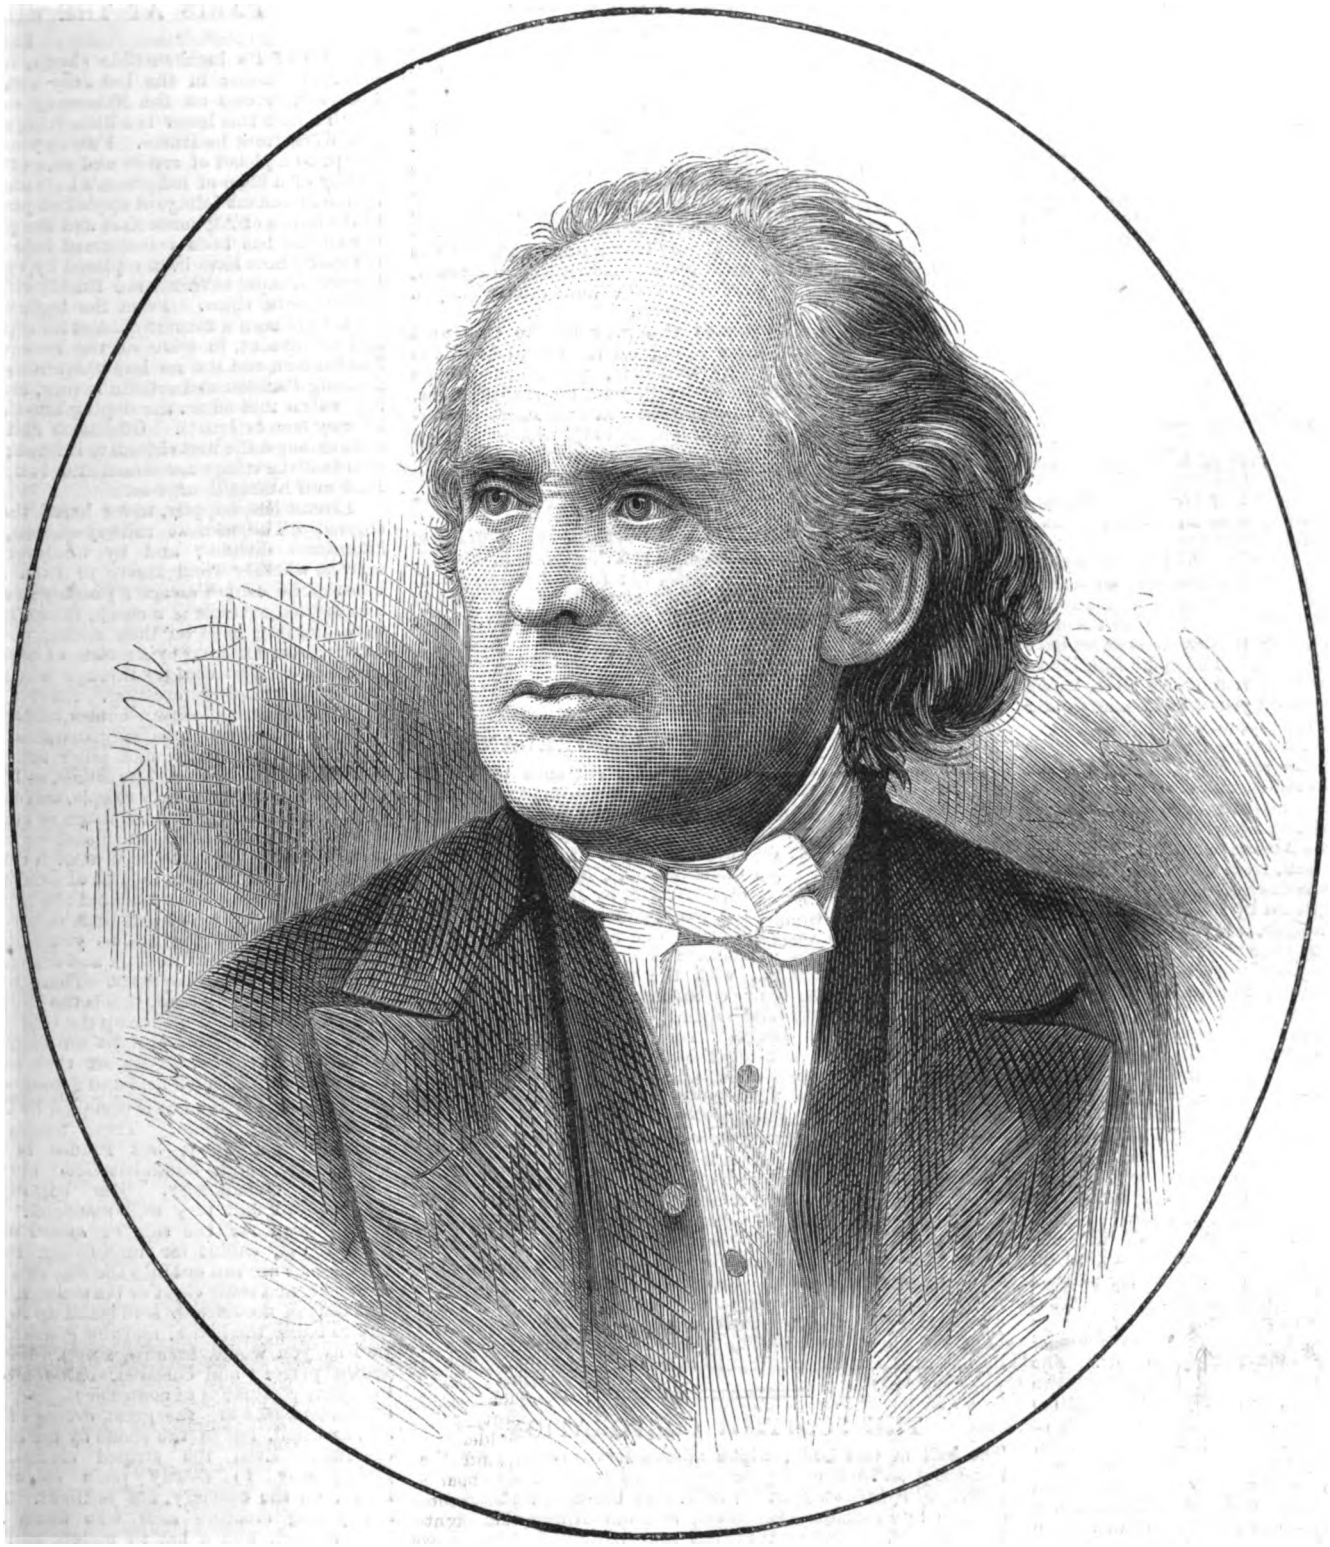
The smiling city of Tours has done herself honour by honouring the memory of François Rabelais in setting up a statue of that famous satirist. The immaculate Paris Gaulois, which detests Rabelais and all his works, questions the propriety of erecting the statue at Tours: seeing that the author of "Gargantua" and "Pantagruel" was born at Seuilly, near Chinon, and that he died at Meudon, of which charming village he was the highly-respected curate. By-the-way, was not the jovial writer of the "Propos des Buveurs" a water-drinker? If that be the case, he should be forthwith incorporated among the "Illustrious Abstainers."

It was a pity that the London Season was at its zenith when the monument to the great French humourist was unveiled at Tours; else the inaugural ceremony might have been attended by a deputation from the London Rabelais Club. That pleasantest of symposia, whose motto is "Sursum corda"—the equally appropriate one, "Fay ce que Voudras," has not yet seemingly recovered from the stigma which it suffered in being adopted by the wicked Monks of Medmenham Abbey—continues to prosper; and its last dinner for the present season took place a few evenings since, when his Excellency the American Minister was one of the honoured guests. Victor Hugo is an honorary London Rabelaisian. Lord Houghton, Sir Frederick Pollock, Mr. Comyns Carr, Mr. Woolner, R.A., Mr. J. L. Toole, Mr. Charles G. Leland (Hans Breitmann), and Mr. Dion Boucicault are also members of the club, whose rites and mysteries (I am given to understand) are too Awful to be revealed to the uninitiated.

Gustave Doré ought to be a member of the Rabelais Club. That most versatile of painters, rarest of humourists, and most amiable of bons enfants, has just paid a flying visit to London. He came too late and went away too early, and was unable to avail himself of a tithe of the invitations which were awaiting him—and which await him every year. Gustave Doré is one of the few examples I know of a Lion who does not lose his mane. A London Lion, in his first season, is a very noble animal indeed. The tributes of shin-bone of beef which he receives in the way of invitations to dinners, balls, and garden parties are unlimited; and the proudest dames and the most beautiful damoiselles think his roaring more mellifluous than the notes of a Patti, a Nilsson, or a Gerster. But in his second season people are apt to go about saying that his mane is thinning and that he roars out of tune. And do you know a more deplorable spectacle than the Lion in his third season—bald, toothless, his claws drawn, contemptuously looked down upon by Count Reinecke Fuchs, who has just returned from Corea, and completely eclipsed by the Honourable Miss Shanks, so justly popular just now owing to her having traversed the Rocky Mountains on foot? But Gustave Doré has kept his mane, and is as much sought after every recurring season as ever.

I am tardy in calling attention to the new, enlarged, and revised edition, for 1880, of Dickens's "Dictionary of London," which is a very mine of amusing and useful metropolitan information, in the compass, so to speak, of a nutshell. Not that of a cocoa-nut, bien entendu, but of a Barcelona one. The dictionary is "posted up" even to the extent of a reference to the new Arcade which leads from Old Bond-street to Albemarle-street. There are, nevertheless, spots on the Sun. Homer—we have the authority of the scholiasts and the rhapsodists for it—sometimes nodded; and the ineffable Louis XIV. made a slip in his grammar when he asked for "mon" instead of "ma carosse." I have to reproach Mr. Charles Dickens with one small sin of omission. He has told his readers, most exhaustively, where the best chops and steaks are to be obtained in London; but never a word has he to say concerning Alamode beef.

The old "Thirteen Cantons" eating-house in Blackmoor-street, Clare-market, where alamode beef of a super-excellent quality was once to be found, has, I fear, died out; but there must be many extensively patronised alamode establishments yet remaining. There is one, I think, in Tichborne-street, close to the County Fire Office, which (the restaurant, not the Fire Office) I have been aware of at least forty years. I have heard of Dukes, only very slightly disguised, slipping into the "Thirteen Cantons" and ordering a sixpenny plate of alamode. I have heard of Countesses having alamode sent home to their princely mansions in a jug. I confess that I was wont to prefer the fourpenny to the sixpenny plate, not only for financial reasons, but because the cheaper "portion" was served in a pewter plate; and it was a point of etiquette that you should so completely "polish off" your allowance of alamode as to leave the plate shining like silver. The ingredient which imparts the lusciousness and "stickiness"—if I may use the expression—peculiarly distinctive of this dish is, I believe, arrowroot. At least, so Alexis Soyer told me, many years ago.



Mem.: London alamode beef is not at all like the "Bœuf à la Mode" of the French cookery books and the famous restaurant behind the Palais Royal. G. A. S.

KENSINGTON HOUSE.

This costly and stately mansion, which has recently been secured by a committee of gentlemen connected with two of the fashionable recreation clubs, has been used several times for grand entertainments and bazaars or fancy fairs in aid of charitable funds. It is situated near the entrance to Kensington High-street, opposite the small gate of Kensington Gardens. It was erected by Baron Albert Grant, the well-known financier, some time M.P. for Kidderminster, who renovated and adorned the garden of Leicester-square. He did not, however, take up his residence in the vast mansion which he had constructed, and it was offered for sale in 1877, shortly after its completion, but there were no sufficient bidders. Baron Grant began building it in August, 1872, having acquired the freehold site by a protracted series of negotiations. To prepare the ground for the new mansion he pulled down old Kensington House and Colby House, the residence of Sir Thomas Colby, and also demolished a collection of tenements known as Jennings's-rents, and inhabited by 1200 people. The cost of building the house alone exceeded £165,000, and the whole cost of the mansion and appurtenances was £300,000 or £350,000.

The grounds, comprising seven acres of land, are skilfully laid out; they contain an orangery, lakes (on which canoes are placed), and beautiful plantations of trees, shrubberies, lawns, flower-beds, and paths leading to an American bowling-alley, greenhouses, and the stables, with sixteen stalls and four loose-boxes. In the garden in front of the house is a large triple elm. A lime-tree was left in the public path on setting back the boundary-railings to give regularity to the front. Indeed, the first point which strikes the visitor is that the place is a veritable rus in urbe. The south garden is seen at once through the glass doors of the hall. The boundaries have been carefully raised and planted all round with trees, which have now been growing at least eight years, while many older trees give a park-like aspect to the grounds.

The house, of which Mr. J. T. Knowles was the architect, is designed in a mixed Renaissance and Italian style; but the exterior is chiefly remarkable for its size and obvious costliness. It is built of stone. The interior has much grandeur, and is superbly decorated by Mr. Frederick Sang. The portico is supported by two great pillars of red Aberdeen marble. This gives admission into a lofty central hall, from which on each side rise marble stairs lighted by windows of coloured and ornamental glass, the landings supported by stone caryatids. This vestibule, which is paved with mosaic, leads to side halls which give access on the left or east to the picture-gallery, on the right to the dining-room. The main feature on the east side of the house is the long music saloon, which has a lofty ceiling painted in French style with Cupids playing the panpipes, the lyre, and instruments unknown to the ancients—the nadle and the violoncello. The walls are decorated half with portraits of Sir Peter Lely's beauties and half with pictures of Continental beauties. The doors leading to the picture-gallery present in the foreign half of the room views of Versailles, and in the English half views of Richmond. The picture-gallery is nearly as long as the ball-room, and leads into the blue drawing-room, which has panels of light blue inclosed in frames of cream and gold. On the painted ceiling the Loves are playing with flowers and shooting with the bow. Across the glass-domed conservatory (a prolongation of the entrance-hall) is the way to the yellow drawing-room, where the panels are yellow and the frames blue. On the painted ceiling here Love has grown to Hymen, and accompanies his mother with a lighted torch in his hand. A long passage leads to the dining-room, divided at will in two by a screen which rises up or sinks after the manner of a portcullis. The Loves on the ceiling tread the wine-press, fish among the water-lilies, shoot at ground game, and carry feathered game home. On the same floor are a library with portraits of Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton, and Bacon; a billiard-room, dressing-rooms, and morning-rooms. There are three floors above, from which, in front, a fine view of Kensington Palace and gardens is afforded. The underground accommodation is large enough to contain a vast range of cellars. The house is warmed by hot-water pipes under brazen gratings. The floors are in parqueterie, of oak and of pitch-pine. The skirtings in the passages are of marble; those of the dining-room are of oak.

We lately gave an account of the ladies' bazaar held in Kensington House, by the management of Viscountess Folkestone, for the benefit of the Kensington Industrial School for Girls, to which the Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Teck kindly lent their personal assistance. Last Saturday there was a garden party there in aid of the Mansion House Fund for the relief of the relatives of the sailors drowned in H.M.S. Atalanta. An amateur concert took place in the large dining-hall. The Countess of Lonsdale, Lady Augusta Fane, and Mrs. Langtry sold flowers and fruit in a tent in the grounds. Lady Borthwick, assisted by her two children, presided over wheels of fortune, the Countess of Romney and Lady Blanche Hozier rendering their aid. Mrs. Brassey had a marquee and stall in the grounds, with a beautiful show of fruit and flowers, and with a sailor guard from the famous yacht Sunbeam. Mrs. Mundy obtained a long list of subscribers to the lottery for the painting representing the unfortunate ship Atalanta. Lady Lindsay of Balcarres, Mrs. Gerard Leigh, and Mrs. John Penn contributed gifts of flowers and fruit. In the east drawing-room Princess Christian, assisted by Mrs. Keith Fraser, held a stall at which flowers and bonbons were sold. Princess Mary Adelaide had a stall opening upon the conservatory, and disposed of a large quantity of cut flowers. The Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the Royal family were present. The house was opened again, for the same purpose, on Monday evening.

The Bachelors' Ball, on Thursday week, given by a large number of unmarried noblemen and gentlemen to about 1300 invited guests, was a very splendid entertainment. The Prince and Princess of Wales were also upon this occasion among the company. The grounds were beautifully illuminated with the lime-light and electric light.

WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Rev. Ebenezer E. Jenkins, M.A., who has been elected President of the Wesleyan Conference for this year, is the subject of a Portrait Engraving. Mr. Jenkins has been for many years before the Wesleyan public, and is esteemed both as a preacher and an able advocate of Wesleyan missions. The East has always had special attractions for him, and his visit to it a few years ago strengthened his interest in that part of the world. He was born in Exeter on May 10, 1820. He was educated in the Exeter Grammar School, and early manifested considerable aptitude for learning. He became a Wesleyan local preacher in the Teignmouth circuit in the year 1845, and in that capacity gave such evidence of preaching ability as to lead to his being brought forward for the Wesleyan ministry. He was appointed by the Conference to a foreign mission station in India, Mainaguddy, where he laboured with great zeal and success. His next appointment was Madras, at which place, in the year 1852, he established the High School, which now takes high rank as an educational agency. On his return to England from the foreign mission field he at once took a high position as a preacher and speaker. He was welcomed by some of the best circuits in England, and stayed three years in each circuit to which he was appointed until his appointment by the Conference to the office of Foreign Missionary Secretary. His sermons are distinguished for their clearness and polish, and show that he must have made a special study of the best English classics. In the presidential chair he exhibits all the qualities for which he is distinguished—suavity, clearness, and firmness. He has the prospect of a good official year before him; and, as he is greatly esteemed by the great body of ministers and laymen, his visits will be very welcome to the numerous Wesleyan societies which he will have to address.

The Conference assembled this year at the City-road Chapel, London; and, after filling up the vacancies in the "legal hundred" of ruling ministers, proceeded to the election of the President and Secretary for the ensuing year. During the past few months opinion had with singular unanimity designated the Rev. E. E. Jenkins to the first-mentioned office. The only question had been in reference to the minister who would obtain the second position in the voting, and thus practically receive a nomination for the following year's presidency. The result of the ballot was as follows:—W. O. Simpson, 10; G. W. Olver, 13; M. C. Osborn, 16; B. Hellier, 16; Dr. Osborn, 22; R. Roberts, 31; T. M'Cullagh, 49; W. T. Radcliffe, 52; Charles Garrett, 54; E. E. Jenkins, M.A., 281. This vote having been formally confirmed by the vote of the Legal Hundred, the President declared the Rev. E. E. Jenkins duly elected.

KINGSTOWN TOWNHALL, IRELAND.

The seaport town of Kingstown, at the entrance to Dublin Bay, well known as a landing-place for steam-boat passengers from England to Ireland, has provided itself with a handsome Townhall. This was opened by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Earl Cowper, one day last week. The building has been erected for the Town Commissioners, from the designs of Mr. J. L. Robinson, architect, of Dublin, by Messrs. Meade and Sons, contractors, during the past two years, and when furnished will cost at least £16,000. The architecture is of the Italian style. The main frontage is on the Royal Marine-road, extending 130 ft., with the main entrance in the centre. The bottom floor contains the courthouse, rooms for witnesses, barristers' rooms, clerk of the peace's offices, jury-room, judges' retiring-room, closets, and lavatory. On the left-hand side of the main entrance are offices for the town clerk, town surveyor, rate collector, and sanitary inspector. The next storey, approached by a grand staircase, contains the assembly-room, a fine lofty apartment, 70 ft. 6 in. long by 41 ft. 6 in. wide, with moulded roof and cornices. There is a platform of pitch pine and American walnut for the accommodation of performers. The board-room, in which the town commissioners will hold their meetings, is on the second storey. Its walls are covered to a height of six feet with a panelling of pitch pine and American walnut, richly moulded. The second storey will contain, in addition to the rooms mentioned, the Town Clerk's office, a commissioners' retiring room, and clerks' apartments. The corridors will be furnished with fancy tesselated tiling. The height of the entire building is 50 ft. A clock tower, 120 ft. high, surmounts the courthouse entrance in Crofton-road.

THE SCOTTISH CORPORATION.

The hall of this body, which administers its funds for the relief and assistance of poor persons of Scottish origin, was destroyed by fire on Nov. 15, 1877. It has been rebuilt upon designs by Professor Donaldson, and our Illustration shows the outward appearance of the new building. The main entrance is by Crane-court, Fleet-street, and it is approached between two rows of houses within forty feet of each other. Professor Donaldson has, nevertheless, done the best possible under the circumstances, and has given the elevation a Scotch character by adding at each corner one of those picturesque peel turrets which are the characteristic of Border architecture. The cost of the building, according to the contract of Mr. Hobson, Duke-street, Adelphi, the builder, is £5778. The amount received from the insurance company was £3768, so that about £2000 remains to be supplied by contributions. The new hall and its accompanying chambers reproduce the historical character of that which was destroyed. The Prince of Wales, as Duke of Rothesay, is president of the institution, but at the opening of the new hall last week his place was filled by the Duke of Argyll, one of the vice-presidents.

The summer drills at Aldershott terminated yesterday week with a sham fight on the Fox Hills. The 1st Life Guards, Foot Guards, and Rifles, called in to augment the Army Corps, returned to their stations last Monday.

Last Saturday evening the Corporation of the Trinity House gave their anniversary entertainment—Admiral Sir Richard Collinson, the deputy master, presiding. Amongst the speakers were Sir Stafford Northcote, the Earl of Northbrook, Mr. Childers, M.P., Mr. Brassey, M.P., the Lord Chief Justice, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Kimberley, Sir John A. Macdonald (Prime Minister of Canada), Mr. Milner Gibson, Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, and the American Minister.

A case which has been recently decided shows what has been called "the glorious uncertainty of the law." Lord Chancellor Selborne and Lords Blackburn and Watson on Thursday gave judgment in the litigation between the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain and the London and Provincial Supply Association. The County Court Judge at Bloomsbury had held that the association was properly qualified to keep a chemist's and druggist's department, as the business was conducted by a competent man. The Queen's Bench reversed this ruling, while the Lords Justices held that the decision of the County Court Judge was right, and reversed the judgment of the Queen's Bench. The House of Lords has now affirmed the decision of the Lords Justices, holding that a corporation can only dispense drugs by an assistant, and if he was duly qualified, as in this case, the object of the Act was attained.—Here is another example of the truth of the adage "Many men, many minds." A collision off the Penang Straits in 1878 between a vessel belonging to a Netherlands company and the Khedive has been the subject of much litigation. The damages were estimated at £25,000 on the one side and £100,000 on the other, and the Admiralty Court decreed that the damages should be borne equally by the two steam-ships. The Lords Justices, on appeal, attributed the collision entirely to the Voorwaarts. The House of Lords has reversed this decision, and confirmed the decision of the Admiralty Court.

PARIS AT THE SEASIDE.

Etretat, July 27, 1880.

In spite of its inexhaustible charm, it is pleasant to leave Paris to simmer in the hot July sun and to breathe the fresh sea breezes on the Normandy coast. The place from which I date this letter is a little village distant twenty-seven kilomètres from Le Havre. Fifteen years ago it was unknown except to a pleiad of artists and men of letters, and consisted merely of a heap of fishermen's huts and boats half concealed by the abundant foliage of apple and pear trees. Now, thanks to the novels of Alphonse Karr and the pictures of Le Poitevin, the village has been transformed into a decent little town; the rustic inns have been replaced by comfortable hotels; and the picturesque environs are thickly studded with coquettish and fantastic villas. From the beginning, however, Etretat has always been a favourite resort for artists and men of letters, and at present, in spite of the invasion of the ubiquitous Englishman and the no less ubiquitous American, it retains a strong Parisian and artistic savour, and most of the charming villas that adorn the sloping hill-sides belong to Parisian literary men or artists. Offenbach and Dumas the younger were amongst the first visitors to Etretat; and the two principal streets of the village are named after two literary men, Alphonse Karr and Anicet Bourgeois.

Etretat has, happily, never heard the whistle of a steam-engine. The nearest railway-station, Les Ifs, is fifteen kilomètres distant; and by whatever route the traveller arrives, whether from Havre or from Paris, by Les Ifs or Fécamp, he cannot escape a journey in a vehicle of some sort. The ordinary vehicle is a coach, drawn by four stalwart horses, with jingling bells on their necks, which swings along the dusty roads, followed by a swarm of beggars of all ages and of both sexes. The country through which you pass is pretty, but not extremely interesting. Etretat itself is a little town composed of hotels, lodging-houses, and shops devoted to the sale of souvenirs of Etretat, bathing costumes, canvas shoes, Parisian gloves and perfumery, and other articles which are needed by the Parisian visitors. The hotels, as I have already said, are comfortable but extremely simple, and are generally composed of half a dozen detached buildings or annexes. The principal attraction is, of course, the beach—a magnificent sweep of small round pebbles, bounded at each end by lofty and curious chalk cliffs, which form a point of obligatory pilgrimage. In front is the open sea, and behind rise green hills, divided into two ridges by the great and little valleys, the Grand Val and the Petit Val. To the left, as you stand facing the sea, are the fishing-boats, hauled high and dry on the pebbles by means of primitive wooden capstans. There being no port and no jetty or pier of any kind, this is the only way that the boats can be protected. Further up the beach, lining the roadway, are the old boats, fixed upright on their keels, thatched, and provided with doors. They are then called caloges, and are used as storehouses for nets and fishing tackle.

The centre of the bay is occupied by the bathing establishment and the casino. These names may perhaps seem somewhat ambitious; but France is nothing if not administrative, and administration always involves high-sounding terminology. The bathing establishment is very modest and very well managed. It consists simply of a bureau for the sale of cachets or bathing tickets, a linen dépôt, cabins for undressing, two diving-boards on wheels that are run out into the sea, two boats with ladders on each side, and some eight or ten stalwart baigneurs in red shirts. The duty of the baigneur is to stand up to his waist in the water and to bathe the ladies, and the gentlemen, too, if they like, just as you would bathe a sheep. Ladies and gentlemen, grown persons and children, bathe all together en famille. Complete costume is of course de rigueur, and the morning and afternoon baths are the great events of the day. The men are, as usual, left in the shade by the ladies in the matter of costume. Even the striped clown-like maillot is now giving way to dowdy plain coloured costumes. The ladies, on the contrary, are brilliant. There is one charming young creature here who wears a costume of rose-pink flannel, and a hat to match, and who looks like one of Watteau's shepherdesses sporting in the waves. The waves, however, in order to be in harmony with her costume, should be the rippling basins of the fountains of Versailles. But I need not dwell on the article of costume; my lady readers will at once see how much room there is for taste and coquetry in the arrangement of a bathing costume, including hat and shoes. They must remember, too, that at Etretat there are no bathing-machines; the cabins are stationary, and, according as the water is high or low, you have to walk a greater or less distance over the pebbles before you reach the water, and on each side of the footway of planks is an admiring "gallery." To see and to be seen, to bathe and to see others bathe, and to know that others see you when you bathe, is the chief object in life here.

The favourite place for loafing is the Casino. Every seaside resort and watering-place in France is provided with a Casino. The Casino here, like the Casino at Trouville or Vichy, or Arcachon, or anywhere else, consists of a salon de conversation, usually unoccupied; a café, well patronised; a card-room for écarté and "sich," always full; a shooting-gallery, with a small clientèle, a room headed "Jeux," comprising a tonpie hollandaise and chevaux de course, a game especially popular with the ladies; a reading-room, and a theatre and ball-room. Every night something takes place at the Casino: there is either a dance, a comedy, an opéra comique, or a concert, and from time to time some "star" artiste from Paris gives a special performance. Every Thursday afternoon, too, there is a children's ball, when the young folk have high jinks, and display costumes in the making of which their loving mothers and sisters have expended no small amount of taste and ingenuity. A children's ball in France is a most charming sight, for the young people always enjoy themselves heartily, and they have already that grace for which the nation is celebrated. Such are, in short, the occupations of the Parisian at the seaside, at Etretat or elsewhere.

It may interest intending visitors to know the cost of living here. The best hotel in the place charges ten francs a day for board and lodging. The board consists of a copious table d'hôte breakfast and dinner, with cider ad libitum. Wine costs two francs a bottle, and your coffee and milk in the morning are also extra. The subscription to the Casino, entitling you to all the privileges, including the theatre and concerts, except on extraordinary occasions, is very moderate—fifty francs for one person for the whole season, and with a proportionate reduction for families. The subscription for two persons, for instance, for a fortnight is 36f.—really a very modest sum when you remember that it entitles you to good music and very fair theatrical entertainment every night during your stay, to say nothing of the excellent promenade along the terrace of the Casino. The bathing cachets entitling you to a cabin, a "baigneur," and a hot footbath in your cabin when you come out of the water, cost 7f. 50c. a dozen. In short, for splendid sea-bathing, fine air, and a moderate amount of amusement, and, above all, for liberté charmante et toujours convenable, I recommend Etretat.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

Saturday, the Twenty-Fourth, was the last night of a brilliantly successful season at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, under the management of Mr. Edgar Bruce; and the little bijou of a house was crowded by an audience eager to witness the last appearance of Miss Geneviève Ward in "Forget-me-Not," prior to her departure on an extended provincial tour, which will comprise Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, and Scarborough. When the accomplished tragédienne returns to the Prince of Wales's in the autumn, the public will once more be enabled to renew their acquaintance with the wicked but fascinating "Forget-me-Not," and they are promised in addition an English version of the renowned Dutch drama, "Anne-Mie," with Miss Geneviève Ward in the title rôle. To say nothing of the lady's histrionic capacity for the part, her well-known artistic gifts and experience should prove highly serviceable in mounting "Anne-Mie" in a picturesque and tasteful manner. At the Imperial the mise-en-scène of all the pieces produced by the much complimented but poorly supported Dutch company was simply perfect. London certainly did not behave well to those excellent Batavian artists; and, in view of the practical neglect with which we treated them, one might almost paraphrase Canning's well-known poetical despatch, in which he informed the English Minister at the Hague that he intended to impose a heavy duty on Dutch shipping. "In matters of commerce," began the Right Honourable George,

. . . . the fault of the Dutch
Is giving too little and asking too much.

One might say of the Hollanders' season at the Imperial,

In matters dramatic our fault with the Dutch
Was paying too little and flatt'ring too much.

Prior to Saturday I had not seen "Forget-me-Not" in its entirety. It happened that a very short time before I went to America I ran down in a desperate hurry to Liverpool to attend a public dinner, and I came back to town by the last train the same night; but the dinner was over early enough to enable me to pay a brief visit to the theatre and see about an act and a half of "Forget-me-Not." It will be as well to suspend any detailed criticism on this very remarkable performance until Miss Ward returns to town and enters upon a new lease of metropolitan celebrity. For the present, let it suffice to say that on Saturday she played from first to last magnificently. I know that she half terrified me out of my wits with that wildly agonised cry of hers, "He 's on the stairs!"—that she was repeatedly called and re-called, and greeted with many bouquets.

Mr. John Hollingshead is fond of his joke. He will have his joke; and he is all the more pleased when his joke is aimed at that fraternity (how they must love one another!) of theatrical critics of whom he was once a distinguished brother. The critics, so far as I can make out, have been tolerably unanimous in saying that Mr. Raymond, the American comedian, is a capital actor, but that the "Dramatic Sketch" "Colonel Sellers," written by Mark Twain, in which Mr. Raymond sustains a character which is mainly extraneous to the action of the drama, is unmitigated rubbish. Whereat, remarks the jocose Mr. Hollingshead in an advertisement:—

The piece was originally called "There's Millions In It," but this joke would have given the press the obvious joke that there may not be millions in it for the Gaiety management. It has been stamped with approval, however, by sixty millions of Americans of average intellect.

My dear John Hollingshead, the press, believe me, are not, in the first place, in a perpetual state of nervous anxiety as to the relative debit and credit balances of the Gaiety ledger and cash book. The press are much more anxious to bestow honest praise on a thoroughly good piece; and "Colonel Sellers" is, even as modern plays go, a very bad piece. In the next place, there are not sixty millions of Americans in the whole United States. There are not fifty millions; and, until the next Census is taken, it would be rash to say that there are forty-five millions. Finally, that which may suit the average American intellect may be entirely distasteful to the average British one, and vice versâ. I will give you an example. In England we are all enthusiastic admirers of Mr. Toole. The Americans did not like him. The Americans were enthusiastic admirers of their own tragedian, Edwin Forrest. We thought him unrefined and noisy.

Now, while I agree with the critics (may their shadows never grow less!) in their depreciation of "Colonel Sellers" as a play and their commendations of Mr. Raymond as a player, I am scarcely of their opinion with regard to the new "ultra-farcical comedy from the French," entitled "Parlours," the adapter of which is the facetious Mr. R. Reece, which was produced at the Royalty on Saturday last. If you can imagine a piece about three times more Bedlamite in its incidents and dialogue than the "Chapeau de Paille d'Italie" (Mr. Gilbert's "Wedding March"), you will be able to form some notion of "Parlours" as a dramatic entity. But it is, for all that, a very laughable piece of absurdity, and the jokes and "situations" are not more ancient and hackneyed than those in Mr. Boucicault's "Forbidden Fruit" at the Adelphi. There is plenty of horseplay; a Rhodomontading "copper captain" of yeomanry cavalry, who tries to flirt with a married lady, gets soundly caned by a timid old gentleman whom he had erroneously thought to be a poltroon; real hard-boiled eggs and a real teapot and crockery ware are freely flung about the stage; elderberry wine negus, which makes everybody who has partaken of it very ill, is spoken of:—what more would you have? Blank verse or blue fire? Music by Wagner?

Mr. Snapperley is a young gentleman with little money, but with an ungovernable temper. He has married the eldest daughter of Cacklebury, a rich, retired, vulgar, and stingy poulterer, who only allows the young couple a pittance of a hundred a year instead of paying his daughter her full dowry. Mrs. Snapperley is a charming young person, but her temper is to the full as irascible as that of her spouse. The pair are perpetually quarrelling, after the manner known in Transatlantic households as "raising Cain and breaking things," and the air in the Snapperley ménage is usually darkened by hearthbrooms or made lurid by meteoric pairs of bellows flying hither and thither in a distracting manner. They and the all-pervading din of matrimonial jars on the first floor do nearly distract a placid old gentleman, Mr. Goodman Muffatt, who occupies the parlours, and derives from that fact his sobriquet of "Parlours." He is always "in for it." The quarrelsome couple are continually appealing to him, and abusing him, and pummelling him. At length Mr. Snapperley, in a rage, refuses to accompany his wife to a garden party at her papa's, whereupon Mrs. Snapperley quits the conjugal domicile, also in a rage, and declaring in tragic tones that she has abandoned her home for ever. "Parlours" follows the lady to the garden party with the beneficent intent of effecting a reconciliation between the Snapperleys; but his motives are at once misconstrued, and he is set upon, reviled, insulted, and pummelled by Cacklebury, by Mrs. Snapperley and her sister, by all their friends and acquaintances, male and female, and even by the Rhodomontading Captain Aylesbury Duck, who has been making ridiculous protestations of love to Mrs. Snapperley, and has proposed that that lady should elope with him in a four-wheeled cab. Then there is a scene at a railway station, having a remarkably close resemblance to the railway-station scene in "Forbidden Fruit," including (just as Mr. Boucicault's scene does) a comic porter, a refreshment-counter, and a loquacious barmaid, who has much to say about "the Company's by-laws."

In this scene there is rather a wearisome amount of playing at hide-and-seek behind doors and piles of luggage and outside and inside ticket-offices; but in the end things are made pleasant. The much vilified and pummelled "Parlours" is acknowledged to be a Universal Benefactor; Mr. and Mrs. Snapperley (who, of course, love each other very dearly) make it up and begin to quarrel again immediately afterwards; the "Copper Captain" gets a caning and his congé; and the curtain falls on a play to which, in one sense, might be applied the remark of the American who said of the roast goose that it was a little too much for one, but not quite enough for two. One act would be too little for "Parlours;" but three acts are to an inordinate extent too much for such a triviality. Miss Kate Lawler played the irascible Mrs. Snapperley with great humour and intelligence; Mr. Charles Sugden's Mr. Snapperley was a very finished and gentleman-like performance; and Mr. Charles Groves was amusingly pompous and patronising as the retired and parsimonious poulterer. The Mr. Goodman Muffatt of Mr. Edward Righton was a really artistic impersonation. He seems to have taken Mr. Pickwick, in the early or idiotic stage of that illustrious philanthropist's career, as his model. I stayed to see a scene or so of Mr. Byron's burlesque of the "Sonnambula" afterwards, and was delighted with the acting and singing of Mr. Charles Grove as Count Rodolpho. Miss Kate Lawler was most fascinating as Alessio; and Mr. Edward Righton was an irresistibly comic Amina, tuneful with much topical song.

It is announced that Mr. Sothern, whose health is mending, but very slowly, has telegraphed to cancel all his American engagements, and intends, under the strongest medical advice, to take a whole twelvemonth's rest. A wise resolve. Mr. Sothern has been working too hard these many years past. The World is of opinion that the proximate appearance of the Haverly troupe of minstrels—they make their first appearance this instant Saturday—at Her Majesty's Theatre is a "profanation." O! la Profanation, "cries Atlas," in French. "Poorquoy sellar ang frongsay mong share?" I, too, have been taking lessons in the tongue of the vivacious Gaul. The vicissitudes of playhouses are many and strange. To-day Haverly's Minstrels, and yesterday "Mefistofele," and the day before yesterday Moody and Sankey.

That most meritorious and indefatigable actress Miss Ada Cavendish (while I was travelling in the States it was with wonder and amazement that I used to watch her unwearied progresses from town to town), after enjoying a few weeks' well-deserved respite from toil, has again left England, and is now on the ocean on her way back to the United States. She goes straight to Buffalo to fulfil an engagement, and is announced to appear in New York at the end of August. Talk of special correspondents! They are snail-like laggards in comparison with our leading actresses.

I should not be at all surprised if a hundred thousand people flock to the Alexandra Palace on Monday, the Bank Holiday. With unprecedented liberality, the management have for this particular outing abolished all and every kind of fee for admission to hitherto reserved places. Everything after the initiatory shilling has been paid at the turnstiles will be "free, gratis, and for nothing;" and the persistence with which the lessee implores the public to "walk on the grass" and do everything else they like, in reason, is quite touching.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The season of this establishment closed last Saturday evening, with the seventh representation of Signor Boïto's "Mefistofele," the occasion having been for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson, the lessee. On the previous evening Balfe's "Il Talismano" was given, for the first time this season, the character of Edith Plantagenet having been, as before, effectively sustained by Madame Gerster, as were those of Sir Kenneth, Richard Cœur de Lion, and Nectabanus, respectively, by Signori Campanini, Galassi, and Del Puente. That excellent artist Madame Marie Roze (of whom too little has been heard during the season) was to have sustained (as during last year) the part of Queen Berengaria, but was prevented by sudden indisposition, and was replaced, at short notice, by Mdlle. Martinez, who appeared under disadvantages that disarm criticism. The closing performance calls for no comment, the cast having been the same as before.

The season just closed began on May 15, this being Mr. Mapleson's fourth year of occupancy of the theatre erected on the site of the building that was destroyed by fire in December, 1867. The opening performance consisted of "Faust," with the repetition of Madame Christine Nilsson's fine singing and acting as Margherita, and the first appearance (as Faust) of Mr. Maas in Mr. Mapleson's company. During the past series of performances, Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" has been revived, with modifications of the original libretto, and some changes made in the music by the composer himself. The work, however, did not prove more successful than on its first production by Mr. Mapleson, in 1867. A far more important incident in the season just terminated was the first performance in England of Signor Boïto's "Mefistofele," a work of earnest thought and artistic endeavour, on which we have recently commented. "Il Rinnegato," by the Hungarian amateur Baron Bodog Orczky, has not been forthcoming, Mr. Mapleson having only pledged himself to produce two out of the three operas named in his prospectus.

The reappearance of Madame Christine Nilsson has been an important feature in the repetitions of several operas with which she has long been associated, and still more so in respect to "Mefistofele," her charming and powerful performance in which—in the double assumption of the characters of Margaret and Helen of Troy—was a specialty in the cast. Besides the artists already incidentally named, reappearances have been made by Mdlles. Minnie Hauk, Tremelli, and Purdy, Madame Trebelli, M. Candidus, Signori Runcio, Rinaldini and Monti, and Herr Behrens.

More or less successful first appearances have been made by Madame Eleonora Robinson, Madame Marie Louise Swift, Mdlles. Nevada, Valerga, and Martinez, and Signor Lazzarini. Several other singers named in the prospectus of the season have not appeared; while, on the other hand, some who were not announced have been brought forward with various degrees of success. These were Mdlle. Lehmann—of whom more might have been expected to have been heard—Signor Nannetti—who created a marked impression by his fine performance as Mephistopheles in Signor Boïto's opera—Signor Ravelli, and Signor Benfratelli. Signor Ravelli appeared at very short notice, and at once established his position as a leading tenor of exceptional merit. His reappearance next season will be anticipated with much expectation.

An interesting feature, during the past season, has been the conducting of four performances of Wagner's "Lohengrin," by Herr Hans Richter, of Vienna, whose influence on these renderings of the work was advantageously apparent. Irrespective of these occasions, Signor Arditi has fulfilled the duties of musical director and conductor with his accustomed zeal and energy. The band (with Herr Straus as leading violinist) and the chorus have been as efficient as heretofore; the new scenery by Signor Magnani has been exceedingly beautiful, and the stage appointments have been generally excellent.

Her Majesty's Theatre is to reopen this (Saturday) evening with performances by Haverly's American Mastodon Minstrels.

We gave last week an outline of the arrangements for Messrs. Gatti's new series of promenade concerts, which begin at Covent Garden Theatre this (Saturday) evening.

Miss Florence Sanders and Miss Christina Britton (pianists) each gave a morning concert on Wednesday. That of Mr. A. Collard (flautist) took place on Thursday evening, with a programme in which flute music was prominent.

A pianoforte recital will be given by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, at St. James's Hall, next Wednesday afternoon, the pianists being the Chevalier Antoine de Kontski, Mr. J. H. Bonawitz, Miss Bessie Richards, and Mrs. Bucknell-Eyre. In the evening, in the smaller room of the same building, there will be a historical concert, at which some virginal and harpsichord music will be performed on instruments of that class; while Gluck's and Chopin's pieces will be given on the pianos on which they were composed. The songs selected from the early masters are to be accompanied on the harpsichord.

The committee of the Birmingham Triennial Musical Festival have, in conjunction with Messrs. Novello, made arrangements with M. Gounod for the first performance, at the festival of 1882, of a great oratorio, upon which he is now engaged.

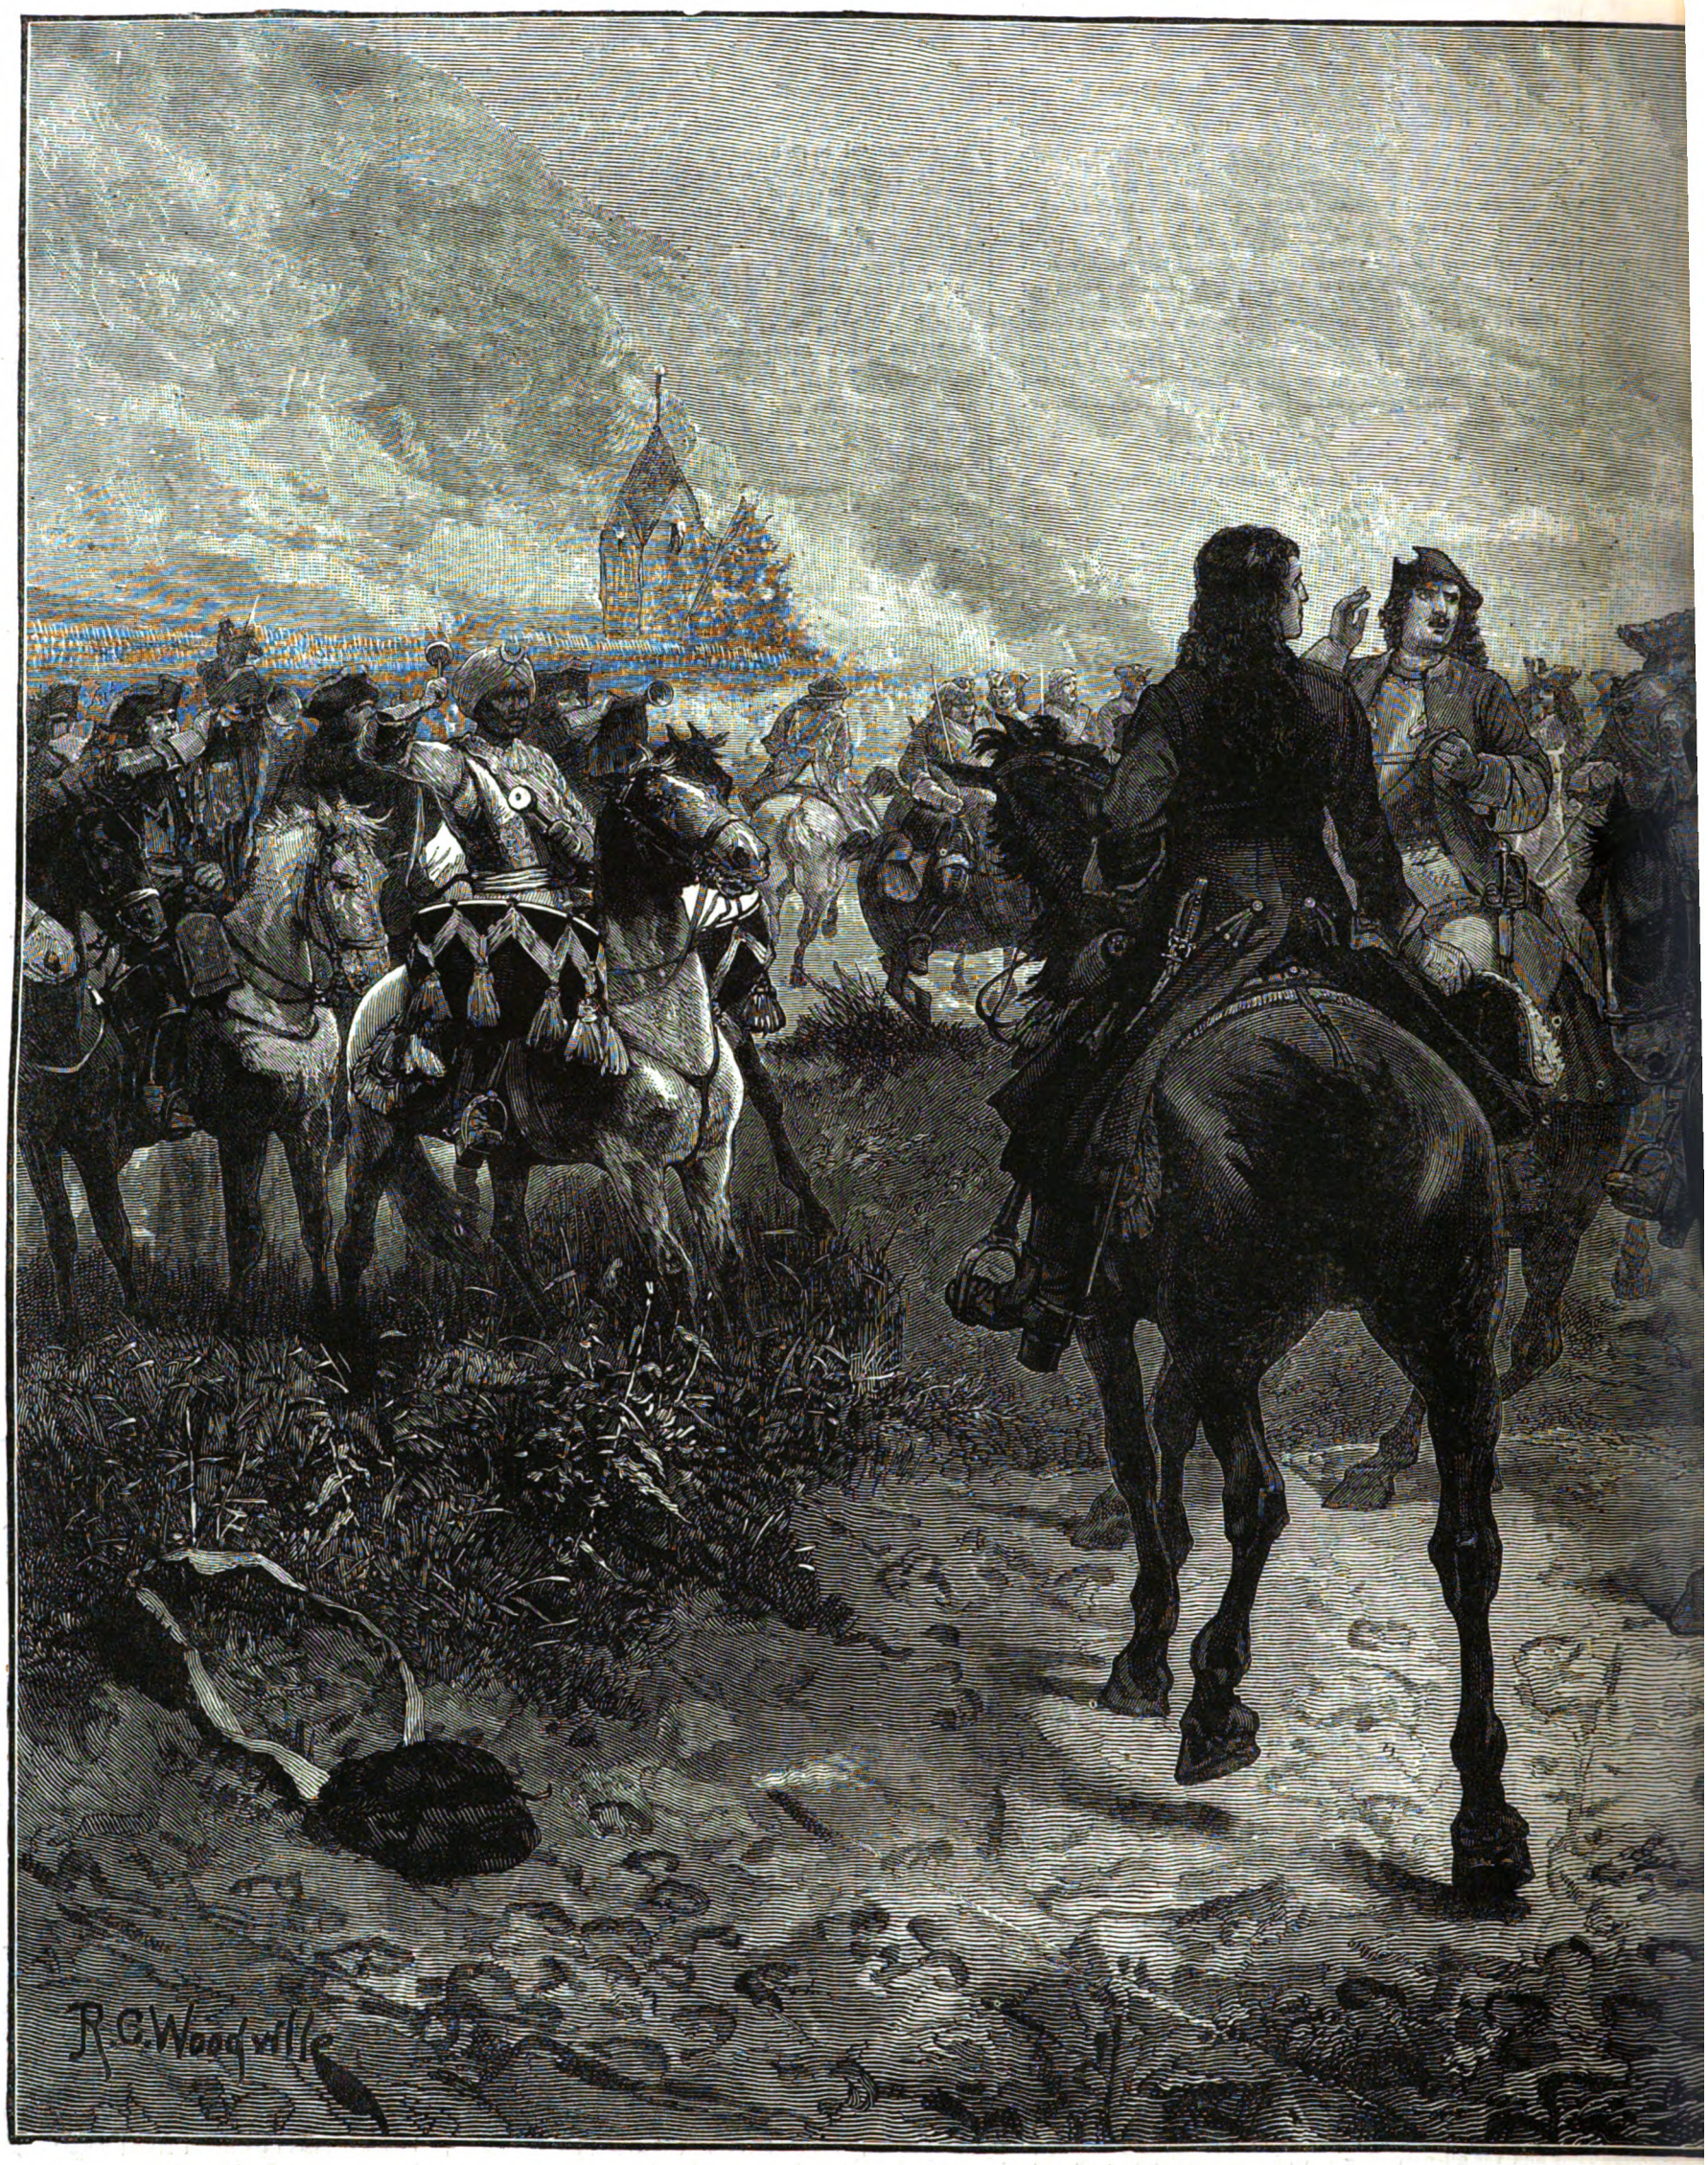
We understand that the Blackheath Musical Society is being reorganised, so as to form a thoroughly efficient choir for the south-east district of the metropolis. The choir will number 250 members, each one having to pass a test examination before admission. The longer works to be performed will be those which are almost or quite unknown in this country, and motets, madrigals, and glees will form an important feature in the society's programmes. Mr. G. F. Geaussent will be the conductor.

On Saturday last Mrs. Fairfax, assisted by several eminent artistes, gave, at the Vestry-hall Kensington, a dramatic entertainment in aid of a private charity. The appeal was responded to by a numerous and fashionable audience, who listened with evident satisfaction to the different items in the programme. The most notable features, however, were two recitations by Mrs. Fairfax—"The Spanish Mother," by Sir Francis Doyle, and a scene from Sheridan's celebrated comedy of "The School for Scandal." In the former of these Mrs. Fairfax entered into the martial spirit of the theme, and by her expressive tones and gestures fully realised the situation to the audience. Subsequently her assumption of the character of Lady Teazle, in one of her dual combats with her irritable better-half, provoked the risible faculties of the audience, and elicited well-merited applause. A juvenile recitation by a little lady who appeared under the cognomen of Signorina Tina was also deserving of commendation. Prominent among the vocalists was Madame Edith Wynne, who on her appearance received a hearty welcome, and whose song "When the heart is young" was loudly and deservedly applauded. Miss Rose Trevor, who hails as a pupil of Signor Casano, also showed signs of careful training, and gave with considerable expression Spohr's song, "Rose Softly Blooming." The other vocalists were Madame Renniger, Mrs. Katherine Poynter, Fraulein Louise Von Hennig, Frank Percy, and Mr. Frank Quartermaine.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The annual distribution of prizes to the scholars of the Middle-Class Schools, Cowper-street, City-road, by Mrs. Playfair, took place on the 22nd inst.; after which, Dr. Playfair, M.P., addressed the parents and scholars, remarking that the school came up to Knox's standard, which was that, in addition to classics and philosophy, lads should be taught that which they intended to pursue for profit in after life.

Sir Louis Mallet presided yesterday week at the annual gathering at the Royal Indian Engineering College, Egham, and the Earl of Northbrook distributed the prizes to the successful students. He also spoke to them from his own knowledge of the work in which they will be engaged in India, and gave them some practical advice for their personal help and guidance.



Apposition Day at St. Paul's School was celebrated last week, in presence of a large company. Mr. Walker, the High Master, announced that the examiners had given a highly favourable report of the classical progress of the school, and that the judgment in mathematics was no less satisfactory. The number of boys at present in the school is about 250, of whom 153 receive a free education.

On Monday the Duke of Cambridge, Field Marshal Commanding in Chief, awarded commissions and prizes to the successful students at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; the Marquis of Bath, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Dean of Westminster, Dr. Bradley, president of University College, and a numerous company of ladies and gentlemen, attended the Speech Day proceedings at Marlborough; and Lady Louisa Egerton distributed the prizes to the pupils of the Royal Naval Female School, Twickenham, preliminary to the vacation.

On Tuesday Lord Northbrook distributed the prizes gained by the pupils in the Royal Naval School at New-cross, taking occasion to quote for the encouragement of the boys the names of many distinguished men who had received their education in the institution; Mr. Alderman Figgins presided at the distribution of prizes awarded at the recent examination of the Stationers' School; the Bishop of Rochester (Dr. Thorold) presided at the annual commemoration and distribution of prizes at Queen Elizabeth's Free Grammar School of St. Olave and St. John, Southwark; an interesting ceremony was held at the Old Castle-street School, Whitechapel, when about 500 prizes were distributed to the pupils of this flourishing school, which at present contains about 1400 children; and the annual distribution of the prizes won by the pupils of the Mary Datchelor School for Girls took place at the Drapers' Hall, the chair being taken by Mr. Alderman Cotton, M.P., and the prizes being distributed by Mrs. Richmond Cotton.

The annual distribution of prizes at Dulwich College took place yesterday (Friday).

THE COURT.

The Queen is enjoying complete retirement in the Isle of Wight, passing the days chiefly, apart from the duties of state, in quiet drives and walks around the Royal demesne. Her Majesty has entertained but few guests since her arrival at Osborne. Princess Frederica of Hanover and Baron Pawel von Rammingen, with the Hon. Mrs. Charles Eliot, dined with the Queen before the Princess and her husband's departure from Albert Cottage for London. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar has also lunched with her Majesty.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. Canon Prothero.

Princess Beatrice sailed in her Majesty's yacht Alberta, Captain Thomson, to Yarmouth Roads on Tuesday, and there went on board the Union Company's steam-ship Trojan, on her arrival in the Solent, to welcome the Empress Eugénie in the Queen's name on her return from South Africa. Her Royal Highness accompanied the Empress to Southampton, and then returned to Osborne in the Alberta.

Her Majesty continues to receive favourable accounts from Canada of Prince Leopold.

The Queen makes daily inquiries as to the health of the Duchess of Westminster.

Her Majesty will hold a Council at Osborne to-day (Saturday).

The Queen has appointed Captain Walter Douglas Somerset Campbell, of the 79th Highlanders, to be one of the Grooms in Waiting in Ordinary to her Majesty, in the room of John Francis Campbell, of Islay, Esq., resigned; and also Lieutenant-Colonel R. W. Hunt, Royal Marines, to be Aide-de-Camp to her Majesty, in the vacancy caused by the promotion of Colonel H. W. Gwyn, Royal Marine Light Infantry.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were present at the "Bachelor's" Ball at Kensington House on Thursday week. The next day they gave their last ball of the season at Marlborough House. Prince and Princess Christian, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and Prince Louis of Battenberg were present. Nearly 1200 invitations were issued. Mr. Liddell's band was in attendance.

The Prince and Princess, accompanied by Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, went to the Volunteer Camp at Wimbledon on Saturday, and the Princess presented the prizes to the successful competitors of the National Rifle Association. Their Royal Highnesses afterwards visited Earl Stanhope (president of the National Rifle Association) and Countess Stanhope.

On returning to London the Prince and Princess, with their daughters, went to the garden fête which was held at Kensington House in aid of the Mansion House Fund for the relief of the sufferers from the loss of H.M.S. Atalanta. The Prince and Princess went to the Gaiety Theatre in the evening.

Their Royal Highnesses visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace on Sunday morning to offer their congratulations to her Royal Highness on the occasion of her birthday. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz called at Marlborough House in the afternoon.

The Prince and Princess entertained the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz and Princess Frederica of Hanover and Baron Pawel von Rammingen at luncheon on Monday previous to their departure from Marlborough House, accompanied by Prince Louis of Battenberg, for Goodwood, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Richmond for the race week.

Their Royal Highnesses, with the Goodwood House party, have been present at the races, as well as the Duke of Cambridge, with Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the Countess of Dornberg's party from Molecombe House.

The Princess was godmother to the daughter of Captain and Lady Rosamond Fellowes, who was christened in North Audley-street church on Sunday morning, in the presence of the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Sondes, and other relations. The infant received the names of Alexandra Frances Anne.

The Prince, the Grand Master of Freemasons in England, has fixed Oct. 26 for the installation of the Marquis of Londonderry as Provincial Grand Master of the province of Durham. The ceremony will take place in the city of Durham.

The Duchess of Connaught attained her twentieth year on Sunday. She received a graceful tribute from the officers of the 1st battalion of the Rifle Brigade, indicative of the high regard in which her husband is held by his brother officers. The memento is a jewel designed for the regimental badge. The Duke and Duchess arrived at Buckingham Palace on Monday from Bagshot, and in the evening went to the Gaiety Theatre. Their Royal Highnesses left town on Tuesday on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Richmond for Goodwood races.

Prince Christian has been the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Richmond during the week.

The Duchess of Cambridge completed her eighty-third year on Sunday; with the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Frederica of Hanover and Baron von Pawel Rammingen, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck and their children, visited the Duchess at her residence in the Ambassadors' Court, St. James's Palace, to offer felicitations.

The Duke of Cambridge awarded commissions and prizes to the successful students at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, on Monday. His Royal Highness has passed the week at Goodwood House.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz arrived at St. James's Palace from the Continent on Saturday.

Princess Frederica of Hanover opened the bazaar in aid of the Royal Homes for Ladies, at Wimbledon House, on the 21st inst. Her Royal Highness and Baron Pawel von Rammingen are on a visit to Lord and Lady Wimborne at Canford Manor.

RETURN OF THE EMPRESS EUGENIE.

The Empress Eugénie, in the Union Company's steam-ship Trojan, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Monday night from Zululand. Princess Beatrice, from her Majesty's yacht Alberta, boarded the Trojan off Yarmouth on Tuesday morning and welcomed the Empress with an affectionate greeting. The Princess sailed in the Trojan to Southampton Water, where she took leave of the Empress and returned in the Alberta to Osborne. The steam-tender Alexandra, having on board a large party of relatives and friends of the Empress, and Sir Benjamin Phillips, chairman of the Union Steam-Ship Company, met the Trojan off Netley, where her Majesty took leave of her fellow-passengers, and went on board the Alexandra, together with those who had accompanied her throughout her pilgrimage. Upon arriving at Southampton the Empress travelled by special train to Waterloo station, where she was met by Earl Sydney, Sir Algernon and Lady Borthwick, Mr. and the Misses Bartle Frere, and others, the Empress alighting on the platform to speak to each, after which the journey was continued to Chiselhurst.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

Goodwood has come opportunely this week, in a manner of speaking, for noble Lords desirous of putting the finishing touch on their training ere joining in the fray next Monday on the vexed question of the Compensation for Disturbance in Ireland Bill. The Duke of Somerset, not unfamiliar with the sport of pouring a broadside into his political friends on the side they least expect attack, has taken a leading part in calling the opponents of the measure to arms; and, not for the first time in his career, Earl Grey will do battle against a Liberal Ministry. On the motion of Earl Granville, the bill was read the first time on Tuesday; but Lord Dartrey gave notice that upon its coming up again on Monday Earl Grey would move that it be read the second time that day three months. About three quarters of an hour did their Lordships sit altogether; and the rapidity with which they can transact public business when they please was shown in quickly passing various measures through a stage or so.

Ireland claims the most important of the other measures their Lordship's have recently deliberated upon. Earl Spencer, whose active participation in debate saves Earl Granville considerable trouble, on Monday had no difficulty in persuading the House to read the second time the Relief of Distress Bill, which is to increase the sum to be advanced by the Irish Church Commissioners from £750,000 to £1,500,000.

COMMONS.

Save that the Uhlans of the Opposition, Mr. Gorst, Lord Randolph Churchill, and Sir H. Drummond-Wolff, have now and again figured on the floor of the House, and endeavoured, but vainly, to draw the Prime Minister with respect to Mr. Dodson's retention of his seat, and with regard to other personal and unimportant matters, little of moment occurred at the beginning of the week to eclipse the weighty official declaration made by Lord Hartington, and the passing of the Irish Compensation Bill through its final stage.

The noble Marquis the Secretary for India was so scrupulously anxious to be exact that his Lordship on Tuesday supplemented his Monday's statement respecting Afghanistan with a few corrections of the published reports. Had Lord Hartington roused himself to speak more clearly and distinctly on Monday the errors would hardly have been committed, it may be suggested to a Minister, whose sound views need only to be expressed with terseness, vigour, and in plainly audible tones to materially strengthen his claims for that high office to which his Lordship will, in all probability, one day succeed. The gist of Lord Hartington's two statements was that Lord Ripon had with great firmness and great prudence carried on with Abdurrahman the negotiations begun by Lord Lytton, the issue being that at a durbar in Cabul Abdurrahman had been proclaimed Ameer with the assent of the British Government and a considerable number of sirdars and people. Under these circumstances, it was hoped that the British Troops would very shortly be able to retire from Cabul, placing Abdurrahman in possession of the city. Retiring gradually, the troops might be expected to return to India in the autumn. No negotiations would be opened with Abdurrahman at present, either with regard to Candahar or the districts assigned to the British Government under the Treaty of Gundamuk. The Ameer had been further informed that the British Government did not consider "Afghanistan within the sphere of interference of any foreign Power, and therefore the Ruler of Cabul cannot have relations with any foreign Power except the British." If the Ameer be guided by our advice, England would assist him "against any unprovoked aggression from any foreign Power." Finally, he would not be required to receive a British Resident at Cabul, but a Mohammedan Envoy might be sent to maintain friendly relations, and the pecuniary assistance to be granted to Abdurrahman would be only temporary.

The third reading of the Irish Compensation Bill on Monday was preceded by a prolonged debate, which made it clear that many Liberals joined the Conservative Party in antagonism to the principle of the measure. Mr. Forster and Mr. Gladstone both reiterated that the Bill was only introduced to deal with the exceptional distress which resulted in an exceptionally large number of evictions in Ireland. The Secretary for Ireland and the Prime Minister also repeated that the measure could not affect any tolerant landlord, and where it threatened exacting landlords it would simply remove the disputes from the fields to the courts, and prevent the use of the police on the one hand and resistance by the tenant on the other. Mr. Tottenham's amendment, declaring there was no justification for a departure from the principles of the 1870 Irish Land Act, found a seconder in Mr. C. W. Fitzwilliam, and Lord Elcho supported it with an anecdote of a Bristol soda-water manufacturer, who could not pay his rent, and who claimed compensation from his landlord, whom he feared to shoot, as he was a Captain of Volunteers, and a far better shot than himself. Mr. E. Clarke made an effective speech on the same side (being subsequently complimented by Mr. Gladstone), and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach's animated criticism found an echo in Sir Stafford Northcote's sweeping condemnation of a bill, which would, he argued, unsettle the relations of landlord and tenant, and was founded on no just principle. On a division, the amendment was negatived, however, by 303 to 237—a majority of 66; and the measure was in the small hours read the third time and passed.

Miscellaneous as usual have been the minor topics dealt with at question-time, and in the evening; and as difficult as ever has it been to tell whether some queries were given birth to by public duty or pushing egotism and self-sufficiency. Without dwelling, however, on the subjects of postal telegraphs and national education, &c., that have given rise to fruitless discussions, we may come without parley to the deplorable intelligence which the Marquis of Hartington had the duty to communicate to the House on Wednesday.

DISASTER IN AFGHANISTAN.

Coming as a sad kind of commentary upon the hopeful declaration of policy made earlier in the week by the noble Lord, the Marquis of Hartington's revelation on Wednesday occasioned a painful shock in the House. The Secretary for India said:—

Sir, I regret to say that I have this morning received news of a very serious character from India. I have received this morning the following telegram from the Governor of Bombay:—"Primrose telegraphs to-day from Candahar: Terrible disaster. General Burrows's force annihilated. We are going into the citadel. General Phayre telegraphed to collect what force he can and march on Candahar. Forces are to be concentrated at Chaman. Message ends." I have telegraphed to Simla to send another brigade if necessary. I am sorry to say that the only news that we have received respecting General Burrows's expedition has been telegraphic, and therefore I am not able to give any details as to the composition of his force. I believe, however, it consisted of a brigade, but how that brigade was composed I am unable to state.

His Lordship added, shortly before the House rose:—

I stated when the House met that I would give before the House rose any additional information in my power in reference to what has taken place near Candahar. As far as I am able to ascertain, though my information, I am afraid, is not very correct, the brigade under the command of Burrows consisted of from 2000 to 3000 men, composed partly of a British infantry regiment and a battalion of horse artillery. I am not able to state positively what the British regiment was, but from telegrams we have received we think we may safely infer that it was part of the 66th. I am unable to tell at present what the force is under General Primrose at Candahar. Weakened as it was by the withdrawal of the detachment under General Burrows, it would not exceed from 1700 to 2000 men, but at the time when Burrows was dispatched orders were given for the reinforcement of the force at Candahar by some of the troops under General Phayre. I apprehend that it has been completed, and that the force at Candahar, under General Primrose, will probably be in excess of what I have stated. We have received further telegrams, but they do not add much to the information already received, but I will read them to the House so far as they relate to the facts which have occurred. I have received the following from the Viceroy:—"General Burrows has been seriously defeated by Ayoub Khan. Primrose has vacated the cantonments at Candahar and entered citadel. We proceeding forward with reinforcements. They are already on their way, and are being sent forward as quickly as possible. May be necessary to anticipate the dispatch of troops from England intended for the year's reliefs." There is also a further despatch from the Governor of Bombay, in reply to the Government of India, who asks what reinforcements we can spare. "This Government undertakes to furnish at the present emergency three batteries, a British cavalry regiment, half a regiment of Native cavalry, two European regiments of infantry, six regiments of Native infantry, besides a battery of artillery. Fragments of Burrows's force are arriving at Candahar. Details necessary. Ayoob's force stronger than was supposed. Phayre proposes to abandon Candahar unless strongly reinforced. Is to concentrate at Bolan." This telegram has just been placed in my hands. It is apparently in reply to one addressed to the Governor of Bombay, and also the Viceroy to ask if he could give details of the force under the command of General Burrows. "Horse Artillery, I and B, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, 1st Scinde Horse, 2nd Company Sappers, 66th Queen's Regiment, six companies first and 30th Native Infantry. Nothing more known. Telegraphs interrupted."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

King Humbert and Queen Margherita and the Prince of Naples, attended by Signor Villa, Minister of Grace and Justice, left Rome on Sunday for Turin. Signor Cairoli being confined to bed through the reopening of one of his old wounds, the King went to visit him before leaving, and remained with him nearly two hours.

Advices from New York state that the United States census of 1880 is far enough advanced to allow a definite estimate of the comparative growth of the large cities, and the result is indicative of wide prosperity and a steady and healthy increase. With few exceptions, the order of population remains substantially as in 1870. Chicago has gone up to the fourth place with a population of 475,000, against a population of 4479 in 1840; St. Louis has advanced to 375,000, Boston to 360,000, and Baltimore to 350,000. Cincinnati has 250,000 inhabitants, Cleveland and Milwaukee 158,000 and 130,000 respectively; Buffalo and Washington are on a level with 150,000; and Louisville has gone up to 145,000. The largest city in the States is of course New York, with a population of 1,200,000; Philadelphia comes next with 850,000, and Brooklyn follows with over half a million.

An American agricultural journal for July 10 publishes upwards of a thousand reports from contributors in every part of the United States and Canada on the harvest of the year. An analysis of these returns shows that the crops this year, except that of hay, will be very good indeed.

SOUTH AFRICA.

According to intelligence which has been received at Cape Town from Basutoland, the country is still in a very disturbed condition; there is, however, no confirmation of the reports of further attacks having been made by the hostile Basutos on those who surrendered their arms.

The Cape Town correspondent of the Standard telegraphs that the situation in Basutoland is "extremely critical, but not quite desperate." The Fingoes seem to have been disarmed and then armed against the Basutos, who thereupon attacked them, as well as their own people who had given up their arms. Cattle have been driven, and some ten men killed. The Basutos say they do not want to injure magistrates or traders, but that they remain on sufferance. The traders have fortified their stores, and are sending their women and children to the Free State. The troops will take a fortnight to reach Maseru.

Both branches of the Cape Parliament have expressed their confidence in the Government. In the House a motion of want of confidence was negatived by a majority of eight; and in the Council a declaratory resolution was passed by a large majority.

INDIA.

At a durbar held on the 22nd inst. at Cabul, Sirdar Abdul Rahman (or Abdurrahman) was formally recognised as Ameer on the part of her Majesty's Government. The durbar was attended by all the principal chiefs and sirdars of Cabul and its neighbourhood, and a deputation was present from Abdul Rahman. The country is reported to be entirely quiet. The Viceroy telegraphs that, on the 23rd, prayers were read in the mosques at Cabul on behalf of the new Ameer, and an address was read by the chief Kazi, reviewing the whole course of English relations with Afghanistan. The ceremony was attended by several thousands of people of all classes. The new Ameer, the Viceroy adds, has been received more favourably than could have been expected. The Times' correspondent says that at Jellalabad the news was received with satisfaction.

The Viceroy has telegraphed to the India Office that the Ameer has agreed to meet the British officers for a first interview, and has sent his camp to Ak Serai, a short distance north of Zimma.

It will be seen, however, in our Parliamentary column that news of a very painful character has been received from India. Lord Hartington announced in the House of Commons on Wednesday that a telegram from Candahar states that General Burrows's brigade has been annihilated.

According to a statement in the Times, our troops consisted of the E Battery of the B Brigade Horse Artillery, the Poonah Horse, the 3rd Scinde Horse, a part of the second company of Bombay Sappers, a portion of the 66th Queen's Infantry, believed to consist of sixteen officers and 550 men, and the 1st and 30th Bombay Infantry. This, in round numbers, amounts to about 750 Europeans and 2050 Natives, and corresponds with Lord Hartington's rough estimate that the brigade under General Burrows consisted of 2000 or 3000 men. The number of men who had been detached to Khelat-i-Ghilzai are understood to be a portion of the C Battery, 2nd Brigade Royal Artillery, 200 men from the 66th Regiment of Queen's troops, and 850 men from the 29th Native Infantry.

The position of the force which has suffered this defeat will be readily understood. Ayoob Khan has throughout recent events been maintaining an obscure and independent position at Herat. About a fortnight ago he was understood to be advancing on Candahar; and, as we have established Shere Ali as Wali of that city and district we were bound to send out a force in his protection. This force, under General Burrows, advanced to the west as far as possible on the Helmund, but here a mutiny occurred in the Wali's troops. It is said they were corrupted by a veteran regiment which had accompanied the Wali from Cabul last year. But, however this may be, they deserted his standard and endeavoured to join Ayoob Khan, who was not far distant, on the other side of the Helmund. They were pursued by General Burrows and suffered some loss; but he found it necessary, in consequence of their desertion, to retire from Girishk towards Candahar, and he took up a position at a place called Khishk-i-Nakhud. On Monday, a telegram from the Viceroy stated that Ayoob Khan's troops had crossed the Helmund on July 22, and that parties of his cavalry were foraging about the country near our camp. General Burrows, being apprehensive of an attack by them, had shifted his camp to a new position, in which the stores, the sick, and the baggage animals were in an inclosure. Ayoob's cavalry were known to be numerous, but the report only estimated the number of Ghazis and men who had joined him at about 4000. It was evident, however, that they were meditating an attack upon our diminished force, and on the 22nd 400 horsemen were met by our cavalry reconnaissance and compelled to retreat. This was the position in which General Burrows must have suffered the attack which had so disastrous a result, and it is now believed that he was immensely outnumbered.

The second telegram from the Governor of Bombay says that Ayoob's force was stronger than was supposed, amounting to 12,000 men and thirty-six guns, well served. In Candahar we can have but a small garrison left. It is believed it includes two batteries of artillery, the C Battery of the Second Brigade, and the 5th Battery of the Eleventh Brigade, about 700 officers and men of the 7th Fusiliers, or about 900 Europeans and 1000 natives in all. Our small force has had to retire to the citadel, and must there, no doubt, stand on the defensive until it receives reinforcements.

It will be seen from the telegrams of the Viceroy and of the Governor of Bombay that the reinforcements thus urgently needed are promptly available. If, as is believed, the citadel of Candahar is well provisioned, our force cannot fail to be able to hold out as long as may be necessary. The Governor of Bombay states that he can furnish at once three batteries, one British cavalry regiment, half a regiment of Native cavalry, two of European infantry, six Native infantry regiments, besides a battery and two battalions in Scinde. If these are not sufficient, the Viceroy says that he is sending large additional reinforcements from India. There need, in fact, be but little anxiety respecting the immediate result of Ayoob Khan's success. He will be checked and defeated without material difficulty.

AUSTRALIA.

A telegram from Melbourne of the 27th inst. informs us that the new Victorian Parliament has been opened by the Governor, the Marquis of Normanby, who, in his speech, after alluding to the deficit in the revenue for the year, expressed a hope that Parliament would pass a satisfactory measure for the reform of the Constitution. His Excellency further announced the introduction of bills dealing with the questions of the land department, the extension of railways, and the construction of irrigation works. Mr. Berry subsequently moved a vote of want of confidence in the Cabinet of Mr. Service, which was passed by 48 to 35 votes.

"A WAIF FROM A MISSING SHIP."

Among Mr. S. P. Jackson's various contributions to the Exhibition of the Old Water-Colour Society (which closes to-day) the drawing we engrave is the most pathetic. The story it suggests is as obvious as it is painful. A storm has spent its worst fury, and is passing away, carrying in its dark and ruthless bosom the secret of a missing ship. The torn edge of the great pall of storm-cloud is sinking to the horizon, revealing the evening light, flushed, as it were, with shame and anger, as it struggles through rifts of higher clouds that still bar its passage to the desolated earth. The "swell," testifying to the recent torment of the sea, breaks in slow and heavy pulses along the shore, like a strong man labouring for breath after violent exertion or passion. And there is one more witness to the pitiless tempest—the stranded boat, belonging, as we see by the name on its stern, to the ship "Ceres"—how hollow was the promise of the name—of "London." But in what condition has the boat reached the little bay on this rocky coast, and where are its occupants? Yet of many a vessel—of the hapless Atalanta, to wit—not even such a waif and stray as this crazy relic ever drifts to shore or meets a human eye.

Particulars have been received at Madrid of the earthquakes in the Philippine Islands, which have entirely destroyed the city of Manilla. There were four shocks, chiefly on the 13th and the 18th instant. All the principal buildings were ruined, including one which has survived the earthquakes of the past three centuries. A number of natives were killed, but no Europeans. The inhabitants encamped in the fields.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The death of Mr. Joseph Dawson, the famous trainer, which occurred on Friday week, can scarcely be said to have caused a shock to his many friends, as it had been known for the last few weeks that his recovery was practically hopeless, and he has only outlived his brother, Mr. Thomas Dawson, by a few months. It was from him that he took his first lessons in the art, and, after a brief apprenticeship at Brecongill, near Middleham, he started on his own account at East Ilsley more than twenty years ago. His stay there was not a very long one, as in 1864 he purchased Bedford Lodge, and gradually enlarged and improved it until he possessed about the most perfect training-quarters in the kingdom. Lord Stamford was one of his first employers, and he won the Two Thousand for him with Diophantus in 1861, and also carried off many a good stake with Little Lady. Then came "Mr. Pryor," and the names of The Rake, the slashing Fripponnier, and Cardinal York, three of the most celebrated bearers of the "Mexican blue," occur to our mind. Even a simple list of the good horses that have been under Mr. Dawson's care would take up more space than we can afford; but the best of all was unquestionably Prince Charlie, in whom the trainer had a half share. It is not too much too say that no man had such a specialty for bringing two-year-olds to the post in the pink of condition early in the season, and he secured no less than four Middle Park Plates, with The Rake, Frivolity, Prince Charlie, and Peter. No Derby ever fell to his share, but he won the St. Leger with Hawthornden, who was a complete outsider. Mr. Dawson was in his fifty-seventh year, and will be sadly missed by the poor of Newmarket, to whom he was a generous friend. His funeral took place on Monday.

Matters looked somewhat ominous for the opening day at Goodwood on Tuesday, as the aspect of the weather was far from encouraging, and during the afternoon rain appeared imminent, but, fortunately, it held off, and although the air was occasionally close and oppressive, Goodwood was "glorious" as of yore and most enjoyable. Proceedings opened very tamely with the time-honoured Craven Stakes, which was reduced to a match between Attalus and Emperor Titus, odds being laid throughout on Mr. Houldsworth's Rogue, who, however, curled up in the most unmistakable fashion the moment Fordham asked him to gallop, and the non-favourite landed the Macaroni jacket very easily. Fourteen out of a full total of fifteen were coloured on the card for the chief event of the day—viz., the Goodwood Stakes—and resulted in the popular victory of Mr. R. Jardine's Reveller (7 st. 4 lb.), after a desperate finish, by a short head from Edelweiss (6 st.) and Bay Archer (8 st. 5 lb.). Kellett rode a fine race on the winner, who is a brown with a white near hind heel and a sprinkling of grey hairs on his off hind leg, and he stands full 15 hands 3 in., with immense bone, great length and substance, combined with well-placed shoulders, a strong back and loins, and uncommonly good limbs all round. Mr. Crawfurd, who owns both second and third, declared to win with Bay Archer, who ran a great horse with 8 st. 5 lb. on his back, a remark which applies equally to Roehampton (9 st.), who finished a good fourth. There was a capital field for the Richmond Stakes, which included Sir Charles Scobell, Bal Gal, and Geologist, the latter of whom cost 1000 guineas last year at the Yardley Stud sale. The first-named was one of the earliest beaten, and Bal Gal, with Fred. Archer up, showed a great improvement on her July Stakes form, and easily defeated Scobell by three-quarters of a length, and in her, probably, Lord Falmouth has a second Wheel of Fortune.

Racing men enjoyed a comparative holiday last week, as no meeting was held until the Thursday, when Sandown Park and Pontefract began simultaneously. The Prince of Wales was present at Sandown on the first day, and as, in addition to a splendid band, the Spanish students had also been engaged, the occupants of the members' inclosure must have passed a very pleasant afternoon. A capital field of ten ran for the Surbiton Handicap Plate, for which Charibert (10 st. 4 lb.) was as good a favourite as anything, despite his welter weight. Langaron (7 st.) looked all over a winner until the last few strides, when the Two Thousand winner managed to get up and beat her by a head, and, as he was conceding no less than 27 lb. to Strathavon and 38 lb. to Roscius, he must certainly be considered the reigning "Prince of the T.Y.C." Of course, after his two good performances at the Newmarket July Meeting, Iriquois was very heavily backed for the Great Kingston Two-Year Old Plate, a slight shade of odds being finally laid on him. He did not, however, seem to run very kindly, and never looked really dangerous, a rattling finish between Lady Chelmsford and King of Scotland ending in the neck victory of the former. On the Friday, the Gold Cup fell an easy prey to Charibert, who was only opposed by Carnace, a two-year-old in John Day's stable. After her grand exhibition at Kempton Park, the Warren Nursery Plate was looked upon as a certainty for Favorita. Jeffery seemed to ride her very tenderly for the greater part of the journey, but she took the lead at the distance, and seemed about to win in a canter; Montrose, however, stuck well to her, and, as she swerved a good deal to the left in the last hundred yards, the odds laid on her were only landed by a head. Nearly all the events at Pontefract brought large fields to the post, but the results need no comment.

There is very little to chronicle this week in the way of cricket, for, owing to the uncertain weather that has prevailed, most of the fixtures have had to be abandoned, or have resulted in an unsatisfactory draw. Gloucestershire have been especially unfortunate in this respect, as they had all the best of it in their match with Lancashire, when the continuous rain put a stop to further play, whilst their match with Yorkshire has been postponed for the same reason, as also was the latter's match with the Australians at Huddersfield. At Esher, A. P. Lucas played in his well-known determined style against J Zinguri, scoring 86, which included one six, four, and three, and sixteen twos; W. H. Game, of Oxford fame, also played well for 42. At a special meeting held on Monday last the committee of the Surrey Club decided to arrange a match to be played at Kennington Oval against the Australians, provided a representative team can be got together to oppose them.

The champion oarsman of the world, Edward Trickett, of Australia, arrived in London on Monday last, and took up his old quarters at the "Bells," Putney, whence he will take his preliminary spins for his match with Hanlan in November next.

At a meeting of the Napoleon Memorial Committee held last week a resolution was unanimously arrived at to withdraw the proposal to place the monument of the late Prince Louis in Henry VII.'s chapel. The Dean of Westminster has acceded to the withdrawal; and it is announced that the site selected for the memorial is St. George's Chapel, Windsor, in the space between the pillars of the nave in the south aisle, near the monument to her Majesty's father, the Duke of Kent.

TOY-SHOPS.

To the scientific mind everything is matter for science: and the result of a truly scientific scrutiny would seem to be that everything is extremely like everything else. Men and women, cows, centipedes, toy-shops—the leading facts in their histories are almost indistinguishable, if one only attaches sufficient importance to the essential, and shows a proper disregard for the accidental; and thus, the development of the toy-shop—its origin in the common shop which sells everything, its growth and specialisation (the word is not too ugly for a philosopher)—may be held a subject fitly to be treated by a Herbert Spencer or a Darwin.

We all know that little "general" shop: its windows with small old-fashioned panes, its collection of cloths and ribbons, of herrings and cheese, of toys and crockery. Perhaps its toys only include one steadfast wooden steed (white, with large and symmetrical spots like wafers), a drum, a net-full of small tennis-balls and large marbles, and a tin whistle; but (as Spencer tells us) at this early stage no organ can be fully developed while each has to perform many functions. In the lowest form of animal, mouth, hand, foot, eye, are hardly to be distinguished one from the other; so a village cannot indulge in a draper's, a chemist's, a grocer's, a toy-shop, all different and detached. It manages to get on with one which combines the many; and so, as we do not expect juggling-tricks or miniature-painting of a day-labourer, we must not ask for very elaborate playthings of a "general shop."

The second stage is still very common in remoter London. Islington is particularly blessed in the matter of toy-shops, which have freed themselves from "general" business, but at the cost of an alliance with sweets. The windows of these establishments are very frequently divided in the middle, the toys being partitioned off by whips or long sugar-sticks (cheap, but excessively unhealthy) from the edibles at a penny an ounce or two ounces for threehalfpence. This sort of shop rejoices much in halfpenny envelopes of "Great Surprises," consisting for the most part of smudgy copies of engravings, which are supposed to reprint themselves upon paper in some astonishing way, but which fulfil their purpose of amusement much better by simply making a horrible mess. Here, too, late in October, we are great in fireworks; and little boys come in couples, ready to bear mendacious evidence to each other's years, it being held that fireworks may not be sold to gentlemen under fourteen.

Above this, comes the genteel but unpretending toy-shop, which has entirely shaken off the attendant sweets, but which is not above relying greatly upon what one may call a test toy—that simple little stable of two or four stalls, in which wooden horses stand patiently all day long at an empty manger. To the grand West-End "emporium" these delightful playthings do not soar. Even those beautiful butchers' shops, with joints which hang from real hooks and can be taken down, are hardly admitted there; but of all toys—except soldiers and trains—they give the young male mind most pleasure. Girls, of course, love dolls'-houses best; and they are quite right. It is one of the most galling trials of manhood that we are not admitted—even at the earliest age after absolute babydom—to the delights of those wonderful detached residences, whose fronts open all at once (being hooked up when closed) and display bed-room, drawing-room, dining-room, and kitchen, all beautifully if disproportionately furnished, wherein giant guests, mistresses and servants stand about—not being commonly made to sit. There is such a scope for imagination about the whole thing; one can invent three-volume novels out of them.

It is in this third stage of toyshoppery that one oftenest finds the ideal toy-shop keeper—he (or she) who has an indestructible enjoyment of toys. The simple, enthusiastic Germans have this quality much more frequently than we: I recollect a youth at Coblentz who, after years of selling local photographs, was genuinely convulsed when he informed us that two neighbouring castles on the Rhine were humorously named the Cat and the Mouse. Yet we sometimes find the quality in England, not seldom among quaint, kindly, pathetic old maids, who have an infinite and touching motherliness for the many little ones who come to ask their candid and thoughtful counsel as to the investment of cherished sixpences.

But the majority of toysellers are not like this, by any means. Dickens did not invent Tackleton; he copied him. How well I recollect a gloomy old woman, the terror of my little-boyhood; one of those people who deal ferociously in technical terms, and will never give you anything unless you ask for it by its exact trade-name, and who damage their own business by shackling it with arbitrary rules which it pleases them to invent—she, I remember, would not sell half-penny "sheets of characters" unless we bought equal quantities of "scenes" with them. The foolish dame forgot that her sway extended only as far as the shopdoor—the little fellows she bullied had her in their power: they could stay away, and spend their pocket-money elsewhere—and, I am glad to say, they did. Hers was a sleepy, dingy, dusty shop: the last of a set of two or three unlucky ones, in a second-rate road. Nowadays the trams go past, and enliven the neighbourhood a little; twenty years ago it was very dreary. I never remember to have been in that shop at the same time as any other customer; I never remember its mistress to have sold anything ungrudgingly; I have no pleasant reminiscences of it in any way—except as everything dim and distant has its pleasantness—save only the memory of a certain "sheet of characters" there bought, whereon were a stage-coach (full size—for a two-foot theatre) with horses and postilions complete, and the same much smaller (and not in the least like) at full gallop in the distance.

Having quitted science for random recollections, let me mention the toy-shop in chief of my school days. It was, I should say, about a yard and a half square, and (I blush to own) it sold sweets. It was kept by one Mr. Jarr—even now the Mr. holds its place; one cannot think of him as plain Jarr—and his red-faced, energetic, sharp, and yet not wholly disagreeable wife: her redeeming point was her intelligent interest in what she sold. I do not believe that Mr. Jarr cared two pins for any created toy; he was a gaunt, spectral, melancholy man, curiously like a Jack-in-the-box, both in visage and in a weird habit of suddenly rising to a surprising height from behind the counter. Years after my time of customership, I called at Mr. Jarr's and spent a shilling. I had a recollection of numberless misty autumn evenings, after five o'clock school, when one ran round (it was not two minutes from the school-gate) and bought fireworks, Webb's "scenes and characters," or—less often—sweets; and the brightness of the little shop, as contrasted with the foggy London air without, remained with me. It was a real disappointment to find how stuffy, how shabby, how disagreeable a place it was; I wished I had not gone. Mr. Jarr was there still—as little washed, as angular, and as unhappy as ever, if not quite so tall. Mrs. Jarr I did not see; perhaps she sold toys no more. There was something sad about it all, this complete disappearance of the toy element from one's world—this vanishing of the charm of all playthings, except those which had ceased to exist. It was such a terrible reduction in the purchasing-value of a penny!

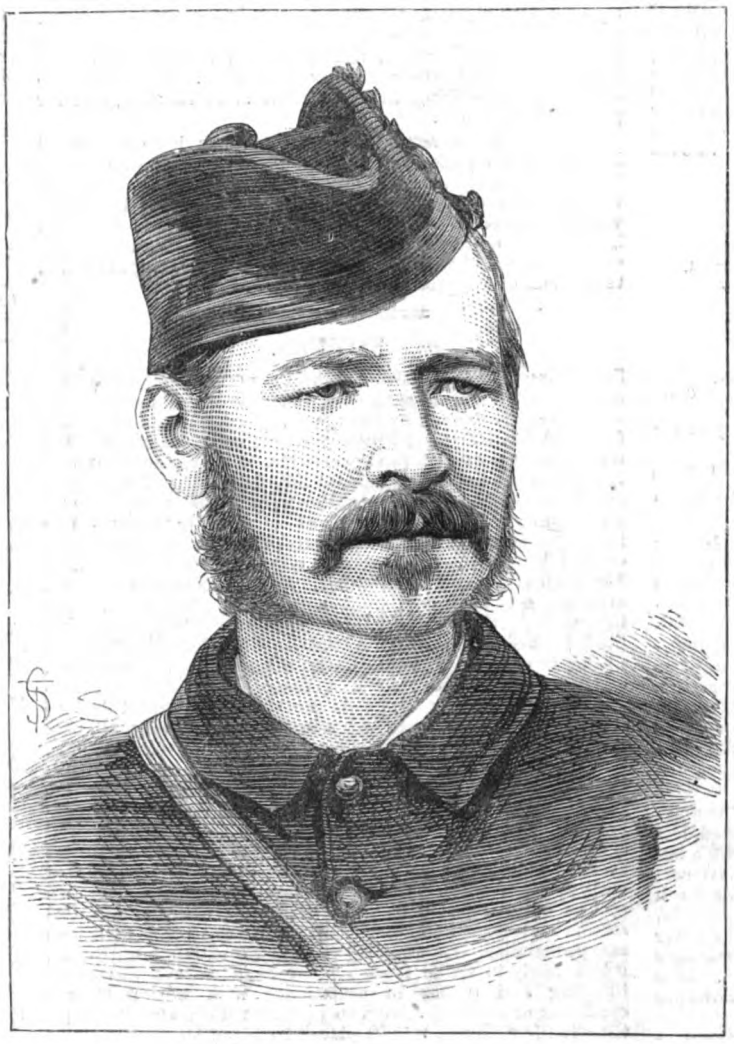
WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.

The annual meeting and competition in shooting for prizes of the National Rifle Association on Wimbledon-common, with the accompanying encampment of Volunteer Corps on the ground, came to an end last Saturday, when the prizes were presented by her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales to the successful marksmen.

The winner of the Queen's Prize of £250, with the gold medal of the Association and the gold badge held by the champion shot for the year, was announced on Tuesday week immediately upon the shooting in the final stage at 1000 yards distance. He made a score of 74 points, 28 being at the 1000 yards range. His name, with some details of the competition for this prize, appeared in our last week's paper, and we now give his portrait, that of Mr. Alexander Ferguson, of Campbelltown, Argyleshire, a private of the 1st Argyle Rifle Volunteers. We are told that he is a mason by trade, a partner in the small firm of Ferguson and Son, of Campbelltown. This was his first appearance at Wimbledon, and he had never elsewhere fired a shot at so long a range as 800 yards. On that day, firing at 800 yards pool for practice, he obtained three bull's-eyes out of four shots, and was by that circumstance encouraged to hope to make a fair score. But so little notion had he of the possibility of winning the Queen's Prize that, had it not been for the earnest persuasion of a friend who witnessed his pool shooting, he would have gone home before the second stage of the competition. He returned to Scotland on Monday last; and, both at Glasgow and at Campbelltown, was greeted with public honours and popular applause. The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Lombardi and Co., Pall-Mall East.



The remaining matches of chief interest, after Tuesday, are to be here noticed. The Elcho Challenge Shield was won by the Irish eight—the closest contest on record—by one point only. The total score was 1638, twenty-seven points higher than Scotland's winning score of last year. England was second with 1637 points, and Scotland last. The Public Schools Match for the Ashburton Shield was won by Eton with a total of 469 at the three ranges; and the Spencer Cup by Private Eliot, of Marlborough. The United Service Challenge Cup was won by the Volunteers with a score five points above that of the Army competitors, who were next. The Kolapore Cup, shot for by representatives of the mother country and Canada, was won by the home team, the Canadians breaking down at the 500 yards range. The Chancellors' Challenge Cup was won easily by Cambridge. The Loyd-Lindsay prize was won by the second squad of Bucks Yeomanry, the 1st Ayr being second, and the 1st Bucks third. The South Middlesex team won the Mappin Challenge Cup, and Lieutenant Godsal won the Dudley prize with a highest possible score of ten bull's-eyes at 1000 yards.

The Canadian riflemen gave a luncheon in their camp on Thursday, at which they entertained the Prime Minister of Canada and Lord Kimberley, Secretary of State for the Colonies.

On Saturday the long-range match with any rifles between Sir H. Halford's British team and Mr. F. Hyde's American team was contested. The British team gained the advantage at first, making 36 points at 800 and 44 points at 900 yards. At the 1000 yards range, however, the Americans held their own, scoring one point more than their opponents, but lost the match by 79 points.

The meeting terminated with the presentation of the prizes. The Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and the Princesses of the family and the Duke of Cambridge, arrived at four o'clock. The presentation took place on a raised platform erected near the front of the inclosure, before the Cottage. The Royal party were received by the Earl and Countess of Stanhope, Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, Colonel Stephens, Colonel Oxley, Captain St. John Mildmay, the Secretary of the Association, and other members of the Council. There were also present the Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. Childers, Secretary of State for War, Sir Stafford Northcote, Colonel North, Earl Waldegrave, and others.

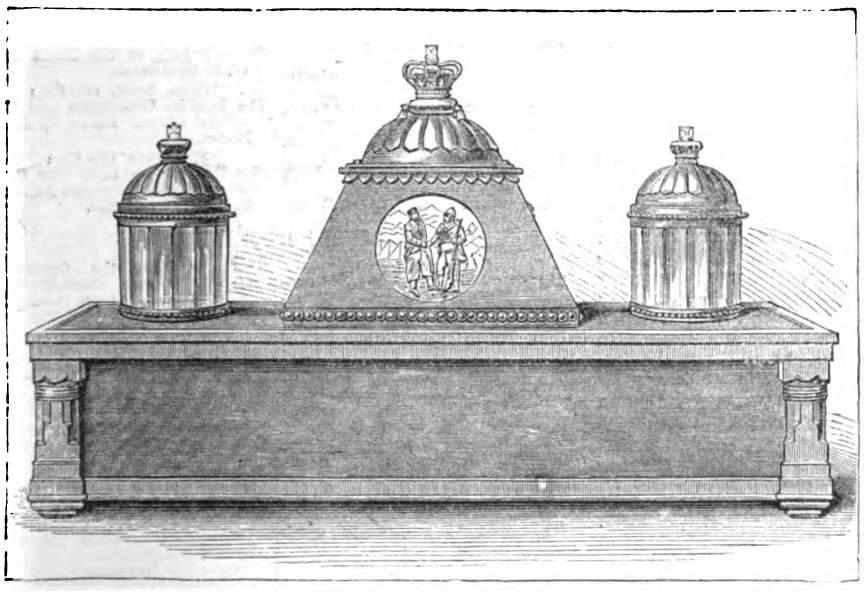
An interesting part of these proceedings was the presentation by the Princess of Wales, who is a Dame Chevalière of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England, of the silver medal awarded by the Duke of Manchester and the Chapter to Captain G. Fred. Harris, 3rd Buffs (Camp Adjutant), for his gallantry in saving the lives of five persons at a fire in Dublin. The presentation was made before the distribution of the prizes, her Royal Highness graciously addressing a few words to the recipient, and pinning the medal on his breast.

MR. ALEXANDER FERGUSON, 1ST ARGYLE RIFLE VOLUNTEERS, WINNER OF THE QUEEN'S PRIZE AT WIMBLEDON.

ST. JOHN'S HOSPITAL, TWICKENHAM.

St. John's Hospital, founded by the munificence of Miss Twining, of Dial House, Twickenham, was recently opened by her Royal Highness the Duchess of Teck, who was accompanied by the Duke of Teck and by three of their children. They were received by Miss Twining, the founder; Major-General Sir George Bouchier, K.C.B., the honorary secretary; and Mr. George Booth, the honorary treasurer. The Duchess was led through the corridor to the women's ward, where a special service was conducted by the Rev. G. B. Twining, the honorary Chaplain. Dr. Benthall, the resident medical officer, and Mrs. Benthall, held a garden-party after the ceremony, and received the Royal visitors, who remained some time. This hospital is built for the benefit and relief of the sick and suffering in and around Twickenham. Each ward will accommodate six patients. The provident and outdoor patient department, which has been carried on for some time, has been most successful; and now that the indoor department is ready, the hospital will start in full working order. Mr. Robert W. Edis, F.S.A., of Fitzroy-square, is the architect; and the builder is Mr. Messan, of Twickenham.

THE GOORKHAS AND THE RIFLES.



Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, who accompanied General Sir S. Browne's division of the army, from November, 1878, to June, 1879, in the advance through the Khyber Pass into Afghanistan, told us of the interesting camaraderie that existed between the 4th battalion of the Rifle Brigade and the 4th Goorkha Regiment. The latter, commanded at that time by Colonel Turton, being a rifle corps and wearing a similar green uniform, was hailed by the Rifle Brigade with cordial goodwill, though little conversation, from the difference of language, could pass between the men belonging to rank and file of these regiments. The soldiers of the Rifle Brigade, on more than one occasion, volunteered their help to assist the Goorkhas in pitching their tents, the encampments of Goorkhas and Rifles lying side by side. They both formed part of the brigade of General Macpherson, with whose head-quarters' staff our Special Artist was accommodated during that campaign. It will be remembered that he sent us a sketch of the Rifles bringing a sheep as a present to the Goorkhas for their Christmas dinner. When this force was broken up, on June 1 or June 2, the Goorkhas marched off the encampment ground at Gundamuk, followed by the men of the Rifle Brigade, with their band playing and the men cheering, a distance of two miles. The 4th Goorkhas were afterwards placed under the command of Colonel Rowcroft, upon the retirement of Colonel Turton on account of ill health, and bore their part in all the movements and actions round Cabul. The 4th battalion of the Rifle Brigade has also gone through the Afghan War. To commemorate their temporary association with each other in the campaign under Sir S. Browne, the officers of the Rifle Brigade have presented to the officers' mess-table of the 4th Goorkhas a silver inkstand, manufactured in London by Messrs. Elkington and Co., of which we give an Illustration. The native officers of the 4th Goorkhas, in their turn, have given a silver salver to the non-commissioned officers' mess of the Rifle Brigade.

"BLENHEIM."

To Mr. R. C. Woodville, the very promising young painter of this picture, we are indebted, as our readers will have observed, for many drawings and sketches which we have engraved. But these, admirable as they have been, were often so diverse in subject that they would hardly be taken as affording an earnest for such a work as the picture we are here to notice. It has attracted much attention in the Royal Academy Exhibition that closes next Monday evening. In the Exhibition Catalogue it bears the title of "Blenheim: Aug. 13, 1704," which was the day of the Duke of Marlborough's famous battle; and this title is accompanied with the extract from Dr. Hare's contemporary journal, which is reprinted beneath our Engraving.

Mr. Woodville, like his able young rival, Mr. Crofts, the painter of the picture of "Ramillies" in this same exhibition, has studied in the German school. He has seen, not without profit, the works of Menzel and other great German battle-painters. This might have been inferred from his picture exhibited last year of Frederick's reception by his troops on the evening before Rosbach. The special training that Mr Woodville has had has been of service to him, as we see, in achieving the greater success he has attained in the remarkably spirited work which we now reproduce.

But our Artist has facilities which no amount of technical drilling will impart. He has a dramatic instinct which enables him to realise how a given event probably occurred; how such a commander and such troops comported themselves in victory or defeat. He is able to express, with equal force, the calm self-possession of the hero and the reckless frenzy of the mass of combatants; he gives us that sense of the momentousness of the issue, over and above their struggle for life, without feeling which the painted battle is but an empty lifeless pageant, a theatrical sham fight, or rehearsal of warlike motions by puppets. Thus, in the picture before us, accident and variety are combined in unity: the interest is made to centre on the great military commander, who discomfited the best Generals of the Grand Monarque. We are made to feel that the result of the mighty contest hangs in the balance, but will be decided by his calm energy and consummately skilful tactics. As related in Dr. Hare's account of the battle, the Duke has ordered the charge to be sounded, and the two lines of Allied horse are now moving on, sword in hand, to the attack. The great captain, we see, has reined in his black charger, whose body is flecked with mud; and with his characteristically proud and graceful bearing, he issues his orders to his staff. He is utterly impassive amidst the fury and din of battle, the wounds and carnage (of which, by-the-way, there is not too much), and his eager and importunate officers. The front line of English cavalry is already advancing to the charge sounded by the kettle-drums and trumpets of the Guards, the former played by a black man, as was the custom down to living memory. The second line of Imperialist cavalry, in the rear, are drawing swords in answer to an order transmitted by an aide de-camp. In the distance, beyond the stream of the Nebel, are seen the blazing houses and mills which Lord Cutts had set on fire earlier in the day.

The whole composition is full of dramatic movement, and testifies to close observation, both of soldiers and horses. This is not the occasion for considering the political bearings of the memorable struggle. We must be content with the assurance given to Southey's little inquirer that "'twas a famous victory."

The Archbishop of Canterbury presided on Monday at the Annual Conference of the clergy of his diocese.

The Bishop of North Queensland has been called to England for a short time in consequence of the recent death of his father.

On Monday the Duchess of Connaught, who was accompanied by the Duke, laid the foundation-stone of a new church for South Farnborough, which includes the North Camp at Aldershott. It is to be erected from designs of Mr. J. E. K. Cutts, and the first portion of it will cost about £3000.

Yesterday week the Duke of Westminster laid the foundation-stone of a new church in Grosvenor-mews. It appears that 140 years ago one of his Grace's ancestors performed a similar ceremony for St. Mary's Chapel, Park-street, which, however, was never consecrated, and is now in course of demolition. This latter circumstance, together with the overcrowded condition of the parish church of St. George's, Hanover-square, has led the Duke to increase the accommodation of the latter by building a sort of subsidiary church.

A new church at Kingston, Dorset, was consecrated last Saturday by the Bishop of Salisbury. The edifice, which has been built solely at the cost of Lord Eldon, must have cost between £30,000 and £40,000. It is in the style of the thirteenth century, and built of local stone, being rich in marble shafts, the stone and the marble having been quarried, and the latter also polished, on the estate by the workmen on his Lordship's property. The structure has taken six years to build. It is from a design by Mr. Street, R.A. Nearly all the windows are filled in with stained glass by Clayton and Bell.

The Bishop of Worcester has consecrated a chapel at Evesham Workhouse. It has been built from designs of Mr. Preedy, and the chancel is adorned with painted windows. These and other decorations are the gift of the late Mrs. Barber, of Sedgeberrow, who bequeathed £200 to the Rev. Martin Amphlett for the embellishment of the chapel. Many other presents were received, and the total cost of the chapel, which will accommodate seventy-four persons, has been £1600 or £1700.

The east window of Welwick church has been restored and filled with stained glass, at the sole cost of Mrs. Annesley, of Dunnington, and as a memorial of her daughter, the late Mrs. William Fewson. The glass is by Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Bayne, of London.

HOME NEWS.

The Duke of Westminster has given to the citizens of Chester £10,000 towards the abolition of the Dee Bridge tolls.

The Treasury has sanctioned a grant of £500 per annum to provide an additional number of Distinguished Service Rewards for the Army Medical Department.

Dr. Henry Woodward, F.R.S., has succeeded to the office of keeper of the geological department in the British Museum, vacant by the resignation of Mr. G. R. Waterhouse.

The formation of the training squadron has been determined upon. The officer nominated for the command is Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam.

At a meeting of the committee of the Edinburgh University Liberal Association, held yesterday week, it was unanimously agreed to nominate the Earl of Rosebery as Lord Rector.

The annual fête of the Royal Horticultural Society was held on the night of the 21st inst., when the grounds at South Kensington were brilliantly illuminated.

The annual conference of the National Union of Conservative Associations was held yesterday week in St. James's Hall. In the evening the delegates dined together, under the presidency of Earl Percy.

The Miranda, six, composite sloop, was commissioned on the 22nd inst. at Devonport, by Commander the Hon. E. S. Dawson. She is to proceed to the Australian station to relieve the Danae, which has been in commission since 1876.

Mr. J. W. Benson has added the Prudential Assurance Company's late premises to those now occupied by him on Ludgate-hill, and inaugurates the occasion with an exhibition of gold caskets, racing cups, and magnificent jewels, graciously lent by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and others.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the third week in July was 82,961, of whom 46,081 were in workhouses and 36,880 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 674, of whom 461 were men, 170 women, and 43 children under sixteen.

The annual drill competition of selected schools under the control of the London School Board, for the Challenge Banner given by the Society of Arts, took place yesterday week in the grounds of Lambeth Palace. Colonel Battersby again awarded the banner to the school of Thomas-street, Limehouse, which had held its since last year's competition.

At a town's meeting held in Liverpool last week to consider the report of a committee on the scheme for establishing a university college in that city it was stated that several local gentlemen had promised £10,000 each for the endowment of the chairs in the proposed university. The Earl of Derby has also announced his intention to give a like sum, which brings up the amount promised to £80,000.

In the Chancery Division on Tuesday Mr. Justice Denman delivered judgment in the action brought to enforce a charge on the separate estate of Mrs. Buller in favour of Mr. Herbert Flower, Captain Arthur Henry Paget, and Lord Arthur Hill, in consideration of their becoming securities for her husband, Captain Buller, for a loan of £4000. Mr. Justice Denman said the plaintiffs were entitled to the decree asked for, and he granted an injunction restraining the defendant from parting with her property, the plaintiffs to have their costs, with the exception of Mr. Flower, who had withdrawn his claim.

The Select Committee who have been inquiring into the losses of grain-laden vessels since 1873 have agreed to their report, which recommends the adoption of certain precautions, especially that where proper provision for filling the hold by feeders is not made, not less than one-fourth of the quantity carried in the hold shall be in bags. Rules are also suggested for making the inspection more efficient, and for punishing offenders.

St. Stephen's-green, Dublin, which has been converted into a people's park by Lord Ardmillan, at a cost of £20,000, was opened on Tuesday for the free use of the citizens of Dublin. There was no inaugural ceremony, but the gates were thrown open in the morning. The new park has been handsomely embellished with shrubs, fountains, lakes, and other ornamental work, and a large number of persons availed themselves of the privilege of admission.

NOVELS.

Something of Mr. William Gilbert's matter and manner is suggested by the contents of the three volumes entitled Workers in the Dawn: by George R. Gissing (Remington and Co.); for the story is realistic rather than romantic, dealing for the most part with the seamy side, the wickedness, suffering, poverty, vice, and squalor of life, delineated with ruthless amplitude of detail, even in the most trivial matters, with uncompromising truthfulness, as regards both facts and language, and with very considerable force and appearance of earnest intention. But there is very little, if any at all, of Mr. Gilbert's peculiar humour, which, though grim and sardonic, acts as leaven upon a generally heavy mass. The tale, such as it is, is told, moreover, in a rambling, straggling fashion, branching off into various directions, so that the reader is constantly running after different personages, until attention begins to flag and interest dwindles down to the inappreciable. There is nothing left for it but to regard the whole work as a collection of very slightly connected scenes, most of them squalid or shocking scenes, real enough, no doubt, unfortunately, but of the sort upon which the mind rather shrinks from dwelling and prefers to seek relief in a factitious oblivion. Such a work may command respect and extort an admission of conscientious and successful description, though it may not possess the potent spell of continuous attractiveness or stimulate curiosity or awaken expectation. The truthfulness, too, which has been spoken of applies especially to externals; the psychological studies scarcely commend themselves to one's sense of fitness and probability. He who may be called the hero, for instance, is not likely to strike most readers as a natural character, thinking and acting in accordance with the influences operating or most calculated to operate within him, although the situations in which he is placed by being inconsistent with the idea suggested of his inner self are handled with mastery. It is to be regretted that to display that mastery it is impossible, as it would seem, to dispense with a great deal of plain, not to say coarse, language, oaths, slang, and questionable company, introduced without the least pretence of disguise or modification of nomenclature. In fact, the dancing-saloon, the refreshment-bar, the nocturnal horrors of the pavement and the dens of profligacy are simply transferred in all their hideous reality to paper. The story commences with a revolting picture of a miserable death in the midst of sordid wretchedness and ends with a melodramatic act of self-destruction. A good old man and two sweet, innocent, warm-hearted, lovable girls are almost the only characters that appear from time to time to relieve the prevalent reek of vulgar poverty and vulgar immorality. The purpose, if there be any, seems to be nothing more recondite than to convey a warning to all whom it may concern against the not very irresistible temptation of marrying a young woman off the streets in a fit of mingled sentimentality and despair. For the tale resolves itself into the biography of a young man who, throwing away many miraculous chances of becoming a successful artist and a happy husband, connects himself matrimonially with a drunken drab, constructively kills the virtuous woman he really loves, and is driven to desperation and suicide. And all this happens because he acts in a manner totally at variance with what was to be expected under the circumstances of a young man with the instincts ascribed to him. It is a very dark and painful story, written in parts with no little power. It is not very skilfully constructed, however, being diffuse and protracted to tediousness, with superfluous and repulsive details.

Bigamy dies hard. After running a long and successful course among the novelists, especially the lady novelists, it seemed in these latter days to have received its quietus; but it must have been only scotched, not killed, for it reappears with all its pristine vigour in The Fair-Haired Alda, by Florence Marryat (Samuel Tinsley and Co.)—a novel prolonged through three volumes for the purpose, principally, one would say, of inveighing against the laws of Mrs. Grundy, making insinuations against the virtue of clergymen's wives and the sobriety and charity of titled and literary ladies, and sneering at those very respectable gentlewomen who, not being really so immaculate as they are astute enough to obtain credit for being, "call it quite immoral to encourage a woman who has actually had two husbands living at the same time." Of course, there is nothing very new in all this; satire of this kind is much older even than "Tartufe," and, though it may be highly commendable, and to a certain extent efficacious, as a weapon directed against hypocrisy, it has never yet convinced people, nor would there be anything gained if it should convince people, that moral, social, and conventional regulations may be broken with perfect impunity. The novel has few graces of literary composition, and its characters exhibit no originality of conception. It depends for its interest almost entirely upon its incidents, which, if not very numerous, are at any rate wild and extravagant in a marvellous degree. There is a great deal of tragic colouring; so crude, however, as to be distressing rather than impressive. The society to which the reader is introduced is for the most part very aristocratic; and the reader who is not accustomed to move in those circles is likely to feel extremely thankful to revolve in a different sphere, if the aristocracy be really such a low set, in morals and manners and language, as the novelist represents them to be. A lower specimen of humanity than the well-born, well-connected, and wealthy father of "the fair-haired Alda" could hardly be picked up from behind any grocer's counter in the country, unless it be the noble Lord who loves "the fair-haired Alda" and pays his addresses in a coarser and more brutal fashion than would be expected of a butcher courting a barmaid. Nevertheless, there may be plenty of romantic misses who will derive much gratification and a delicious thrill of horror from a perusal of the story. A love affair between a beautiful English schoolgirl, of almost noble parentage and great expectations; a clandestine marriage, which may turn out to have been illegal; an elopement from the paternal mansion; an eventful honeymoon beneath Italian skies; a conjugal quarrel; a supposed and attempted murder; a plot between a vindictive stepmother and the supposed murderer; a bigamous marriage between the supposed widow of the supposed victim and the supposed immolator of the said victim; a sudden revival and reappearance of the supposed victim; a renewal of connubial bliss, greatly promoted by the timely decease of the supposed murderer and bigamous husband;—herein are surely the elements of an absorbing and exciting tale. Unfortunately, it is not sufficient to have the elements, if the time or the skill be wanting to turn them to satisfactory account. And, in the present instance, the workmanship is of a decidedly slovenly kind. This is especially noticeable in the description of what took place immediately after the supposed murder in Italy: the proceedings, as represented, are revolting to common-sense. The novelist is great on the subject of epileptic fits. Twice, at least, an attack of that nature is depicted with a minuteness for which it is difficult to assign any reason, unless it be a conscious, but scarcely laudable, pride in ability to put a nasty spectacle into adequately expressive words. A noble Lord has one of these fits rather early in the narrative, and we are told how "two men lifted the working, jerking figure carefully in their arms, and wiped away the bloody froth that was issuing from Lord Sidney's mouth and nose," and that "his throat and shirt-front were stained with the blood that had flown (sic) from his bitten tongue; even his grizzled whiskers were dyed red, and altogether presented an appearance that made Mr. Capel shudder." Such a picture, however truthful and graphic, is decidedly nasty; and its nastiness is its prevailing characteristic, unless the introduction of the dyed whiskers should seem to anybody to border upon comic bathos.

The author of "Old Charlton" and "Dangerfield," Mr. H. Baden Pritchard, has written another pleasant story called George Vanbrugh's Mistake, which is published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. Its real hero, as we take it, is not George Vanbrugh, a goodnatured idler with a taste for music, who dawdles half his life away in London bachelor amusements, instead of setting manfully to work and winning the hand of one of his two fair cousins. The best character in the story is Job Hollings, one that Dickens might have imagined, and which is hardly surpassed in originality and truthfulness of conception by any character that Dickens has created. Job is an elderly man, simple-hearted as Tom Pinch, who has drudged from early boyhood in the service of old Mrs. Parkle, a manufacturer of perfumed waters in Clerkenwell. He has been accustomed, however, to be sent on frequent expeditions into the Weald of Kent, for the purpose of collecting herbs and superintending a lavender garden, so that he has gained some knowledge of botany and an unsophisticated love of rural nature. The affectionate fidelity and rugged honesty of his disposition make the case of poor Job all the more touching, when he is perceived to be the hopeless victim of an attachment, which he never dreams of realising as a possible suitor, to Miss Lucy Medlicott, of Lanthradyne Manor. She is the younger of the two sisters, the elder having become Mrs. Mallelieu, either of whom might have been a suitable wife for their cousin George Vanbrugh. Enough has now been said to show the elements of his serious "Mistake." The whole story, in three volumes, has a delightful freshness and wholesomeness of feeling, which does the reader good in these times; and it is enlivened with a constant play of humour. There are two charming little boys, Ferdy and Wat, between four and six years old, whose sayings and doings are delicious to the lover of childhood. The least successful figure here portrayed is that of Mr. Edward Shorter, the Old Bailey barrister, who appears such an unprincipled snob that he could scarcely have been George Vanbrugh's personal friend. It is a gross caricature of a respectable branch of the legal profession. The French criminal adventurer and swindling imposter, calling himself M. de Belleville, is equally overdone as a portrait of social rascality; but these persons are mere foils to the innocent and honourable characters of the story. The plot is very well sustained, and might readily, if it were worth while, be converted into a little play for the stage.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality.
OETZMANN and CO.

CARPETS RETAIL AT LESS THAN CITY WHOLESALE PRICES.—OETZMANN and CO are still selling Carpets at extraordinarily low prices. O. and Co. having (at the period of greatest depression) foreseen that an advance in cost was imminent, placed large Contracts with Manufacturers of the highest repute for a supply of the Newest and Best Designs of the present season. The great advance which has since taken place in price of Wool has necessitated successive advances in the cost of Carpets. Quotations would give no adequate idea of the real Cheapness at which Oetzmann and Co. are thus enabled to sell; they therefore respectfully solicit an early visit of inspection. It will be found that they are selling All-Wool Kidderminster at 6d. to 8d., Tapestry, 7d. to 9d., and BEST FIVE-FRAME BRUSSELS at 1s. 3d. per yard below the present value. CO-OPERATIVE STORES, PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS, CLUBS, SHIPPERS, HOTEL-KEEPERS, and LARGE BUYERS will find great advantages in purchasing from this Stock.—OETZMANN and CO.

DR. DE JONGH'S
(KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM, KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR)
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be
THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

The Extra Supplement.

THE RIGHT HON. W. E. FORSTER, M.P.

The Chief Secretary for Ireland in the present Liberal Government has been compelled to perform a difficult and thankless task, the success of which seems even yet more than doubtful. It could only be from an overpowering sense of its urgent temporary necessity, and with no predilection for the abstract principle implied in this measure, that Mr. Forster and his colleagues in the Ministry brought in the bill which has just passed through the House of Commons. Many Liberal politicians in that House, and probably a large proportion of those in the House of Lords, are so much impressed with the social dangers that may be incurred by setting an example of interposing between landlord and tenant in restraint of legal process for the recovery of landed property on failure to pay the rent that they reluctantly side with the Opposition in this particular instance. We sincerely regret this divergence of opinion upon the question which is imperfectly signified by the title, "Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill;" yet we feel sure that the public character of Mr. Forster will lose nothing of the high estimation it has justly earned by former legislative and administrative services. If the Government, contrary to its recent and present expectations, should hereafter find it possible to carry Ireland through the imminent crisis of social and industrial economy without the aid of such exceptional remedies, so much the better. None will have more reason to rejoice in that happier turn of affairs than the Prime Minister and the Chief Secretary for Ireland. In any event, their future work of revising and completing, in accordance with the report of the Commission of Inquiry now appointed, the operations of the Irish Land Act of 1870, ought not to be prejudiced by their proposal this Session of a mere temporary and provisional relief to distressed tenants apparently menaced with summary eviction. The whole subject will demand a mature and impartial deliberation, in all likelihood, before the existing Parliament is dismissed; and whenever it becomes ripe for discussion, Mr. Forster's integrity of judgment may be relied upon to hold the balance equally between conflicting interests, and to maintain the due rights of property as well as those acquired by cultivating occupation.

We gladly take the opportunity to recall the memory of our readers to Mr. Forster's past acts of efficient and beneficent political activity, and to remind them of the general tenor of his career, which has been characterised by qualities of sterling worth in the sphere of English statesmanship.

William Edward Forster, born in 1818, is the only son of a man whose life ought to be held in remembrance as one of the most perfect modern examples of pure Christian virtue. It was wholly spent in teaching the gospel, practically, by constant and unwearied deeds and labours of piety and mercy, as well as by the preaching of "the Word." For the late William Forster, as a minister of the Society of Friends, without the prefix of "Rev." to his name, bore that sacred commission during fifty years. His biography, compiled in two volumes by Benjamin Seebohm, is full of interest and instruction; it entirely justifies the great esteem that is still felt, among those acquainted with that Society and its proceedings, for one so faithful, so humble-minded, and so earnest in his ceaseless apostolic toil, both of religion and philanthropy, extending over all Europe and the United States of America, as well as the British Isles. He married, in 1816, Anna Buxton, a friend and fellow-labourer of Elizabeth Fry, and cousin to the Gurneys, of Norwich; she was the eldest daughter of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton. At Bradpole, in Dorsetshire, where the Forsters resided about twenty years, the future Liberal statesman was born; and he was educated partly at Tottenham, in the Friends' school there.

No man could have a parentage more likely to produce a character of high and robust moral consistency, whether or not he continued to acknowledge the strict rules and negative scruples of the Quaker profession. The biography to which we have referred shows us less of Mr. Forster's early home than of his father's self-sacrificing diligence in the business of an evangelist, and in the anti-slavery cause; his frequent journeys all over England, Scotland, and Ireland, and to France, Germany, Italy, and Spain; and his missionary travels in America, the first extending from 1820 to 1825, the last terminating with his death, near Knoxville, Tennessee, in 1853. Though abundant details are given of the work in which he was engaged, it is not stated how often and how far his son was enabled to share the counsels and the zeal for truth and charity of this devoted Christian philanthropist. In December, 1846, during the Irish famine, he accompanied his father to that country, to administer relief from a fund raised by their religious society. They visited the same districts of Connaught and Donegal which are now again suffering extreme impoverishment. The following extracts from the elder Forster's letters to his wife may help us to feel the impressions then made upon his son's mind, of which we have been reminded by his most recent speeches in Parliament:—

"How the very poorest of the cottars are kept alive it is hard to imagine; no potatoes, no corn; or, if they had a few oats, they are in some cases nearly gone, and in others all eaten; none saved, or likely to be saved, for seed; no work—no wages—no credit; so that, even were provisions much cheaper than they are, they have not the means of buying them. Many of the small farmers are selling what little they have of live stock, and the sooner it goes the better, as it will now bring them something; but if the animals have all the meat starved off their bones they will bring them next to nothing at all. Few things touch me much more than to hear of their selling off their poultry just at the time when they might be likely to make a few pence by their eggs; and then at last their cow, and nothing, nothing left!

"Famine, in its direst forms, seems to be upon the increase from day to day; and it must increase, while the people are one by one reaching to the end of their stores of all that is eatable, and of all that they can turn into money to buy food.

"I think I have never before passed through such suffering of mind, unless I were to except those moments in which I have seemed to myself racked with unutterable intensity of feeling in thinking of the horrors of the slave trade. Sometimes I get a little relief to my agony in tears; but that is what I cannot command. I wish to be patient, and not to give up my trust in the Lord. In my most favoured moments a sense of the omniscience of God, and that His tender mercies are over all His works, helps me to stay my mind on Him, and to hope in His care and love."

William Forster then mentions, as a proof of the reality of destitution, that eight horses in the place where he was, near Castlebar, were allowed to perish for want of food. As for human beings, he goes on to say, "I hear of deaths from starvation wherever I go. I suppose them to be cases in which people are worn down by long fasting, and the eating of bad or unwholesome food, and that for days in succession, until they fall down and expire. If it be thus with them, what must be the condition of those that live, who are, day by day and almost all the day, enduring the misery, and all the sickening and the ravening of the extreme of hunger? It is this that brings the keenest anguish to my mind; it enters my very soul, and seldom leaves it through the day."

The accounts of the Irish famine of 1847 given in these volumes may be compared with separate reports, one of them by Mr. W. E. Forster, appended to the Transactions of the Central Relief Committee. Enough has been quoted to show that the present Chief Secretary for Ireland, when he went to Dublin, three months ago, and heard the representations made to him by the existing Relief Committees, was not without sad previous experience of a much worse calamity within his own personal observation.

At that time, it should be observed, his public career had scarcely begun. He had been brought up to business, and was a worsted manufacturer at Bradford, in Yorkshire, some years before the death of his father, who resided latterly at Norwich. In 1850 Mr. W. E. Forster, having quitted the formal connection with the Society of Friends, married Jane Martha, eldest daughter of the excellent Rev. Dr. Arnold, Head Master of Rugby. The first occasion upon which, to the best of our personal recollection, Mr. Forster took part in any public meeting was in the same year, 1850, at a conference of the Lancashire Public School Association at Manchester, in which Mr. Cobden and other members of the Free-Trade party took the most active interest. It grew very quickly into the National Public School Association. Now, there can be no doubt that this movement for secular schools maintained by a local rate, followed by that of the Manchester and Salford Local Education Committee, which was for assisting the National Society's, the British, and other existing schools with payments from the same source, prepared the way for Mr. Forster's Elementary Education Act of 1870. It required twenty years of discussion to enable him to settle this question—whether or not a Local School Board should be authorised to exercise its discretion, according to the circumstances of the town or parish, in either granting head-money for children taught in approved schools under Church or Dissenting patronage, or else building new schools for ordinary instruction, with or without a little Bible reading. That controversy in its time cost more speech-making, newspaper article and pamphlet writing than the Repeal of the Corn Laws, or Reform. Mr. Forster was the practical politician who finally put it to rest. He has, perhaps, not forgotten the conference of 1850 at the Manchester Mechanics' Institution.

Lancashire and the West Riding in those days were in close political and social alliance. The name of "Mr. Forster of Rawdon"—the latter being that of his place in Airedale, between Bradford and Leeds—was therefore pretty familiar to Manchester men. He was esteemed a hopeful, promising, and rising public man; but it was not till April, 1859, that he became a candidate, without success, for the representation of Leeds in the House of Commons. In February, 1861, he was elected M.P. for Bradford. His first speech was a very short one, upon the American Civil War, but that subject frequently drew from him questions and suggestions addressed to her Majesty's Government in favour of a just neutrality, and especially of prohibiting the equipment of privateers for the Southern Confederacy in British ports.

It was in February and March, 1862, in the debate upon a motion to inquire into the mode of administering the Privy Council grants for education, that Mr. Forster came forward as the Parliamentary champion of a thoroughly efficient and widely extended system. But some years were yet to elapse before he could give practical effect to his decided views upon that subject. Neither the Ministry of Earl Russell nor that of Lord Palmerston had enough strength of conviction and confidence in popular support to undertake so great a task. Mr. Forster meantime held office as Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies during less than a twelvemonth—from November, 1865, to the fall of Lord Russell's Ministry in July, 1866. It was the period at which the Colonial Office had to deal with painful and difficult questions arising from the excessive cruelties practised in the suppression of the negro revolt in Jamaica, the subsequent commission of inquiry, and the institution of a more suitable government in that island. We are not in a position to state precisely the share which may have devolved upon Mr. Forster of the official work and responsible deliberations concerning that affair; but we cannot doubt that all he did, or advised others to do, was agreeable to the sentiments of equity and humanity which belong to his character. His compassion for the negro race, though here no question of slavery presented itself to rouse his indignation, could not prompt him to go beyond a just and temperate reprobation of vindictive acts that outraged the principles of law and common justice. The arrangements finally made by the Colonial Office in Jamaica have been attended with remarkable success in the continued tranquillity and improved prosperity of the island.

At the end of 1868, when Mr. Gladstone formed his Ministry, Mr. Forster was appointed Vice-President of the Council. He did not, however, become a member of the Cabinet till some time later, when the Ministry underwent a certain modification. He lent his strenuous support to the great Irish measures of Mr. Gladstone, and his own turn arrived in February, 1870, when he brought in his Elementary Education Bill. Its provisions were substantially those which have been in actual operation during the past ten years. They were to procure an adequate supply of the means of instruction, partly by schools established on the voluntary system, more or less "denominational" or religious, but with the aid of pecuniary allowances from the public or local taxation, and partly by the schools which a Local Board might choose to erect at the cost of the ratepayers. It was left to the elected School Board of the place, that is, to "Local Option," to determine which of these different courses should be pursued. The second reading of the bill, on March 12, was vehemently opposed by the uncompromising partisans of secular education, and by a portion of the Nonconformist Dissenters; but Mr. Forster succeeded in getting it through all its stages, after twenty-one days of debating, and it became the law of the land.

In the next Session, that of 1871, Mr. Forster introduced the bill to establish Vote by Ballot at Parliamentary elections. It met with an opposition conducted in a most unusual and rather unjustifiable manner, by the contrivance of interposing more than two hundred incidental amendments, and by other kinds of obstruction, in its progress through Committee. Mr. Forster's exertions in contending against these manœuvres were an extraordinary display of patient and persevering energy; he had to speak, it is said, not less than 231 times upon various clauses or amendments. The Bill was thrown out by the Lords, but in the Session of 1872 it became law; this was Mr. Forster's second great legislative achievement.

The part which he took in the late Opposition to Lord Beaconsfield's Government, especially since the Eastern Question and the Afghan War came under discussion, has not yet passed from general remembrance. Mr. Forster, as well as Lord Hartington, thought it worth while to visit Turkey and make personal inquiries and observations there. He has also visited America, and entertains a sincere esteem and friendship for the people of the United States.

Our portrait of Mr. Forster is from a photograph by Appleton and Co., of Bradford.

NEW BOOKS.

The veteran sportsman and traveller in wild regions of Africa and America, Captain Parker Gilmore, formerly of the 1st Royals, was employed during the late Zulu War on a special errand to the Bechuana and other tribes of the far interior, where the fringe of the Kalahari desert meets the western border of the Transvaal. Readers of The Great Thirst Land, his last book of interesting adventure, published nearly a year and a half ago, will recollect that the author was in that country on a hunting expedition about 1875 or 1876; and he then became well acquainted with some of the native chiefs of the Bechuana race, the Barolongs, Bamangwatos, and Matabele, dwelling beyond the outposts of European colonisation. When the exigencies of the renewed campaign last year, after the disaster of Isandhlwana, demanded an immediate supply of native labourers for the transport service in Zululand, it was proposed that Captain Parker Gilmore should at once go out from England. He was to be sent on by the military authorities in Natal, to negotiate with those Bechuanas and other inland nations for the hire of a number of men, to act as drivers or leaders of the teams of oxen, or as porters to load and unload the commissariat waggons. It might have been supposed that the numerous Zulu population of our own province of Natal, adjacent to Zululand, would have furnished plenty of this kind of assistance, without going seven hundred miles farther to seek it among strangers. But Captain Parker Gilmore went out for the purpose, with credentials from the War Office; he made arrangements in Natal with General H. H. Clifford and Commissary-General Strickland, and started on his long journey early in April. He was occupied several months in an unsuccessful quest, and endured great hardships and perils, which are related in his new volume, On Duty: A Ride through Hostile Africa, now published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall. The mode of travelling which he adopted was not so tedious as that of the ordinary bullock-waggon. He rode on horseback, leading another horse, and changed his mount each time that he off-saddled at a halt; while his Hottentot servant, the "after-rider," followed with another pair of horses. At one time, indeed, he got a light cart with a pair of horses to drive, but was soon obliged to give it up. He could not, therefore, take with him any travelling comforts, such as cooking apparatus or bedding, only a couple of blankets, his rifle, revolver, and ammunition; and he pushed on at his best speed, grudging the delay of an hour. In this manner, Captain Parker Gilmore made his way from Natal, across the Orange River Free State and the Transvaal, to Bechuana Land, with scanty leisure to look about him, and with no opportunity of sport; but his experiences are worth reading, as they differ somewhat from those usually met with "on trek." The reader can easily follow his course on any good map of South Africa, but must first be warned that the names of places are queerly misprinted in this volume; for example, the well-known Dutch town of Potchefstrom, in the Transvaal, figures as "Porchesbroom" and "Pourchestroom." The author's political opinions concerning the annexation of the Transvaal can hardly be considered of much weight, though he sojourned in the country shortly before that event. It is utterly absurd to fancy that there was ever the slightest danger of Secocoeni or any other Kaffirs attacking the central and more settled districts of the Transvaal, after the breakdown of President Burgers' Government in 1876. None of the Boer population had for a moment the slightest fear of such a calamity; and there was not the least necessity, on their behalf, for the arbitrary intervention of Sir Theophilus Shepstone; while the Zulus would have readily obeyed, as they always did, the pacific counsels of Sir Henry Bulwer. As for Secocoeni, he was compelled to sue for peace of the Boers. We are content, however, to find abundance of narrative entertainment, though not much sound political information, in Captain Parker Gilmore's book. He was treated by the Boers, in most instances, with the greatest incivility and even hostility, for they regarded him as an emissary of the British Government. They would not give him shelter or food, or even a drink of water, and he was once actually shot at by a man who looked like a Boer. It seemed as though the recent disaster to the British arms at Isandhlwana had aroused in the minds of the Dutch farmers an expectation of speedily recovering their independence, and expelling the foreign intruders. The same feeling apparently existed among the Bechuana chiefs on the western borders, and they all refused to let Captain Parker Gilmore engage the services of any of their people for the distant war in Zululand. We cannot but think that they acted wisely, and that the errand upon which he was sent to them was unreasonable and impracticable; but not more so than many other proceedings of our War Department, and of our Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, throughout that mismanaged affair. It is, however, a slight compensation that we have Captain Parker Gilmore's interesting book to read. He has added to our store of South African descriptive anecdotes those of his visits to Mr. Jansen, the good Danish missionary at Linekani; to Hashesheba, the kindly chief of Kania; to Gopani and E'Calapin, rival pretenders to tribal rule; to Monsewah, the Barolong chief, at Lotligani; to Sycheley, usually written "Se-che-le," the most powerful monarch of these parts; and to a friendly old fellow, Matchaping, some distance northward, beyond whose residence the author did not go this time. We should have liked to hear again of Bamangwato and Soochong, and of that true native gentleman, Kama, whose portrait is so agreeably drawn in "The Great Thirst Land." But the author found it hopeless to persist, against many adverse circumstances, in his mission to the native potentates; and it was all he could do to make good his own return in safety. Often destitute of the necessaries of life, sometimes left quite alone on his way through the pathless desert, when the Hottentot had run off in terror, and a black boy engaged to attend him had died of some disease, Captain Parker Gilmore wandered over that inhospitable country, suffering repeated attacks of fever, and losing strength daily, while his horses were also nearly worn out. It seems a special mercy that he escaped from that desolate and perilous situation, and has returned to England to give us another acceptable book of South African adventure.

Cremorne Gardens, a bun-house, a steam-boat pier, and "a Royal hospital for emerited soldiers," with the figure of Mr. Thomas Carlyle perambulating the neighbourhood, will probably form the principal objects in the picture suggested to the majority of the present generation by a cursory mention of Chelsea; but a perusal of the two volumes entitled The Village of Palaces, by the Rev. A. G. L'Estrange (Hurst and Blackett), two volumes containing some very interesting "chronicles of Chelsea," will quickly cause that somewhat dreary picture to be replaced by another, a brighter, and, given the enchantment effected by distance, a far pleasanter. Few places, indeed, have undergone so much transformation, not exactly for the better, as Chelsea. It is for the better, no doubt, that Cremorne Gardens have disappeared, and perhaps there are few people who will bewail the disappearance, if indeed they have altogether disappeared, of the bun-house and the bun, a dainty, to speak from childish recollection, of a peculiar shape, sinuously put together, of treacly and unwholesome materials, to judge from the exterior. To regard Chelsea as a "village of palaces" may, at the present day, require a strong effort of imagination; but the contents of the two volumes under consideration are sufficient to justify the appellation. The reader will learn that "Chelsea Palace, or Place, became the jointure house of Katherine Parr, and after the King's death she continued to live there," and there it was that Katherine's husband, the godless Lord Admiral Seymour, played those unseemly pranks with her who was one day to be "good Queen Bess," which have lately been the subject of remark in an excellent little work entitled "The Youth of Queen Elizabeth." The reader will learn also that in the very early days of yore there were at one and the same time "five large mansions at Chelsea—viz., the Palace, the Manor House, the house of Sir T. More, enlarged or rebuilt by Lord Salisbury, Stanley House, and Shrewsbury House"—that more were built afterwards, and that even now there are "persons of note" residing at Chelsea, including Lord Cadogan, who is the Lord of the Manor, Sir Robert Collier, Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Carlyle, Lord Wentworth, and Sir Percy Shelley, that "the healthfulness and brightness of the suburb is beginning to be again recognised, and that, the nuisance of Cremorne having been removed, "there is an intention of continuing these large buildings along the river-side, and of thus giving Chelsea a right to resume her ancient title." Whether the author be right or not in stating that there is nothing remaining of "Don Saltero's" is a matter of little consequence; the reader, whether old enough and experienced enough to have some faint personal recollection of the place, or too young, if not too incurious, to have ever set foot in it, will, at any rate, find an entertaining account of the "Don" and his establishment. He was Sir Hans Sloane's Irish servant, Salter, who, for some reason or other, or, more probably, for several reasons combined, "changed his name to Don Saltero," when he opened "the celebrated establishment which united the attractions of both barber's shop and coffee-house." The reader will also find a short notice of Doggett and the "coat and badge" to be rowed for by young watermen; and will discover, in fact, that, whatever may have been omitted from the volumes, there is a wonderful amount of information and entertainment to be derived from the "Chronicles of Chelsea." Some readers, however, may think that a disproportionately large number of pages are occupied by what has but a very remote connection with the history of the waterside suburb, so that the reproach of sheer book-making may occasionally be justified. It is always difficult, however, to turn off the tap of gossip, when the stream has once begun to flow. The volumes are provided with an index, a provision of the greatest service in the case of such a work, which is better adapted for desultory than continuous reading.

Paradoxical titles are often amusing; and it is impossible to repress a smile at the announcement that the main object attempted in Six Life Studies of Famous Women, by M. Betham-Edwards (Griffith and Farran) is to popularise the memories of certain personages who, however remarkable they were, and however full of charm and interest their careers may have been, cannot be said to have hitherto occupied so prominent a place in the public mind as to entitle them to be called famous. Fernan Caballero, the Spanish novelist, "by birth a German, and by marriage connected with all the bluest blood in Spain," no doubt has a "reputation" which "may be called European," but it is a reputation which is scarcely so general as to amount to what is commonly understood by fame, though certainly quite sufficient to justify a memoir of her, especially in these days of almost universal biography. A similar remark applies to Alexandrina Tinné, the intrepid African explorer, whose name would run great risks of being omitted by nine tenths of the candidates at a competitive examination who should be required to draw up a list of the famous women of the world. Of Caroline Herschel, "who minded the stars" for her more celebrated brother, the great astronomer, a tolerably complete memoir was published some four years ago; and yet it is doubtful whether even she attained to the rank of the properly called famous. Of Madame Pape-Carpantier, the "educational reformer," it is doubtful whether ordinary readers have ever heard so much as a bare mention. The same assertion may be hazarded in respect of Mrs. Elizabeth Carter, so far as the name is descriptive of a certain lady who was a great Greek scholar. Lastly, Matilda Betham, though she "attempted and achieved much more than was usual" in her day, though she distinguished herself in several ways, is rather to be classed among those who have been associated with the famous—with the Coleridges, the Lambs, the Southeys—than among those who have won a place for themselves upon the scroll of fame. Let us not dispute about terms and titles, however. Such women, if they cannot be correctly written down famous, deserve a wider reputation and to have the story of their lives better known than heretofore; and with that commendable view these six biographical sketches have been published. For the young particularly the volume is intended; and, bearing that in mind, one cannot but endorse the "opinion that a brief biography, to be read at a sitting without fatigue, yet so comprehensive as to embrace the leading features of life and character, is one of the most attractive forms of popular literature." And it may be added that, where the young are concerned, the impression produced, which in the present instance cannot fail to be beneficial, varies almost directly as the attractiveness. It should be stated, further, that a portrait of each of the "famous women," or of the women who have not hitherto been so famous as they deserved to be, precedes each biographical sketch, a concession judiciously and considerately made to that natural curiosity which prompts mankind, especially where womankind is concerned, to "wonder what the creature was like."

Illustrations and maps, invested with a peculiar interest in many cases, are scattered over the pages of The Great Navigators of the Eighteenth Century, by Jules Verne (Sampson Low and Co.), with a liberality bordering upon profusion. The portly volume, the contents whereof have been translated by somebody unknown, or at any rate unproclaimed, from the French, is the second of three volumes projected under the general title of "Celebrated Travels and Travellers," and is shortly to be followed by the third and last. In this great work the author, quitting the arena in which he has successfully disputed the supremacy with the famous Baron Munchausen, appears in his sober senses as a serious narrator, though he deals with facts which are scarcely less marvellous than his own stupendous fiction. He has already given us "The Exploration of the World" in his first volume, so far as that extensive subject has been investigated from the earliest times up to the end of the seventeenth century; and we have now "The Great Navigators of the Eighteenth Century," to be succeeded, in due course, by "The Great Explorers and Travellers of the Nineteenth Century," the account of whom will have to be presented in very succinct form, if a single volume, however stout and closely printed, is to include anything like the whole number of noteworthy personages and achievements. At present, however, let attention be confined to the particular volume under consideration, a volume which English readers, when they observe how large a portion of it is devoted to the exploits of the gallant Captain Cook, will be proudly eager to peruse, however familiar they may be already with the details of that noble and melancholy story. This is the arrangement of the volume: two distinct parts, one of five chapters and the other of four. The five chapters of the first part are occupied, respectively, with some observations concerning astronomers and cartographers, and voyages undertaken in the eighteenth century, with notices of Captain Cook's predecessors, and with an abridged narrative of Captain Cook's three expeditions. The four chapters of the second part deal, respectively, with French navigators, with African explorers, French and others, with the subject of Asia and its inhabitants, especially China and the Chinese, and with the discoveries of Humboldt and others in the regions of the two Americas. How interesting such a volume must be is self-evident; and what rare judgment was required to extract from the variety of materials and deposit in a comparatively small receptacle the quintessence of the interest is equally self-evident. Suffice it to say that M. Jules Verne, if anybody, might be expected to display that rare judgment; and that in his volume, if anywhere, a reader may reasonably expect to find the largest possible amount of information and entertainment within the smallest possible, though that may not be an absolutely small, compass.

Assurance of instruction and amusement to come from a perusal of Portugal; Old and New, by Oswald Crawfurd (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) will be felt by all who have read "Latouche's Travels in Portugal," and observe on the title-page of the new work the announcement that the author is the same in both cases. And the assurance will be justified. An index would have been an advantage; but, in the absence of that, one may be thankful for an excellent map. The work is not, and was never intended to be, so exhaustive as its title might lead persons of great expectations to anticipate. It was impossible, indeed, to exhaust Portugal in a single volume, if that volume were to be of manageable size; but there is enough both of antiquity and of modernity to exonerate the author from a charge of misdescription. His book, as he truly says, "is neither a book of history, nor of criticism, nor of pure description; nor an antiquarian work, nor a social nor a statistical one, nor a book of travel; but it is a medley of all those things." Moreover, it is embellished and illumined by means of illustrations. Let it be added that the author is the English Consul at Oporto, and, if memory may be trusted, has filled that office for some years, so that he may be considered to write with unusual knowledge and weight. He leads off with some remarks concerning "the rise of Portugal," and follows these up with an account of King Affonso Enriquez, before whom, he says, "there was no Portugal at all," but since whom, and because of whom, "there has been in this corner of Europe an enduring kingdom, which, in spite of its size, is in the true sense of the word a great kingdom." He then proceeds to offer some observations upon the Portuguese language and literature, confining his attention chiefly to the works of the two poets Miranda and Ferreira, concluding with a bare mention of Camoens, in whom the "Augustan age" of Portugal "culminated." After this, he plunges into the subject of "Modern Portugal," giving more than a glimpse of its "country life and sport," and appealing to the experience of "most travellers to Portugal" as to whether "they have not heard at their very first dinner" that "Portugal is a country a hundred and fifty years behind the rest of the world." He has himself "heard and read this exact chronological comparison very often;" and he declares that "it is a foolish and ignorant error." His readers, however, are likely to think that, in spite of his vindication, the error is only the comparatively venial one of exaggeration, and will not consent to deduct more than a century. There is a very important chapter devoted to the question of wine, and especially port wine; and this chapter will, no doubt, be eagerly perused and will well repay perusal. The chapter concerning Madeira as a resort for invalids will run the other very hard for superiority in point of interest; and, to tell the truth, there is hardly a page in the book which is not worth reading. The author delivers his opinions with an air of dictation, due possibly to his official position, and he makes assertions roundly, perhaps a little too roundly. At page 363, for instance, he says without any qualification: "The ancient Romans knew not of any night-sung passion-song." He is writing, of course, of the "serenade;" and it is probable that he would not have expressed himself with so much confidence, if he had remembered his Horace, especially the ode to Asterie, wherein there is an allusion to something very like a serenade, although the likeness may not be sufficient to establish a certainty. The author's style is that of a scholarly, accomplished writer, and he indulges in a vein of somewhat caustic but by no means ill-natured pleasantry.

THE BELGIAN INDEPENDENCE FESTIVAL.

The celebration, at Brussels, of the Jubilee or fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of Belgian national independence, has been mentioned in our Journal. We give an Illustration of one of its chief incidents, the unveiling of the monument of Leopold I. in the new public park at Laeken. The monument is the result of a national subscription which was opened after the death of Leopold I. It is situated in the centre of the park, which was prepared specially for its reception, and is approached by an avenue from the monumental church at Laeken. Situated on a plateau eighty mètres in diameter, at a considerable elevation, it commands a view over the capital and its neighbourhood. The statue is of white marble, 5·50 mètres in height, and is the work of the sculptor M. Geefs. The late King is represented in the uniform of a Belgian General, over which is worn the Royal mantle, which reaches to the ground. In rear of the monument is an open gallery, above the columns of which allegorical statues of the nine provinces are placed, under canopies surmounted by lions holding the armorial escutcheons of the nine provinces. The cella is surmounted by an open storey, from which arises the pyramidal spire, 20·80 mètres in height. The spire is surmounted by a metal globe, on which is placed a wrought copper statue, representing the Genius of Belgium holding in one hand a civic crown and in the other the flag of Belgium. The architecture of the monument is in the fourteenth century style, while the statues are of modern character. The cost of the monument, which is the work of the architect M. de Curte, is about 700,000f. On the pedestal of the statue are the inscriptions, in French and in Flemish, "To Leopold I. Grateful Belgium," and "Monument erected by national subscription."

The ceremony of inaugurating this monument was performed, on Wednesday week, by King Leopold II., accompanied by the Queen, the Count and the Countess of Flanders, with their three children, and by Princess Stephanie and her betrothed, Archduke Rodolf, Imperial Crown Prince of Austria. Addresses were delivered upon this occasion by the Minister of the Interior, the Burgomaster, and by the Governor of Brabant. A grand cantata was sung, with orchestral accompaniment. The weather was fine, and the proceedings went off with great success. Another series of Belgian national fêtes will take place about a fortnight hence.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.

The Congress of the Royal Archæological Institute is held this week at Lincoln. Thursday was devoted to an inspection of the Cathedral, which is the subject of our Illustration.

The Episcopal See of Lincoln was founded by William the Conqueror, to supersede the ancient Saxon Bishopric of Dorchester, which is not the town of Dorchester in Dorsetshire, but a much smaller place of that name in Oxfordshire. Its diocese had formerly extended over great part of Mercia, or the Midland Shires. But Lincoln was a royal fortress, and was of too much importance always to remain in ecclesiastical subordination. It became, indeed, the seat of a Bishop whose rule extended far beyond the bounds of Lincolnshire. The present dioceses of Oxford and Peterborough were taken out of the diocese of Lincoln by Henry VIII., and that of Lichfield at another period.

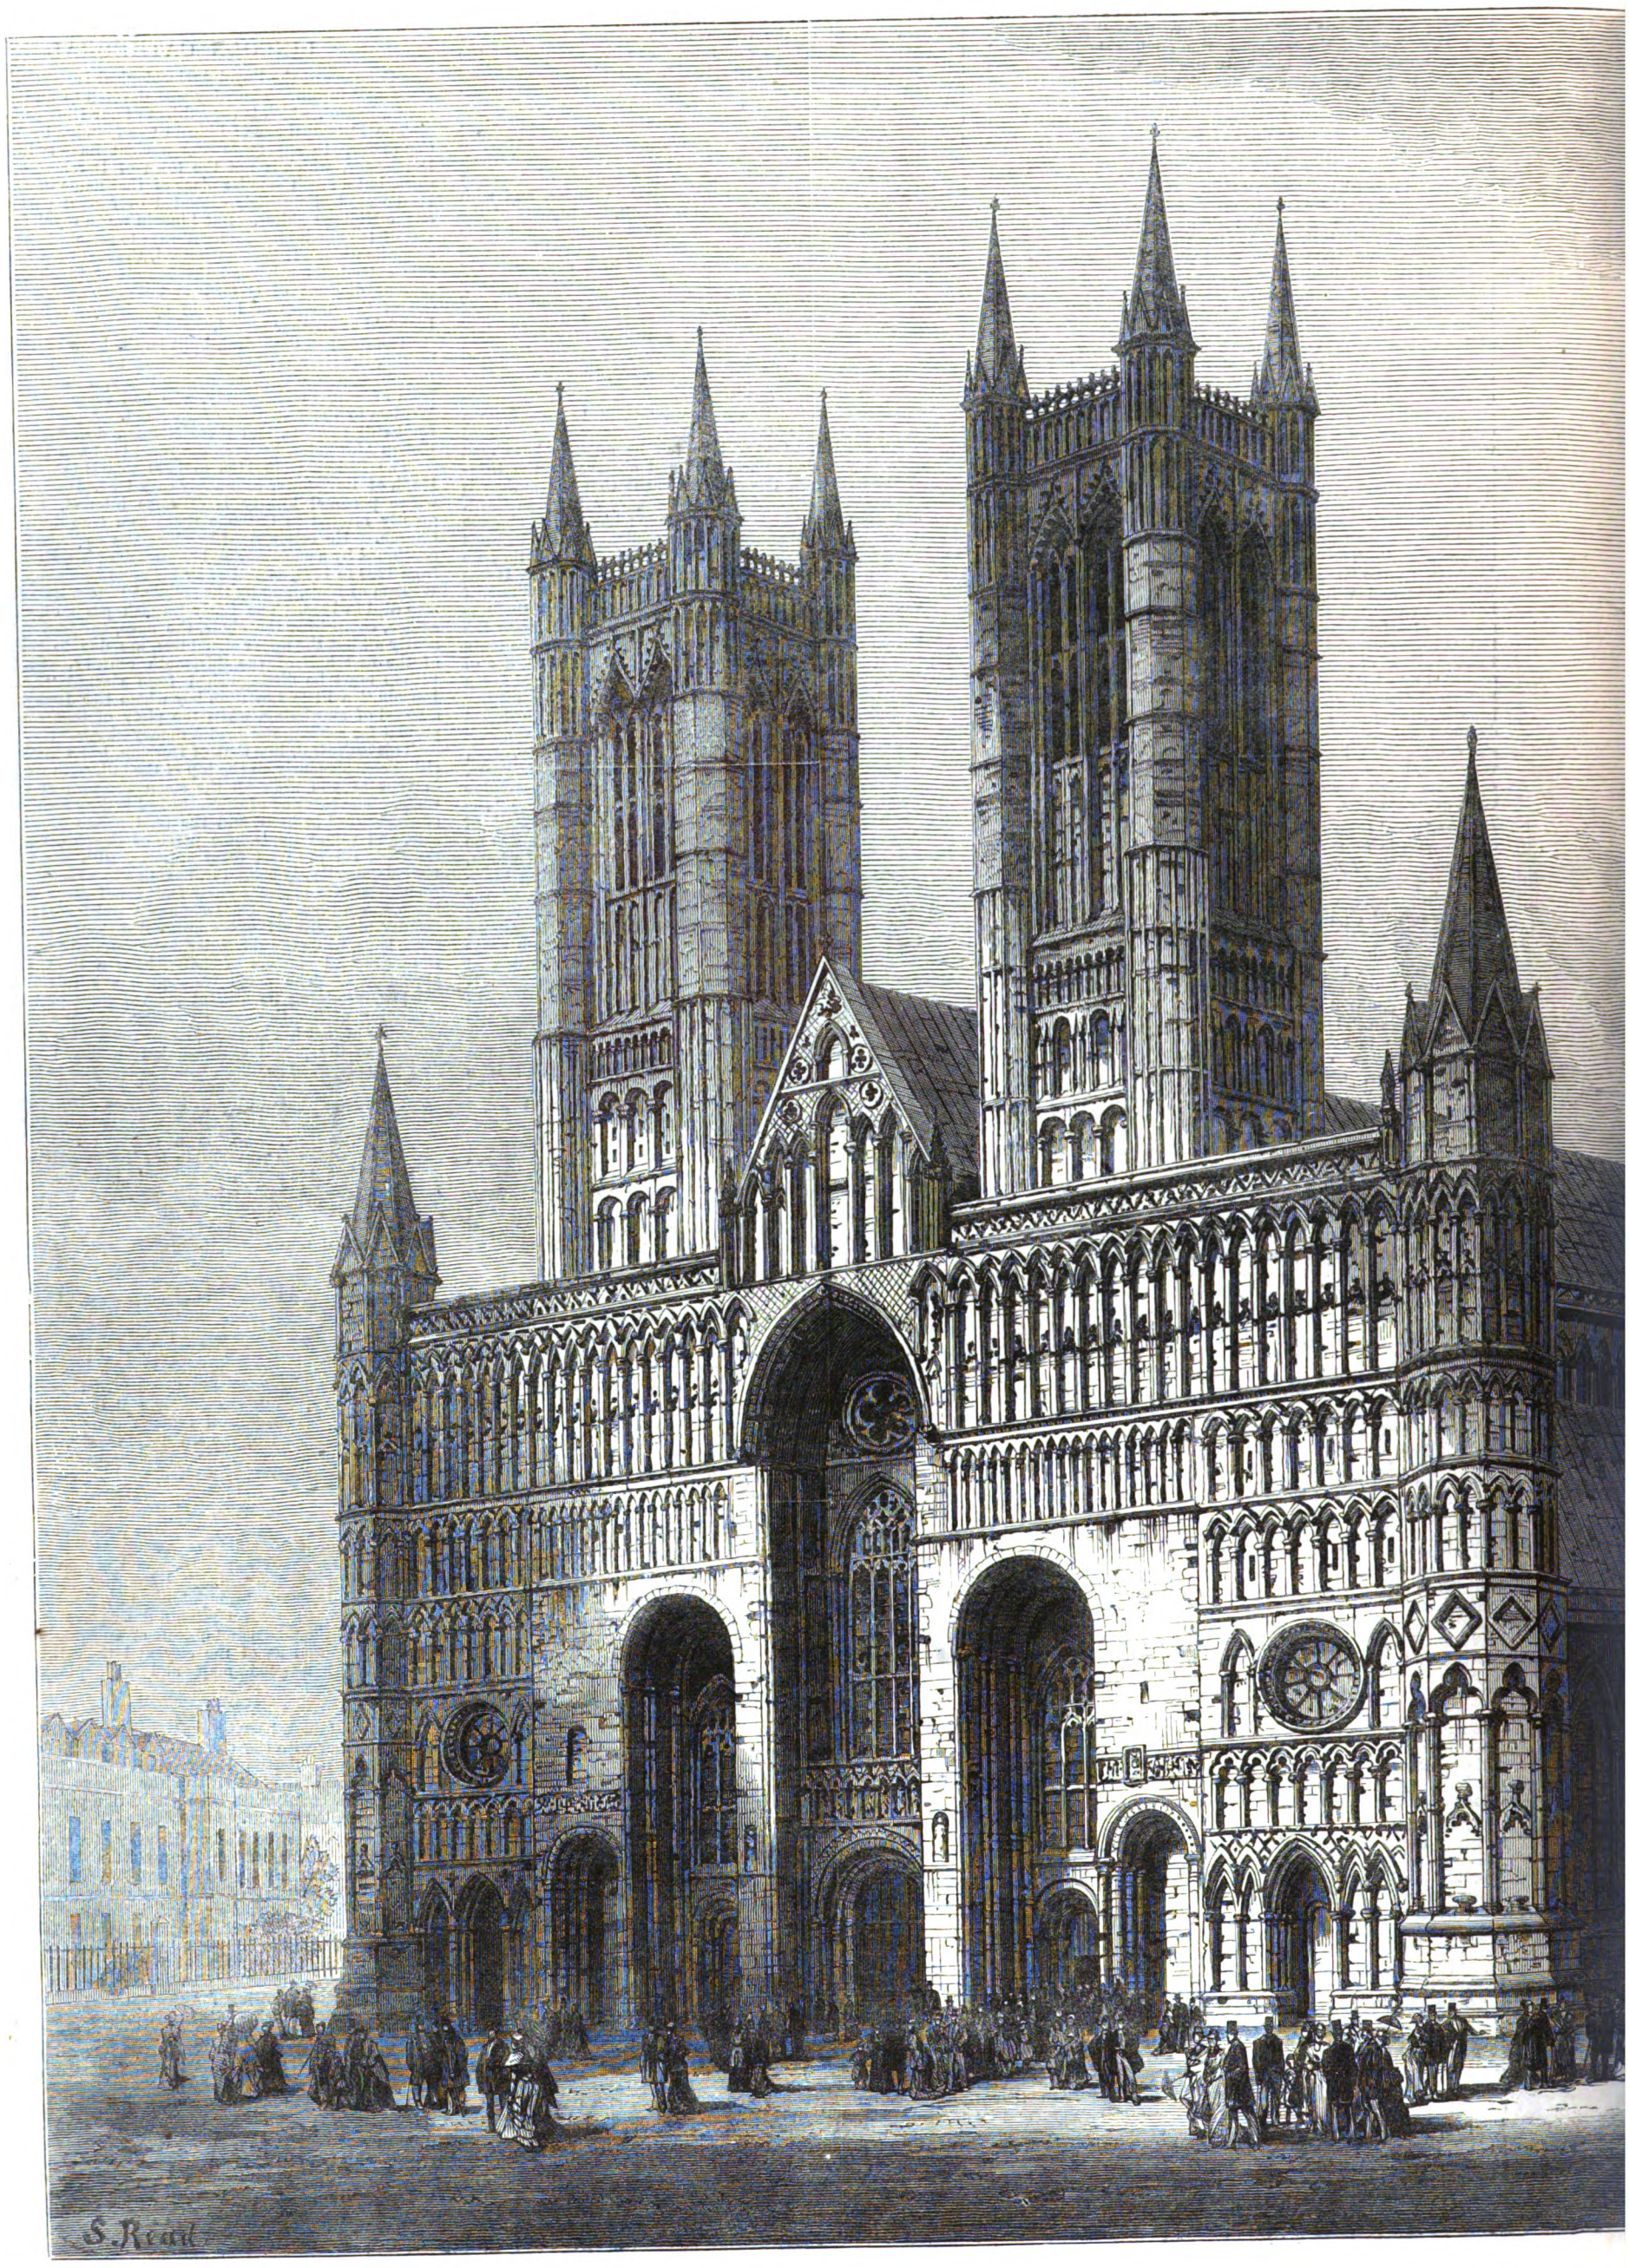
The Norman Cathedral, built on the brow of the hill overlooking the river Witham and the vast lowland plain towards Boston, was the work of Bishop Rémy, a Benedictine monk from Fécamp in Normandy, who had come over with Duke William to the Conquest of England. A portion of its west front still remains, and three Norman doorways, ascribed to Bishop Alexander, between the years 1123 and 1148.

The Bishop from 1186 to 1200 was Hugh of Avalon, or Hugh of Burgundy, commonly called St. Hugh of Lincoln, whose personal history is of some interest, and who was greatly revered in Catholic times as a true defender of the Church. He commenced building the cathedral, which was continued by a successor and namesake of his, Hugh of Wells, from 1209 to 1235, as well as by his more immediate successor, William of Blois, and by the eminent Bishop Robert Grostête, who died in 1253. The Early English parts of the existing edifice, comprising the choir, the nave, the transepts, indeed nearly all but the upper structures, are due to these prelates of the first half of the thirteenth century. St. Hugh the Bishop must be distinguished from a small "St. Hugh of Lincoln," a little Christian boy whom the Jews were falsely accused of murdering, when the piety of that age sought a pretext for robbing the Jewish money-chests.

This cathedral, like that of Durham, has a noble situation, rising conspicuously on the top of the hill, with its towers full in view as you walk up the steep High-street towards the Close. The east end of the cathedral is next seen, with a plot of greensward in front, and the road passes along the south side, and round the Galilee porch at the corner of the great transept, till the west front appears, with the two western towers immediately behind it, having a most imposing effect.

The interior presents many features of great architectural interest and beauty. The nave has a width of 42 ft., and its slender piers are set at an unusual distance apart, forming seven bays, while the side aisles, with trefoiled arches springing from graceful clusters of shafts, have a light and elegant appearance. The north transept has a splendid circular window, retaining its ancient stained glass, probably of the beginning of the thirteenth century, and one of the finest examples of that kind. In the south transept is a fine circular window of the period of Decorated Gothic, a hundred and fifty years later. The choir, which is believed to be the actual work of St. Hugh of Lincoln, may be compared with the Presbytery or "Angel Choir," built from 1270 to 1282, in the Decorated style, and containing many sculptured figures of angels. Here, also, is a tomb, called the Easter Sepulchre, which is remarkable for its artistic design and ornament, but it is not certainly known to whom this sepulchre belongs. The tomb of Catherine Swinford, Duchess of Lancaster, the last wife of John of Gaunt, and that of her daughter, are on the south side of the choir.

The central tower of Lincoln Cathedral, when you have ascended to the summit, commands a most extensive prospect of the neighbouring country towards the sea, or rather the Wash, looking in the direction of south-east. In this tower is hung the famous bell called great Tom of Lincoln, which was first cast in 1610, and was recast in 1835. Its weight is 5 tons 8 cwt., and its diameter measures 6 ft. 10½ in. at the mouth, but it is not the largest of English bells.



The Royal Archæological Institute, after the opening meeting on Tuesday, when the Mayor and Corporation gave it welcome, and the Bishop of Lincoln delivered an address, made an examination of the old Roman walls, the city gates, and ancient parts of the castle. Excursions to Gainsborough, Stow, Grantham, Sleaford, Heckington, Boston, Tattershall, Southwell, Newark, Hawton, Welbourne, Leadenham, Navenby, Brant Broughton, and Somerton Castle have been arranged. The Bishop also received the president and members of the Institute at Riseholm Palace.

We recommend, for purchase and use on this occasion, "The Lincoln Pocket Guide," by Sir C. H. J. Anderson, Bart., which has just been published by Mr. E. Stanford, of Charing-cross. It gives a minute descriptive and historical account of all the places and objects of antiquarian interest in the county, as well as of the city and the cathedral; and is furnished with a good map, and with plans and other engravings.

A massive tablet, bearing the names of nineteen Princes of Wales, together with the dates of their birth, erected at the cost of Mr. R. Sorton Parry, who was High Sheriff of Carnarvonshire at the last visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the county, has been placed in a prominent part of the old castle, Carnarvon.

The Lord Mayor presided on Monday at a meeting, held at the Mansion House, of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund. Alderman Sir Sydney Waterlow, M.P., moved the adoption of the report of the Committee of Distribution, which stated that this year's collections amounted to £29,000. The committee recommended the payment of £26,646 to eighty hospitals, and £2443 to forty-six dispensaries, and the setting aside of £300 for the purchase of surgical appliances during the next twelve months. In their awards the committee made the following for general hospitals:—Charing-cross, £641; French, £186; German, £700; Great Northern, £221; King's College, £1458; London, £2916; Metropolitan Free, £233; Poplar, £303; Royal Free, £758; St. George's, £1633; St. John and St. Elizabeth, £116; St. Mary's, £991; Seamen's, £816; the Middlesex, £1458; University College, £875; West London, £256; Westminster, £816. Attention was called to the Eastbourne Convalescent Hospital, where, it was stated, some of the patients had been advised to go to confession, and had received manuals of instruction which informed them that attendance at a Dissenting place of worship was a "sin against God Almighty." The grant of £525 to that hospital was withheld until an inquiry had been made. With this exception, the report and recommendation of the Distribution Committee were passed.

FOLKLORE OF AUGUST.

The first of this month is popularly called the Gule of August, or Lammas Day—the latter word, according to some, being a corruption of Loaf Mass; as our ancestors made an offering of bread from new wheat on this day. Others affirm that it is derived from lamb-masse, because the tenants, who held lands under the Cathedral Church of York, were bound by their tenure to bring a live lamb into the church at high mass. It was once customary in England to give money to servants on Lammas Day to buy gloves, hence the term "Glove-silver." In London on this day "Doggett's Coat and Silver Badge" are rowed for; and at Exeter, from time immemorial, Lammas Fair has been opened, the charter of which is perpetuated by a glove of immense size, stuffed, and carried through the city on a long pole decorated with flowers. An old piece of weather-wisdom tells us that "After Lammas, corn ripens as much by night as by day."

Hunting the ram was an ancient custom observed at Eton on Aug. 2; and on the Saturday after Lammas Day the inhabitants of Ripon, in Yorkshire, celebrated the festival of their patron, St. Wilfrid, by going out to meet his effigy, which was brought into the town with much grotesque ceremony.

On Aug. 4 a silver arrow was formerly shot for by the scholars of Harrow School, the competitors being arrayed in fancy dresses, made of red or green satin. The winner was led from the butts to the town at the head of a procession of boys, carrying and waving the silver arrow.

St. Laurence's Day (10th) is an important day on the Continent, for, according to a popular proverb, "if it is fine on St. Laurence's Day and the Day of Assumption, there will be a good vintage." A Basque adage says that, "After St. Laurence, on one day comes rain, on the next mildew." The Assumption of the Virgin Mary (15th) was formerly a great festival, when it was customary to implore blessings upon herbs, plants, roots, and fruit, bundles of which were taken to the church and consecrated as charms against hurtful things. In Germany this festival is known as "Our Lady's Cabbage Feast," because cabbages or ears of corn are blessed; and there is a notion that if it rain on this day, Cabbage Feast brings salt into the apples. According to the "Husbandman's Practice," "if the sun do shine on this festival, that is a good token, and especially for wind."

St. Roche's Day (16th) was in days gone celebrated as "the great August festival of the country," and was regarded as a general harvest-home. In the churchwarden's accounts of St. Michael, York, 1518, we find a charge "for writing of St. Royke masse, 9d." This saint is said to have devoted himself entirely to the sick; and the phrase as "sound as a roach" is thought by some to have been derived from the legends associated with him. The superstitious believed that by praying to this saint they would be protected from any pestilence. St. Bartholomew's Day (24th) is said to bring the cold dew, because the nights now begin to grow chilly. There are numerous weather proverbs connected with this festival. According to one we are told that—

> All the tears St. Swithin can cry
> St. Bartholomew's dusty mantle wipes away,

Another well-known rhyme tells us

> If Bartlemy's Day be fair and clear
> We may hope for a prosperous autumn that year.

It appears that in days gone by rain on this festival was believed to foretell rain for the ensuing forty days. And from the "Shepherd's Kalendar" we learn that if St. Bartholomew's Day "be misty, the morning beginning with a hoar frost, the cold weather will soon come and a hard winter." At Croyland Abbey it was customary until the time of Edward the Fourth to give little knives to all comers on St. Bartholomew's Day, in allusion to the knife with which this apostle is said to have been flayed alive. Formerly, upon the eve of St. Bartholomew, the scholars of the London grammar schools were accustomed to assemble in the churchyard of St. Bartholomew, the Priory in Smithfield, where, "upon a bank boarded about under a tree," they had disputations in grammar and logic, and "in the end the best opposers and answerers had rewards which made both good schoolmasters and good scholars to prepare themselves for the obtaining of the garland." In the early part of the last century this practice was not quite extinct in Yorkshire—the disputations being carried on at Lee Fair early in September. On the anniversary of St. Bartholomew's Day the great Smithfield fair took place. When printing-offices had only paper windows these used to be renewed on St. Bartholomew's Day.

St. Lissander's Day (26th) is said by the peasantry in Italy to be always wet, hence this saint is popularly called "The Waterer, or Water-Carrier." Some years ago the members of the Corporation of London went up the Thames annually in decorated barges for the purpose of counting and "nicking" their swans. This yearly ceremony was incorrectly called "Swan-hopping"—the correct designation being "Swan-upping," from the swans being taken up and nicked. Thus, a swan with two nicks indicated that he had been taken up twice. In the accounts of the Vintner's Company we find the following entry:—"Money payed for expence for uppyng of swanes, iiijs."

There are numerous items of curious weather-lore associated with this month. Thus it is said that—

> Dry August and warm
> Doth harvest no harm.

They think differently on this point in the south of Europe. An Italian proverb says that "A wet August never brings death;" and a Spanish one, "When it rains in August, it rains honey and wine." Thunder is, according to the "Book of Knowledge," ominous, signifying "the same year sorrow, wailing of many; for many shall be sick." Of the many rhymes which relate to the harvest and vintage, we may quote the following:—"August bears the burden, and September the fruit;" and "August ripens, September gathers in." On the Continent the peasantry say, "August fills the kitchen, and September the cellar." By our Saxon forefathers August was called "Wead-monat-wead," signifying a covering, which expressed the beauteous clothing of the fields about harvest-time.

A waterspout rose out of the Atlantic near the mouth of the Bristol Channel yesterday week. It swept upwards to the peninsula of Gower, and poured itself upon the hills near Crfn Bryn.

The London Clothworkers' Company have, says the Bristol Times, promised £300 a year towards the maintenance of the Bristol University College.—The committee of the British and Foreign School Society have received fifty guineas from the Company of Clothworkers, voted by the company in recognition of the extraordinary expenses incurred in the provision of a laboratory and other facilities for scientific instruction which the company consider to be most important for the teachers trained at the Borough-road College, as auxiliary to the movement in favour of technical education.

FINE ARTS.

The inaugural (spring) exhibition of the recently-formed Yorkshire Fine Art Society, which opened about two months back in the new Athenæum Buildings, Leeds, has, we understand, proved fairly successful, and the proceeds will probably be as large as those from any other first exhibition of similar character in the provinces. A second (autumn) exhibition, to consist exclusively of artists' contributions, is announced to open on Sept. 13 next, and oil pictures, drawings (of all kinds and etchings), or sculpture intended for this exhibition will be received from the 10th to the 20th proximo. Further particulars may be had of the hon. secs., Messrs. J. J. Wilson and J. W. Davis, at the gallery, Leeds, or of Mr. J. Bourlet, 17, Nassau-street, Middlesex Hospital. The Leeds exhibition may thus be considered as successfully established, and should be second to none but of London. Probably in no part of the country is there a greater number of art lovers and picture buyers than in Leeds and the populous towns within a radius of a few miles around it. The other provincial exhibitions of longer standing at Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, &c., receive works for their usual autumnal shows at about the same period.

Messrs. Christie announce an important sale—viz., that of the whole of the collections of pictures, engravings, and books at Wimpole Hall, belonging to the Earl of Hardwicke. The pictures will be disposed of on Aug. 7; they include family portraits and many good works by the old masters. Among the former are Reynolds's "Master P. Yorke with a Robin," one of the same master's portraits of the Marquis of Rockingham, others of the second Earl of Hardwicke, the Hon. John Yorke, and Archbishop Secker. Besides these, are works by Zucchero, Ravestyn, Van Dyck, Dobson, Walker, Van Somer, Jansen, Oldstone, Hogarth, Gainsborough, &c. The engravings will be sold on Aug. 9 and 10; the books on the following three days.

The Scotsman states that it has been decided to build an addition to Rosslyn Chapel, rising to about two thirds the height of the rood opening, and having its roof terminating behind the rood beam. The new structure is to be carefully distinguished in point of style from the original. Mr. Andrew Kerr is the architect.

We have received a large portrait of the Bishop of Lincoln, as he appeared at the visitation held last year in Lincoln Cathedral, lithographed by Messrs. Maclure and Macdonald, from a painting by the Rev. J. Mansell.

The exhibition of the Society of British Artists in Suffolk-street will be open free on Bank Holiday.

The last number of the American Art Review sustains its high character. It contains some first-rate etchings, besides other illustrations, and Mr. Linton continues his history of wood engraving in America.

A landslip at Passo Martino, near Catania, is said to have brought to light a large number of ancient tombs and artistic objects believed to belong to the cemetery of Sineatus, a town on the river Simeathus, mentioned by Pliny.

AGRICULTURE.

The report of Mr. Clare Sewell Read and Mr. A. Pell, M.P., the Commissioners appointed to visit Canada and the United States to inquire into the state of agriculture in those countries, has been published. The opinion formed by these well-known agriculturists is that America is, after all, no paradise, and that in the contest for agricultural supremacy, while fresh, unexhausted soil, a level surface, and the absence of stones are highly favourable for the profitable use of modern machinery, and the manufacture of grain by a scourging course of cropping, still drawbacks exist which tell in favour of the old country. These drawbacks are:—Severe winters, dangerous droughts, injurious insects, and, on the prairie land, in the absence of lakes, a short supply of good water. With respect to cattle, the American stockman in the West is possessed of singular advantages—land for nothing, and abundance of it; in the East, good markets for dairy and other produce; and in the Middle States excellent pastures of the blue grass, the successful growth of which opens up fresh prospects for the grazier. The Western country is poorly watered for better classes of stock.

At Sandringham Park, on the 22nd inst., the Sandringham Cottage Horticultural Society held their fifteenth annual show. The society is under the special patronage of the Prince and Princess of Wales. The excursion-trains from Cambridge, Norwich, and the neighbourhood brought a large number of visitors. The show of flowers, fruit, and vegetables exceeded both in number and quality that of the previous years, whilst the imposing display of tropical and greenhouse plants, ferns, and flowers contributed from the Royal gardens was a special attraction to the visitors.

The annual show in connection with the Bedfordshire Agricultural Society was held at Biggleswade on the same day. The show of stock and implements was above the average, and the competition in the principal classes was strong. After the show there was a dinner at the Townhall, when the chair was taken by Mr. Whitbread, M.P., president of the society.

The Shropshire and West Midland Agricultural Society's Show was held on Wednesday and Thursday last week at Bridgnorth, and was, on the whole, very successful. £1000 was given in prizes. The gold medal in the implement department was given to Mr. Walter Wood, of Worship-street, London, for a new automatic string sheaf-binder. A dog show was held on the ground adjoining the show-yard.

A large number of gentlemen engaged in or interested in agriculture visited last Saturday the farms, extending over 1700 acres, in the occupation of Mr. Collinson Hall, in the neighbourhood of Brentwood. Mr. Hall stall-feeds the cows, whose milk he dispatches to London. He entertained his visitors at luncheon, and he and Mr. Mechi gave many practical suggestions for an improvement in British husbandry.

The annual exhibition of the Leicestershire Agricultural Society opened at Leicester on Wednesday. There were 842 entries, including 139 hunters, 92 for jumping and driving, 69 agricultural horses, 65 beasts, and 84 pens of sheep. Lord John Manners, M.P., presided at the annual dinner in the afternoon.

The Gloucestershire Agricultural Society opened its forty-second annual show in Gloucester Park, on Tuesday, which was largely attended. The entries of stock this year number 267, against 264 last year, and 245 in 1877. In quality the various classes are much above the average.

Prince Victor, the eldest son of Prince Napoleon, has attained his eighteenth year, and with it his majority, according to the custom of his house. He is still studying at the Lycée Charlemagne, and next year will probably present himself for admission to St. Cyr, the Sandhurst of France. The Prince is described as studious and intelligent. He is tall and of strong build, and an adept at field sports.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

The Grocers' Company have voted £100 in aid of the funds of St. George's Hospital.

Lord Derby has given ten guineas in aid of the funds of the City Orthopœdic Hospital.

Messrs. Farebrother, Lye, and Palmer state that the Royal Dramatic College has been sold by private contract, to be used, they hope, for charitable purposes.

The Duke of Westminster on the 21st inst. laid the foundation-stone of a new wing to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.

At the thirtieth anniversary festival dinner in aid of the funds of the National Orphan Home, Ham-common, near Richmond, Surrey, held the same day, under the presidency of Lord Elcho, in Willis's Rooms, subscriptions and donations amounting to nearly £700 were announced.

The committee of the Homes for Working Girls in London announce that suitable premises have been secured in a necessitous locality for the establishment of a third house. It is really a good old family mansion in Fitzroy-street, Fitzroy-square; and when altered and put in thorough repair will accommodate forty residents.

An earnest appeal is made for aid for the Princess Louise Home for young Girls at Wanstead. Twelve hundred and eighty-seven young girls have been admitted to the home and trained as domestic servants; of these nearly 1000 have been placed in situations by the society, and provided with suitable outfits; 203 have been restored to their friends. The institution has suffered sadly by the recent commercial depression, and one third of the accommodation of the home has remained unutilised during the past year for want of funds.

A fancy fair was held last week in the grounds of East Hill House, Colchester, in aid of the extension and improvement fund of the Essex and Colchester Hospital. The stall-holders included Mrs. Claughton, wife of the Bishop of St. Albans. Five regimental bands performed in the grounds. There were also dramatic performances by the officers of the Colchester garrison.

On Sunday afternoon, at a concert of sacred music given in the grounds of the Savile Cricket Club, Dewsbury, for the benefit of the District Infirmary, the chief choruses in "The Messiah" were given by a band and chorus numbering between 300 and 400 performers. From 12,000 to 15,000 persons were present, and a collection for the benefit of the infirmary produced a large sum of money.

The Earl of Dunraven presided at the annual festival of the Newsvendors' Institution, at Willis's Rooms, on Wednesday evening.

A dramatic performance in aid of the Atalanta Fund will be given at the St. George's Hall next Wednesday, under the patronage of the Lord Mayor, when Mr. Charles Ward, whose name has been favourably associated with several Shakspearean characters, will essay the arduous rôle of Richelieu in Lord Lytton's play.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CENTENARIES.

There are still some Sunday-school centenary meetings to record. About 12,000 children belonging to the Nonconformist schools in the neighbourhood of Yeovil celebrated the centenary of the establishment of Sunday schools on Wednesday, the 21st inst. A procession a mile and a half long, with numberless banners and five bands of music, paraded the streets, and the children were entertained with tea and other refreshments in a field adjoining Newton House. The occasion was observed as a general holiday.

In celebration of the centenary, and on the invitation of Mr. Charles Schreiber, the Church and Nonconformist scholars of Poole were on the same day entertained at tea. About 3500 children and teachers, carrying a profusion of banners and flowers, passed through the High-street to the place of meeting, the Mayor, in his official robes, and the members of the Corporation and the magistrates joining in the procession.

The Centenary celebration at Brighton (of which we gave some account last week) was brought to a close on the 21st by the infants' demonstration, which was carried out on very much the same scale as the elder children's celebration on the previous day. The little ones assembled in vans on the Steine, and were driven thence in a long procession to Preston Park, accompanied by bands of music and banners. In the park hymns were sung and the children were afterwards amused in various ways, including the release of fire-balloons and the distribution of toys. Tea was served in the ground; and the arrangements generally were very complete.

Twenty thousand Sunday-school children assembled on Thursday, the 22nd, in the great market-place, Nottingham, each carrying a bouquet of flowers, the occasion being a great centenary demonstration. Hymns were sung and speeches delivered, after which the whole assembly, numbering 40,000 people, men, women, and children, sang the National Anthem and gave three cheers for the Queen.

Yesterday week the Nonconformist Sunday schools in Faversham united in holding an al fresco festival in celebration of the centenary. The procession of children, walking two abreast, extended nearly a mile, there being 1500 of them.

At the meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works yesterday week it was resolved to deepen the foundations of Waterloo Bridge, at an estimated cost of £40,000; to deepen the channel and enlarge the span of Vauxhall Bridge, at an estimated cost of £45,000; to rebuild Battersea Bridge, at an estimated expenditure of £250,000; to repair Wandsworth Bridge, at £5000; to rebuild Putney Bridge and improve the approaches, at £300,000; and to reconstruct Deptford-creek Bridge, at £20,000. Some of these works will require Parliamentary powers.

Last week 2595 births and 1482 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 159, while the deaths were 154 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 3 from smallpox, 32 from measles, 53 from scarlet fever, 12 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 16 from different forms of fever, and 202 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 354 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing steadily from 188 to 316 in the five preceding weeks. These 354 deaths were 98 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 171 and 176 in the two previous weeks, fell to 161 last week, and were 2 below the corrected weekly average: 91 were referred to bronchitis and 42 to pneumonia. Last week 5935 births and 3483 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The mortality from all causes was at the average rate of 21 deaths annually in every 1000 persons living. The annual death-rate was 20 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 23 in Glasgow, and 30 in Dublin. Smallpox caused nine more deaths in Dublin.

OBITUARY.

THE EARL OF DALHOUSIE.

The Right Hon. George Ramsay, C.B., twelfth Earl of Dalhousie in Mid-Lothian and Lord Ramsay of Kerrington, and Baron Ramsay of Dalhousie, in the Peerage of Scotland, Lord Ramsay of Glenmark, in the county of Forfar, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Admiral R.N., died suddenly at his seat, Dalhousie Castle, on the 20th inst. His Lordship was born April 26, 1806, the younger son of Lieutenant-General the Hon. John Ramsay, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Philip De Lisle, Esq., of Calcutta, and was grandson of George, eighth Earl of Dalhousie. He succeeded to the family honours and estates on the demise of his cousin, Fox, eleventh Earl of Dalhousie, and second Lord Panmure, K.T., G.C.B., who was Vice-President of the Board of Trade in 1841, and twice Secretary of State for War. The Earl whose death we record entered the Royal Navy in 1820, and became an Admiral on the retired list in 1875. He was made a C.B. in 1856, was superintendent of Pembroke Dockyard from 1857 to 1862, and Commander-in-Chief on the South American station from 1866 to 1869. His Lordship was created a peer of the United Kingdom as Lord Ramsay of Glenmark, June 12, 1875. He married, Aug. 12, 1845, Sarah Frances, only daughter of the late William Robertson, Esq., of Logan House, N.B., and had four sons, of whom two survive. The elder son and successor, John William, Lord Ramsay, recently elected M.P. for Liverpool, now thirteenth Earl of Dalhousie, was born Jan. 29, 1847, and married, Dec. 6, 1877, Lady Ida Louise Bennet, younger daughter of the Earl of Tankerville, by whom he has two sons. His Lordship is Extra Equerry to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh.

THE DOWAGER COUNTESS COWPER.

The Right Honourable Anne Florence Cowper, Dowager Countess Cowper, and in her own right Baroness Lucas of Crudwell, Wilts, died at her town residence, 4, St. James's-square, on the 23rd inst. Her Ladyship was born June 8, 1806, the elder daughter and co-heir of Thomas Philip, Earl de Grey, Baron Lucas and Baron Grantham, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of Ireland from 1841 to 1844, by Henrietta Frances, his wife, youngest daughter of William, first Earl of Enniskillen. At her father's death, Nov. 14, 1859, her Ladyship inherited the Barony of Lucas, which was descendible to heirs male and female, Earl de Grey's other titles devolving on his nephew, George Frederick Samuel, present Marquis of Ripon, K.G. The Countess was married, Oct. 7, 1833, to George Augustus Frederick, sixth Earl Cowper, by whom, who died April 15, 1856, she leaves two sons and two daughters—viz., his Excellency Francis Thomas de Grey, Earl Cowper, K.G., now Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, who succeeds to the Barony of Lucas and to the extensive family estates; the Hon. Henry Frederick Cowper, M.P. for Hertfordshire; Lady Florence Amabell, wife of the Hon. Auberon Herbert, M.P., brother of the Earl of Carnarvon; and Lady Amabell, wife of Lord Walter Talbot Kerr, R.N. The death of the Dowager Countess Cowper is widely and deeply deplored.

The deaths are also announced of—

The Rev. Joseph Bockett, M.A., Rector of Stoodleigh, Devon, on the 16th inst., at Exeter, aged eighty-five.

Major-General John Fraser, late Royal Marine Artillery, on the 21st inst., at Annfield, Stirling.

Henry Williams Howell, Esq., J.P., of Glaspant, Carmarthenshire, on the 21st inst., in his eightieth year.

Lieutenant-Colonel Stonehouse George Bunbury, on the 11th inst., at Pembroke House, Southampton, aged sixty-two.

Edward Stevenson Thomas, Esq., M.R.C.S., on the 16th inst., at 49, Wells-street, aged forty-seven.

Walter Scott Mackenzie, Major Royal London Militia, and late 93rd Highlanders and 84th Regiment, on the 18th inst.

Commander William Stocker Robins, R.N., on the 18th inst., at Peckham, in his eighty-ninth year. In early life he saw much active naval service.

The Rev. Robert Twigg, for thirty-three years Vicar of Tilmanstone, on the 22nd inst., aged seventy-seven. He was fifth son of the Rev. Thomas Twigg, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Coleman-street, London.

Mr. Edmund James Smith, C.E., Surveyor to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. He was recently the principal witness before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the London Water Supply.

John Edward Fordham, Esq., of Melbourn Bury, Cambridgeshire, J.P. and D.L., on the 20th inst., at his seat near Royston. He was born in 1799, and married, 1825, Harriet (who died 1874), daughter of Sir John Gurney, Baron of the Court of Exchequer, and leaves, with other issue, a son, John Hampden Fordham, Esq., barrister-at-law, married to Catherine, youngest sister of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P.

Major and Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Grey Hazlerigg, 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, on the 16th inst., at Pretoria, Transvaal, aged forty-three. He was eldest son of the present Sir Arthur Grey Hazlerigg, Bart., of Nosely Hall, in the county of Leicester. He married, Jan. 9, 1878, Janet Edith, eldest daughter of Archibald Orr-Ewing, Esq., M.P., of Ballikinrain Castle, Stirlingshire, and leaves an infant son.

Elizabeth, Lady Wolseley, widow of the Rev. Sir Richard Wolseley, fourth Bart., of Mount Wolseley, in the county of Carlow, on the 15th inst., at Moosaphir Cottage, Kingstown, near Dublin, aged eighty-four. She was the daughter of William Smith, Esq., of Golden Bridge House, in the county of Dublin, and was married, as his third wife, to the Rev. Sir Richard Wolseley, Bart., who died without issue in 1852.

Vice-Admiral Rowley Lambert, C.B., on the 22nd inst., at the Grosvenor Hotel, Victoria-street, aged fifty-two. He was son of the late Admiral Sir George Robert Lambert, G.C.B., by Katharine, his first wife, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Cobb, Prebendary of Chichester, and Vicar of Sittingbourne, Kent. He attained the rank of Vice-Admiral in 1878, and was made a C.B. in 1867. Admiral Lambert married, 1863, Helen Elizabeth, daughter of James Campbell, Esq., of Hampton Court.

Baroness de Cetto (Elizabeth), widow of Baron de Cetto, formerly Bavarian Minister at the Court of St. James's, on the 22nd inst., at 6, Hill-street, in her eightieth year. The Baroness was the daughter of Colonel Thomas Burrowes, of Langan Castle, County Meath, by Frances, his wife, fourth daughter of the Most Rev. Lord Decies, Archbishop of Tuam. Her husband, who was Conseiller d'Etat et Chambellan to the King of Bavaria, and upwards of forty years Bavarian Minister at the Court of St. James's, died on Aug. 7 last year, aged eighty-four.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

S K (Cologne).—The report is amusing enough; but its publication would certainly provoke a controversy, for which we have no space. The games referred to will be very acceptable.

T B (Bolton).—Too prosaic in conception; and, besides, there are at least two solutions—your own way and one by 1. R to Q 3rd, 2. R to K Kt 3rd, 3. K to Q 6th, &c.

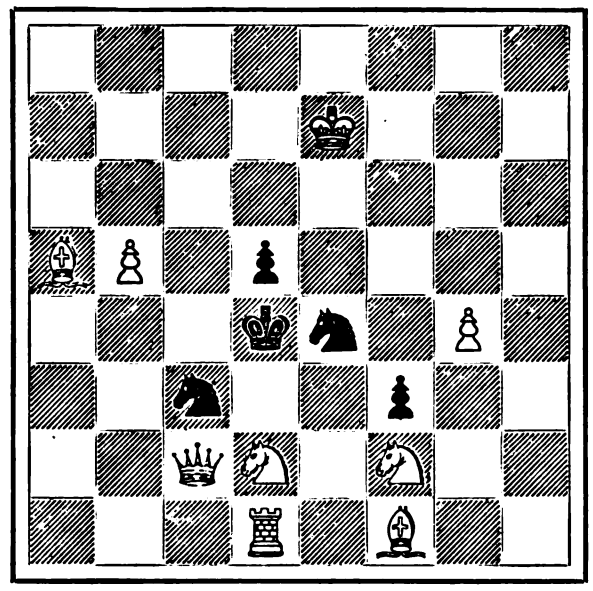
W B (Farnworth).—The position is much too simple.

G H D G (Paris).—The "inclosures" have been sent to your address. Such a match could not be expected to evoke public interest.

G F (Bournemouth).—Not suitable to our column. Send it to the Chronicle.

D A (Dublin).—Thanks; the problem shall have early attention.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1898 received from W Burr, G C Baxter, B C M S, Vleurgat, J Bumstead, and T Guest.



CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1899 received from Alpha, Ozokerine, Maggie Latta, M Dawson, W Burr, G C Baxter, B C M S, Barton and Co, Vleurgat, J Bumstead, P Jones, Thomas Guest, Lulu, and Lincopiensis (Sweden).

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1900 received from H B, C Darragh, An Old Hand, D Templeton, H Brewster, Kitten, M O'Halloran, Shadforth, Dr F St, Semaj, H W R, E P Vulliamy, W Burr, Cant, Julia Short, E Firmstone, C S Coxe, R Gray, T Greenbank, Jupiter Junior, B Nevis, R Ingersoll, S Farrant, E Elsbury, B L Dyke, Nerina, E Jessop, L Sharswood, E Sharswood, G L Mayne, Elsie, H Barrett, C Oswald, D W Kell, W H K P, R H Brooks, J W W, M Dawson, Alfyn, J Tucker, Hereward, O Wolter, Pierce Jones, H Blacklock, N Cator, M A Hind, Kentish Man, W J Eggleston, Thomas Guest, Alpha, Meursius, W M Curtis, N Cator, James Latta, Lulu, James Dobson, A C Edwards, Ozokerine, G Fosbrooke, and Norman Rumbelow.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1899.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to Q R 7th	Any move
2. Mates accordingly.

PROBLEM No. 1902.
By FRIDESWIDE F. BEECHEY.
BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

Played in the Tourney of the Buda-Pesth Chess Club between Messrs. KEMENY and JAKOBI.
(Two Knights' Defence.)

WHITE (Herr K.)	BLACK (Dr. J.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd
4. Kt to Kt 5th	P to Q 4th
5. P takes P	Kt to Q R 4th
6. B to Kt 5th (ch)	P to Q B 3rd
7. P takes P	P takes P
8. B to K 2nd	P to K R 3rd
9. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K 5th
10. Kt to K 5th	Q to Q 5th
11. P to K B 4th	B to B 4th
12. R to B sq	Q to Q 3rd
13. P to Q B 3rd	B to Kt 3rd
14. P to Q 4th	Castles

The moves on both sides have, thus far, been all in accordance with the "books." Here, if 14. P takes P, en passant, then, 15. Q takes P, Q to B 2nd; and Black has the better game.

15. B to K 3rd	B to K 3rd
16. Kt to Q 2nd	Q R to Q sq
17. P to K Kt 4th	Kt to Q 4th

A well-timed move, which deprives White of time to advance his Pawns on the King's side.

18. Q Kt takes P

The alternative move, 18. B to Kt sq, does not look more promising.

18.	Kt takes B
19. Q to Q 3rd

To exchange Queens would cost him a piece.

19.	Kt to Kt 7th (ch)
20. K to Q 2nd	Kt takes P
21. R takes Kt	Kt to B 5th (ch)
22. K to B 2nd	Kt takes Kt
23. P takes Kt	Q takes P

All this has been exceedingly well played by Dr. Jakobi. He now comes out of the rally with his Pawn recovered and a fine attack in hand.

24. Q to K B 3rd	B to B 2nd
25. Kt to K B 6th (ch)

25. R to K B sq loses the exchange at once, whereas the move in the text gives some hope of an attack if the piece is taken.

25.	K to R sq
26. Kt to R 5th	B to Q 4th
27. Q to B 2nd	B to K 5th (ch)
28. K to B sq	B to Q 3rd

A quiet but very forcible move, leading to a fine termination.

29. P to K R 4th

Evidently failing to observe the purport of Black's last move. 29. Q to K 3rd seems to be his only chance of prolonging the game, but Black should win in that case also. Suppose—

29. Q to K 3rd	B to Q B 4th
30. Q takes Q B	B to K 6th (ch)
31. K to B 2nd	B takes R
32. Q takes Q	B takes Q, and Black has won the exchange.

Instead of 29. B to Q B 4th, Black might play 29. K R to K sq, with a fine game.

29.	Q takes P (ch)
30. P takes Q	B to R 6th

Mate.

The Turf, Field, and Farm has an account of the first congress of the New York and Northern Pennsylvania Chess Association, which began at Syracuse (N.Y.) on the 21st, and closed on the 26th ultimo. There were twenty competitors in the principal tourney, divided into three classes, according to their known or reputed skill. During the meeting Captain Mackenzie played against a number of adversaries simultaneously; and Mr. Mohle essayed a blindfold encounter against five adversaries. The meeting is said to have been very successful.

A match has been arranged between Mr. B. M. Neill, chess editor of the Philadelphia Progress, and Mr. H. Davidson, of the same city.

The tournament of the Moscow club ended in M. Soloftzoff winning the first prize, the other prizes being carried off by Messrs. Hellwig, Mouratoff, and Maude, in the order named. The skill of all the winners is known to our readers, many of their games having appeared in this column.

Mr. J. P. Taylor's forthcoming work, "Elementary Chess Problems," is now in the press, and will be published, uniform with "Chess Chips," early in September. It will contain, among other things, hints to composers of two-move problems, and fifty specimens.

A congress of the West German Chess Association was opened at Brunswick on the 17th inst., when several tourneys for players of various degrees of skill were arranged for the ensuing week. Eleven competitors entered the Meister Tourney, including Messrs. Schwartz, Schallop, L. Paulsen, W. Paulsen, J. Minckwitz, &c., and at the time our report was dispatched the first and second prizes in this competition seemed likely to fall to Messrs. Schwartz and L. Paulsen. In the other principal tourney Herr Niemeyer and Dr. Rief tied for the first and second prizes, the third and fourth falling to Messrs. Guebler and Löwenthal, respectively. The problem solution tourney was won by Dr. Schwede. The visitors have been treated with great hospitality throughout the proceedings, and on the 22nd there was a cessation of play to afford them an opportunity for an excursion to Harzburg.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Feb. 15, 1876) of Mr. James Macgregor Mackay, late of No. 32, Brunswick-square, Brighton, who died on March 20 last, has been proved by John Mackay Plews and James Stevenson Forrester, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator bequeaths £1000 each to the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, the Caledonian Asylum, Holloway, the Scottish Hospital, London, and the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary; to his wife, Mrs. Margaret Mackay, £300, and his household furniture, linen, books, plate, wines, carriages and horses, and £1200 per annum for life; and there are liberal bequests to his brothers, sisters, and others. The residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his said nephews, Mr. J. M. Plews and Mr. J. S. Forrester.

The will (dated Dec. 23, 1879) of Mr. Thomas Stock Cowie, late of No. 15, Hyde Park-square, who died on the 14th ult., was proved on the 9th inst. by Alfred Howard Cowie, the brother, and Daniel Cowie Scott, the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator gives considerable legacies to his brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces, cousins, and other members of his family, including his uncle, the Very Rev. B. M. Cowie, D.D., Dean of Manchester; and legacies to friends, including his late partner, Robert Wigram Crawford, and to servants. His residuary estate, real and personal, is to be held upon trust for his brother Alfred, his wife and children.

The will and codicil (both dated April 29, 1880) of Mr. Nathaniel Richard Brassey, late of 83, Southampton-row, Russell-square, who died on the 24th ult., was proved on the 9th inst. by Edwin Arthur Brassey Crockett and the Rev. Richard Ibbetson Porter, the nephews, and Frederick Halsey Janson, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. There are numerous legacies, pecuniary and specific; and the testator directs his real estate to be sold, and the net proceeds, with his residuary personal estate, is to be divided into forty parts, nine of which he gives to his sister, Mrs. Isabel Eliza Porter; fifteen upon trust for his brother, Frederic Brassey, his wife and children; four to his brother Willoughby Brassey; three upon trust for his brother George Ashburner Brassey, and his children; three to his sister, Mrs. Mary Hancock; three upon trust for his niece, Mrs. Annie Oldershaw; one each to his nephews, Captain Willoughby Berthon and Charles Septimus Berthon, and the remaining one-fortieth part to his niece, Mrs. Jane Cruttenden.

The will (dated Aug. 18, 1879) of Mr. Charles Robert Fitz-Gerald, late of No. 17, York-street, Portman-square, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved on the 5th inst. by Gerald Beresford FitzGerald and Gerald Augustus Robert FitzGerald, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator leaves legacies to his brother, nephews, nieces, and servants, and the residue of his real and personal property to his said nephew, Gerald Beresford FitzGerald.

The will (dated March 27, 1877) of Mrs. Hester Newby Besemeres, formerly of No. 4, Highbury-crescent, but late of No. 20, St. Mary's-road, Canonbury, who died on the 5th ult., was proved on the 1st inst. by Alfred Maples Jeaffreson, and Miss Jane Besemeres, the daughter, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000.

The will (dated Sept. 15, 1876) of Major-General Sir Benjamin Travell Phillips, Knight, formerly of No. 1, Vere-street, Cavendish-square, who died on May 10 last at Paris, was proved on the 12th inst. by General Sir James Alexander, K.C.B., the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testator's sons being amply provided for, he leaves all his real and personal estate upon trust for his daughter, Violet Ada Phillips.

The will (dated July 10, 1879) with a codicil (dated Feb. 8, 1880) of the Right Hon. Francis Jack Needham, Earl of Kilmorey, late of Gordon House, Isleworth, who died on the 20th ult., was proved on the 14th inst. by Charles Reynolds Williams and Major-General George Wentworth Higginson, C.B., the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testator leaves to his son, Captain Charles Needham, £1000; to his nephews Major Harry Cust, Reginald Cust, and Henry Fox Bristowe, and to his executor, Mr. Williams, £500 each; to his nieces, the three daughters of Owen Grant, £900; to his gardener, Knight, £200; to his servant, Maria Hynes, £150; to Hammerton, a blind man, and to Jepkins and Chitty, his labourers, £50 each; and one or two other bequests. All his real estate and the residue of the personalty he gives to his said nephew, Major-General G. W. Higginson.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN AUGUST.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Mercury on the 5th and 6th, but the latter day is that of New Moon. She is also near Venus on the evening of the 6th. She is near Mars on the evening of the 8th; she is near Jupiter during the night hours of the 23rd and morning hours of the 24th; and near Saturn during the night hours of the 24th and morning hours of the 25th. She is nearest the earth on the afternoon of the 17th, and most distant from it on the afternoon of the 1st, and again on the morning of the 29th. Her phases or times of change are:—

New Moon	on the	6th	at 48 minutes	after	3h.	in the morning.
First Quarter	,,	13th	,, 42	,,	9	,, afternoon.
Full Moon	,,	20th	,, 18	,,	5	,, morning.
Last Quarter	,,	27th	,, 15	,,	4	,, afternoon.

Mercury is a morning star, rising on the 7th at about sunrise; on the 10th at 4h. 10m. a.m., or 29 minutes before the Sun, which interval rapidly increases to 1h. 10m. by the 15th, 1h. 35m. by the 20th, 1h. 42m. by the 25th; after which it turns to decrease to 1h. 32m. by the 30th, the planet rising on this day at 3h. 38m. a.m. He is in inferior conjunction with the Sun on the 5th, near the Moon on the 5th and 6th, stationary among the stars on the 14th, at his greatest western elongation (18 deg. 21 min.) on the 23rd, in ascending node on the 25th, and at least distance from the Sun on the 29th.

Venus is an evening star, setting on the 8th at 7h. 58m. p.m., or 22 minutes after sunset, which interval gradually increases to 29 minutes by the 18th, and to half an hour by the 28th; the planet setting on this day at 7h. 24m. p.m. Near the Moon on the 6th.

Mars is an evening star, setting 53 minutes after sunset on the 8th, 47 minutes on the 18th, and 37 minutes on the 28th, the planet setting on these days at 8h. 29m. p.m., 8h. 1m. p.m., and 7h. 31m. p.m., respectively. He is due south on the 1st at 1h. 55m. p.m., on 15th at 1h. 33m. p.m., and on the last day at 1h. 7m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 8th.

Jupiter rises on the 7th at 9h. 30m. p.m. or 1h. 53m. after sunset; on the 17th at 8h. 51m. p.m., or 1h. 25m. after sunset; and on the 27th at 8h. 11m. p.m., or 1h. 15m. after sunset. He is due south at 4h. 33m. a.m. on the 1st, at 3h. 39m. a.m. on the 15th, and at 2h. 33m. a.m. on the last day. He is stationary among the stars on the 9th, and near the Moon on the 24th.

Saturn rises on the 7th at 9h. 55m. p.m. or 2h. 18m. after sunset; on the 17th at 9h. 16m. p.m., or 2h. after sunset; and on the 27th at 8h. 37m. p.m., or 1h. 41m. after sunset. He is due south on the 1st at 5h. 10m. a.m., on the 15th at 4h. 16m. a.m., and on the last day at 3h. 11m. a.m. He is stationary among the stars on the 11th, and near the Moon on the 24th.

FANCY DRESSES.—ENGLISH AND FOREIGN MANUFACTURE.

The popularity of Printed Cotton Fabrics has almost OBLITERATED the sale of Woollen Dress Goods this season. I find the Department clogged with an immense Surplus Stock that must be cleared before Stocktaking. To effect this, the whole has been re-marked, with the view of a complete clearance. The absurdly low prices must attract the most sceptical; for instance, beautiful materials that cost me 10d., 12d., and 14d. per yard will be sold for 6½d., 8½d., and 11½d. per yard. Wonderful Bargains.

FAILURE OF A LARGE SHIPPING FIRM.

An extraordinary purchase of several thousand yards of Dress Fabrics in nine-yard lengths, in many instances twenty lengths of the same style; these I shall make up into Bundles of fifty-four yards, and dispose of them at 27s. the lot, or at the rate of 6d. per yard, for goods varying in value from 9d. to 2s. 6d. Sets of Patterns free.

SWEET SCENTS AS WAGERS.—In accordance with a suggestion which has been made—namely, that a Morocco Leather Case or Fancy Wooden Box containing a Bottle of Jockey Club Bouquet, Opoponax Perfume, or any other of the thousand and one sweet scents from flowers made by PIESSE and LUBIN, would be a suitable object for a wager, and far superior to a dozen of gloves as a memento of the race, the time, and the place, PIESSE and LUBIN now announce that they have a variety of such cases, containing various odours. Two-Bottle Cases, 21s.; Three-Bottle Cases, 31s. 6d.; Four-Bottle Cases, 42s.; Six-Bottle Cases, 63s. All filled with any perfume to order. No charge for engraving monogram on cases. The cases are made of cedar wood, king wood, myall wood, and fishers, lined velvet, bottles cut all over. They have also a variety more expensive, inlaid, and with gold and silver caps, from £5 to £10. Orders, with a bank note inclosed, attended to with dispatch.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER

THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandruff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.

If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.

Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

EPPS'S COCOA.

GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark,

"Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."
"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 229 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly,
"GEORGE BOYD."

THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.

"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 29, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Snedeker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 229 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."

Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

WAR!!

"O World!
O men! what are ye, and our best designs,
That we must work by crime to punish crime,
And slay, as if death had but this one gate?"—BYRON.

THE COST OF WAR.—"Give me the money that has been spent in war, and I will purchase every foot of land upon the globe; I will clothe every man, woman, and child in an attire of which kings and queens would be proud; I will build a school-house on every hillside and in every valley over the whole earth; I will build an academy in every town and endow it; a college in every state, and will fill it with able professors; I will crown every hill with a place of worship consecrated to the promulgation of the gospel of peace; I will support in every pulpit an able teacher of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning the chime on one hill should answer the chime on another round the earth's wide circumference, and the voice of prayer and the song praise should ascend, like a universal holocaust, to heaven."—RICHARD.

"WHAT IS MORE TERRIBLE THAN WAR?"

"I WILL tell you what is ten times, and TEN THOUSAND TIMES, more terrible than War—Outraged Nature. She kills, and kills, and is never tired of killing, till she has taught man the terrible lesson he is so slow to learn—that Nature is only conquered by obeying her. . . . Man has his courtesies of war: he spares the woman and child. But Nature is fierce when she is offended, as she is bounteous and kind when she is obeyed. She spares neither woman nor child. She has no pity; for some awful, but most good, reason she is not allowed to have any pity. Silently she strikes the sleeping child with as little remorse as she would strike the strong man with the musket or the pickaxe in his hand. Ah, would to God that some man had the pictorial eloquence to put before the mothers of England the mass of preventible suffering, the mass of preventible agony of mind and body which exists in England year after year."—KINGSLEY.
How much longer must the causes of this startling array of preventible deaths continue unchecked?

THE SANITARY CONGRESS, October, 1878.—In an inaugural address on the Sanitary Condition of England, E. Chadwick, C.B., states that "Ignorance of sanitary science costs threefold the amount of poor-rate for the country generally."

"WHY SHOULD WE, OF ALL ANIMALS, PERISH, as we do, in the first part of the second third of our natural career? The answer is that we have never, as a community, let ourselves study the question; have never, in truth, looked at the facts plainly as they stand forth."—Inaugural Address of Dr. W. B. RICHARDSON, of the Sanitary Congress of Great Britain, 1879.

IT is UNNECESSARY to STATE MORE on this point to show the absolute necessity of a Coroner or Sanitary Tribunal. It must be clear to any intelligent mind that the masses know very little more on these points than dumb animals. How very few know the various diseases which are acknowledged to be the result of sanitary ignorance. No one is safe without having at hand some efficient means of warding off BLOOD POISONS; for GOUT, RHEUMATISM, LUMBAGO, DIPHTHERIA, BOILS, CARBUNCLES, ERYSIPELAS, FEVERS, SKIN DISEASES, MEASLES, SMALLPOX, SCARLET FEVER, and even CONSUMPTION (from the blood becoming poor, the result of an inability to digest good food), BILIOUS HEADACHES, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES ON THE FACE, WEARINESS, SOURNESS OF THE STOMACH, WIND or FLATULENCE, CONSTIPATION, HEARTBURN, and nearly every form of disease are traceable to sanitary ignorance and an imperfect action of the Liver. The great success of ENO'S FRUIT SALT has firmly established the fact that it promotes the separation of the bile from the blood (by natural means), which is then passed from the system, thus preventing and curing fevers, blood poisons, and other diseases.

FOR THE MEANS OF PREVENTION, and for preserving Health by natural means, see a large illustrated Sheet wrapped with each bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

HOW TO PREVENT DISEASE AND PREMATURE DEATH BY NATURAL MEANS. Use ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

WHAT EVERY TRAVELLING TRUNK AND HOUSEHOLD IN THE WORLD OUGHT TO CONTAIN.—A Bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT. Without such a simple precaution the jeopardy of life is immensely increased.

FOR YOUNG AND OLD.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT (prepared from sound ripe fruit), when taken with water, acts as a natural aperient; its simple but natural action removes all impurities, thus preserving and restoring health. It its great value in keeping the body in health were universally known, no family would be without it.

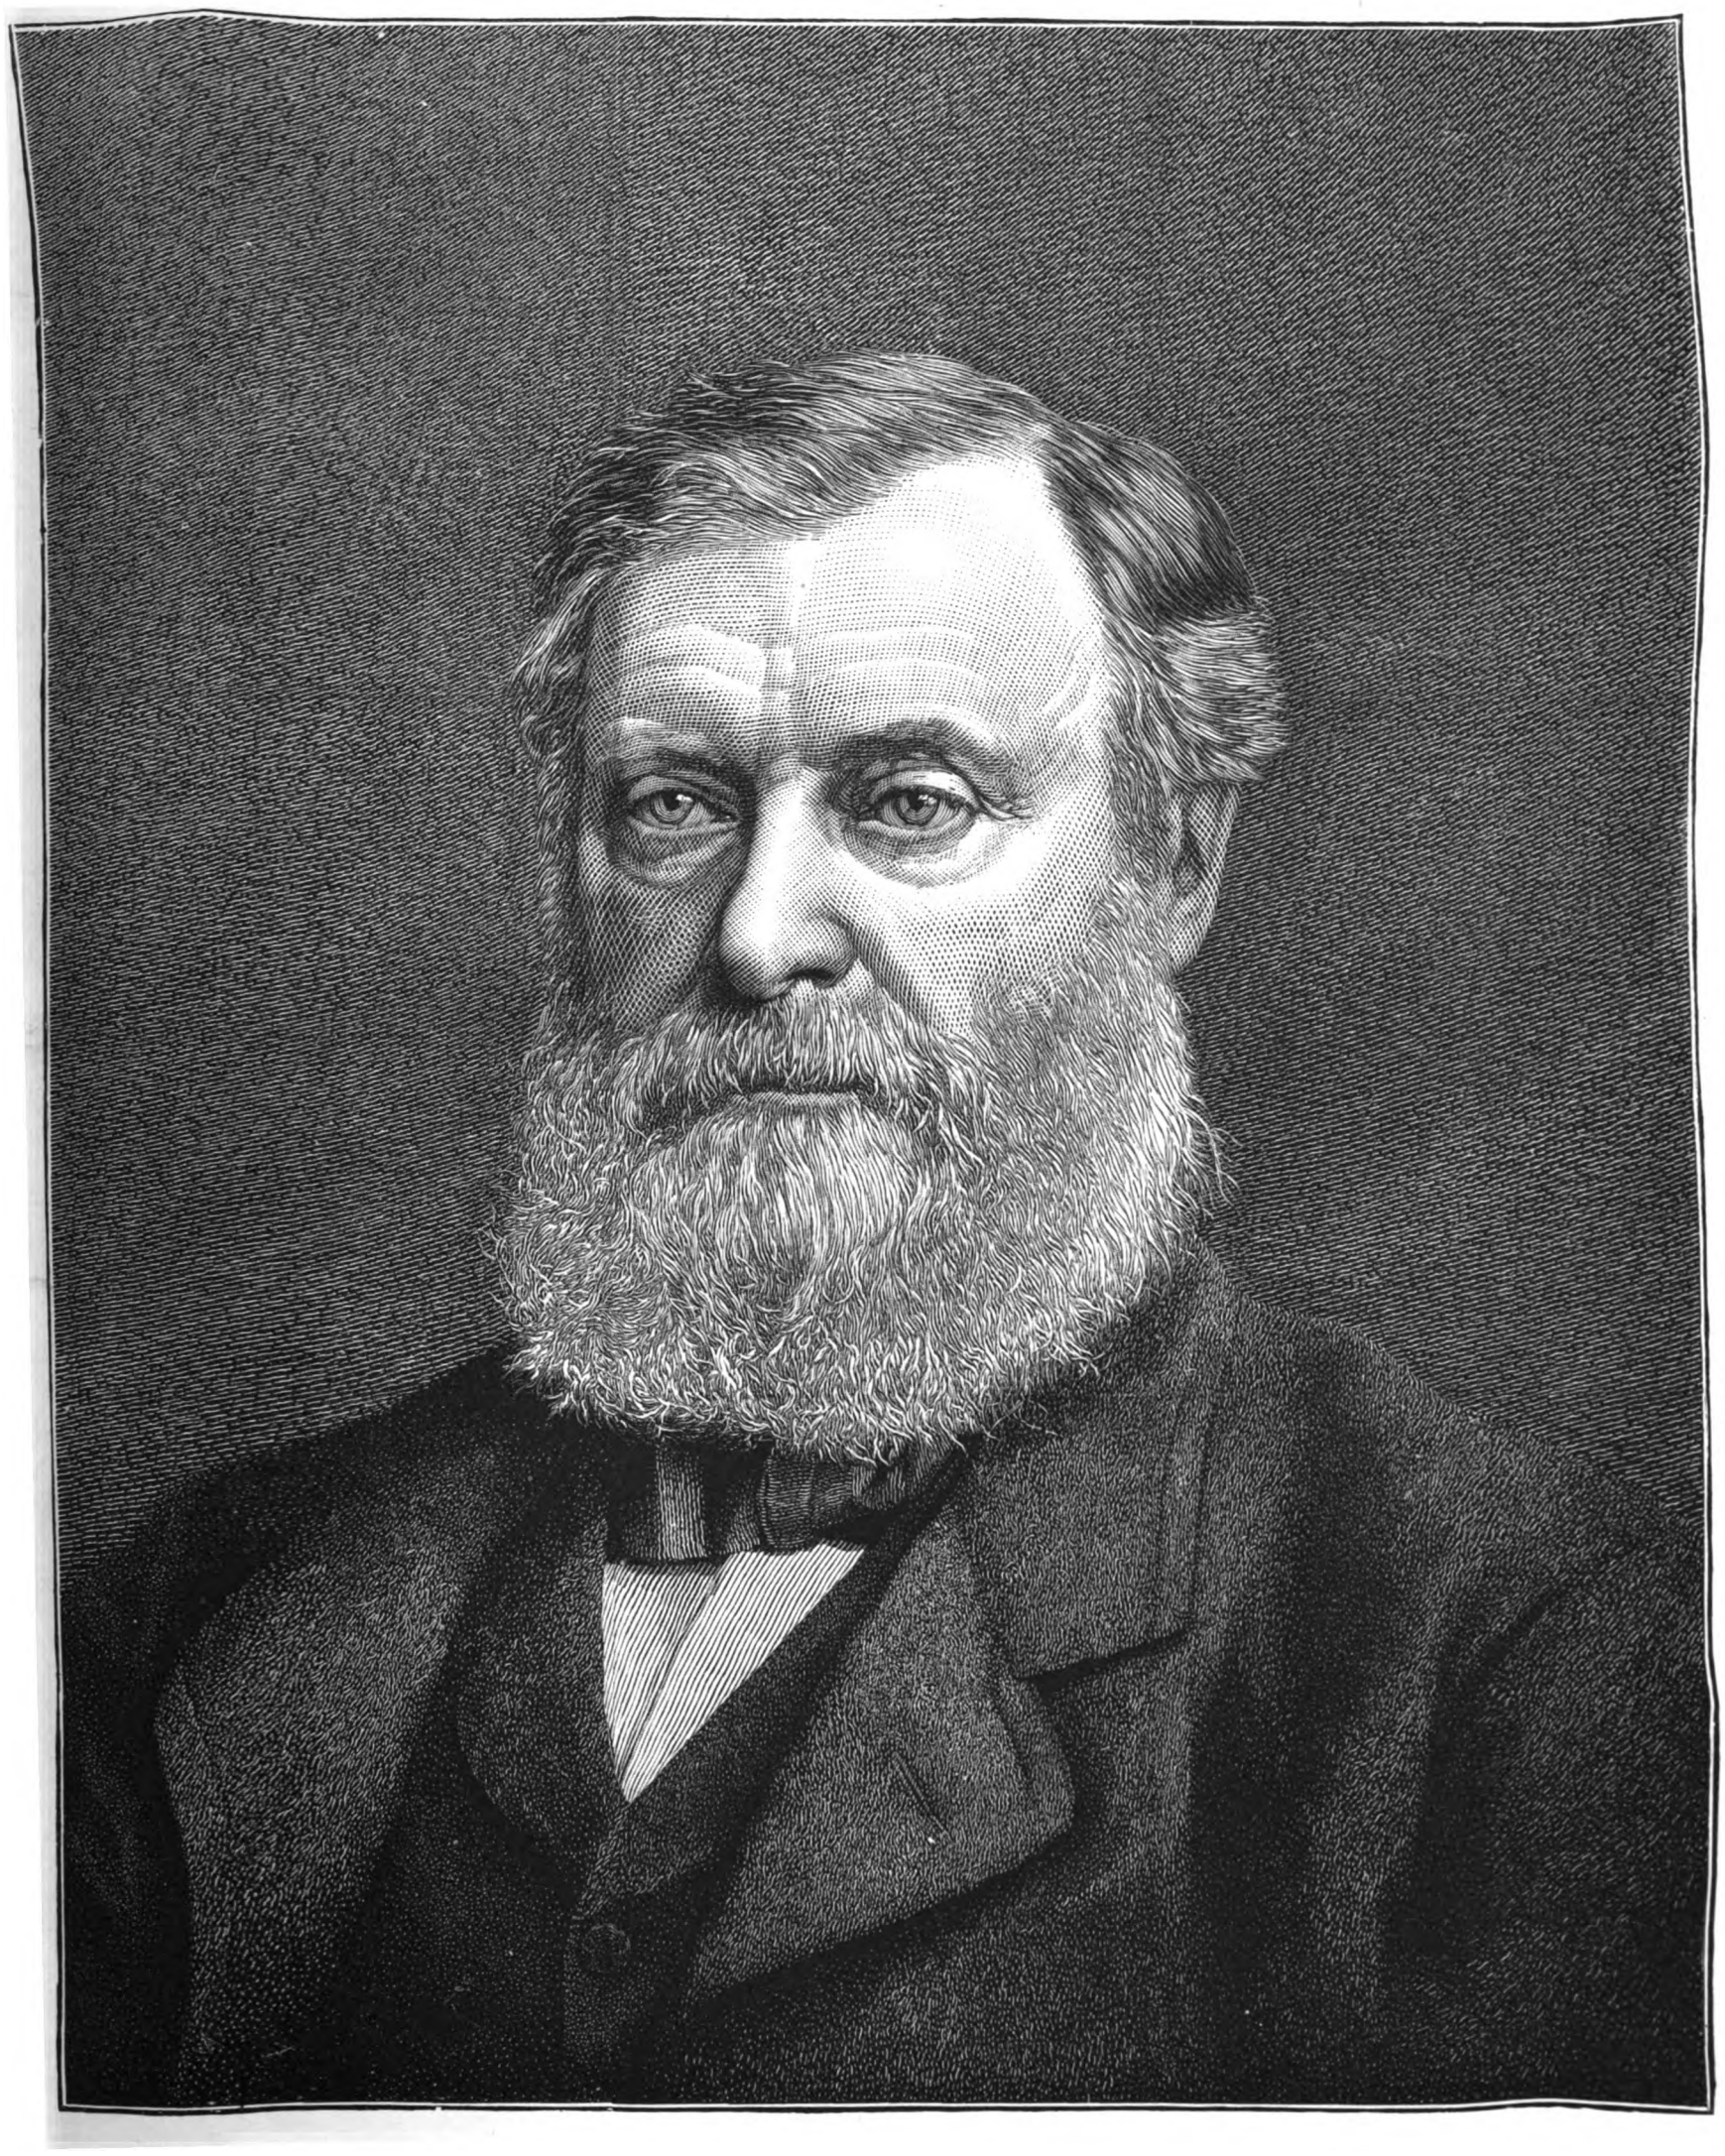
ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—In hot or foreign climates it is invaluable. It relieves the system of effete or poisonous matter, the groundwork of fevers and other diseases, which, if retained, poisons the blood and produces the most disastrous consequences. It allays nervous excitement and restores the nervous system to its proper condition (by natural means).

DRAWING AN OVER DRAUGHT ON THE BANK OF LIFE.—Late hours, fagged, unnatural excitement, breathing impure air, too rich food, alcoholic drink, gouty, rheumatic, and other blood poisons; biliousness, sick-headache, skin eruptions, pimples on the face, want of appetite, sourness of stomach, &c. Use ENO'S FRUIT SALT—it is PLEASANT, COOLING, HEALTH-GIVING, REFRESHING, and INVIGORATING. You cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or whisky largely diluted with soda-water will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

NEW GUINEA.—"How I wished I had a dozen bottles of ENO'S FRUIT SALT! It is the best medicine I ever had, and the most refreshing drink I have yet tried."—Explorations by the Rev. J. Chalmers, London Missionary Society.

ST. LEONARD'S, EXETER.—22.6.80. "Dear Sir,—Gratitude for benefits derived has suggested the following tribute to the merits of your Saline: 'I'm offered more physics, fresh powders, new pills, from north and from south, west, and east; I take only one, whatever my ills, for ENO'S as good as a feast.'—I am, Sir, yours gratefully, A CONSTANT READER."



SUCCESS IN LIFE.—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

CAUTION.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1880.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

These Echoes would be pale and feeble reflexes of social converse, indeed, were I to fail to record that the one absorbing topic of public interest since Saturday last has been the illness of Mr. Gladstone. An interest as deep is felt, be assured, from New York to San Francisco, in India, in China, and wheresoever, the whole world over, the electric wire reaches. Without the slightest exaggeration, it may be said that the eyes of all civilisation are fixed upon the house in Downing-street where the illustrious statesman—the just and good man—lies sick. Not any of us can do more than pray and hope for the best.

It was on Friday last week, at the Criterion Restaurant, that the Savage Club entertained the principal American actors now in London. The banquet was, I hear, a very brilliant one, and one of the most telling speeches delivered was that of Mr. James Russell Lowell. His Excellency the American Minister is, as most people know, a fluent and polished speaker; but whenever, I should like to know, did an American public man speak ill? I remember, some eighteen years since, being a guest at a very large dinner party at a beautiful place called New Rochelle, near New York. There was much speechifying. The day (it was August) was insufferably hot; and there was much champagne. So much, indeed, that my next neighbour to the right (he was a Senator from out West, I think) became, what with the Dry Heidseck and the torrid atmosphere, painfully drowsy, and at length went fast asleep.

I began to be a little nervous when I heard him snore sonorously; for I knew that his name was down on the list of toasts to propose the health of the Visitors: a sentiment to which I myself had been appointed to respond. "He'll never do it. It's not in him," I murmured to myself as he continued to snore. But, when the appointed time arrived, and the Western Senator was gently shaken by a waiter, he suddenly started "on eend," as they say in the Eastern States, shook his lion-like mane, pulled himself together, and, in thunderous accents, began: "Sir,—When Prince Eugene, at the Battle of Malplaquet, gave the command for a general advance, the spectacle of the alliance of two great and powerful nations was made magnificently manifest; and the whole British line greeted the gallant Savoyard with a ringing cheer. And, Sir, well has the honourable gentleman from Vermont who has just spoken observed," &c., &c., &c. But the Senator from the West had been asleep and snoring while the honourable gentleman from Vermont was perorating. What an error I had committed. It was in him. It was always in him. Every American is born, rhetorically speaking, an Infant Hercules, and in his cradle strangles the serpents of hesitation and mauvaise honte.

In the matter of François Rabelais. A lady writes (with sweet ingenuousness) from Watford to ask if the novel of Messrs. Besant and Rice, "The Monks of Thelema," which, she remarks, is one of her most favourite books, is founded on the story of the Monks of Medmenham Abbey, or whether it is "a parody on them?" Concerning those last unworthy friars, my correspondent remarks that she has consulted many books, but can find nothing. I think that my correspondent will find quite as much as a lady ought to know about the wicked monks of "the Order of St. Francis," who were wont to carouse at Medmenham Abbey, Bucks, in Percy Fitzgerald's "Life of Sterne." I may add that for years I have been trying to obtain a complete list of the members of this exceptionally naughty cénacle. John Wilkes, Charles Churchill, Sir Francis Dashwood, Lord le Despencer, Sir William Stanhope, Bubb Doddington, Dr. Benjamin Bates, John Hall Stevenson (who wrote "Crazy Tales"), and Paul Whitehead, seem all to have been Monks of Medmenham. Were there any more?

And I, too, as well as my ingenuous correspondent from Watford, am a querist in this regard. Where and by whom was first told the story that one summer afternoon, when the fun of the dissolute Monks was at its fastest and most furious stage, there suddenly occurred a violent thunderstorm, in the midst of which a monkey came down the chimney? The poor little beast had escaped from a neighbouring house; but begrimed with soot, rattling his broken chain, and grinning horribly, he looked (in combination with the thunderstorm) so very "uncanny" that the wicked Monks, half-paralysed with terror, fell on their knees and tried to pray.

A gentleman from Bermondsey is mildly angry with me for having coupled the name of Parnell the Quaker with "Dr. Tanner's wretched history." The gentleman from Bermondsey should be angry not with me, but with the late Robert Southey, LL.D., from one of whose commonplace books (London, Longman, 1849) I took the story about Parnell's fast, told by Underhill. My correspondent from Bermondsey opines that I know little of the persecutions of the early Quakers. I beg to state that I have made the story of their sufferings, both in England and in America, a topic of special study these many years past. I entertain the very deepest respect for the members of the Society of Friends, dating from the time when they ceased to be persecuted and became sane; but I scarcely think that the county magistrates were always and altogether to blame for dealing harshly with the early Quakers, looking at the outrageously crackbrained things which some of them did. Does my correspondent remember the story of what one of the Quaker historians calls the "peculiar concern" of the young Quaker damsel to whom it occurred to walk into a church (or "steeple-house"), in sight of the whole congregation, in the sumptuary condition of Hans Breitmann's mermaid—that is to say, "mid nodings on." Our ancestors, no doubt, were shockingly intolerant in religious matters; but was toleration quite practicable in such a ca ?

Mem.: The county magistrates could sometimes mingle a little mercy with their severity towards the early Friends. In a case (quoted in the "Sufferings") of two recalcitran Quakeresses, I find that, while one was doomed to be scourged at the cart's tail, her sister in misfortune was only sentenced to "walk with the cart"—an inconvenient but not painful perambulation.

"How soon we are forcot." "'Twas not Hans Breitmann (when are you coming back to Britishdom, well-beloved Hans?) but Rip van Winkle in the play, who uttered the trite but pathetic truism. Penning that paragraph about the Monks of Medmenham just now, I could not help reflecting upon the utter oblivion into which most of the members of that jovial, graceless crew have drifted. Jack Wilkes is yet a name of power, and there are still readers of Churchill's "Rosciad" and "Ghost" (I dare say that Mr. Dutton Cook knows the writings of the Rev. Charles by heart), but who (save the bookworms) cares anything at this time of day about "Crazy Tales" Stevenson, or Bubb Doddington, or Dr. Benjamin Bates?

Yes; "How soon we are forcot!" I find "Atlas" in the World this week enumerating the members of a very merry literary, dramatic, and social club by the name of the Fielding, which some five-and-twenty years ago used to meet late at night, in an upper room in Maiden-lane, hard by the Cyder Cellars. "Atlas" mentions in the list—W. M. Thackeray, G. H. Lewes, Albert Smith, William Bolland (the original of "F. B.," in "The Newcomes"), Serjeant Murphy, Frank Talfourd, W. P. Hale, Leigh Murray, Charles Kenney, the two Cuthbert Ellisons, H. P. de Bathe, John Bidwell, William Beverly, John Leech, W. T. Bowlby, the Hon. W. Grey, Morgan John O'Connell, J. W. Davison, Richard Arabin, T. Knox Holmes, Sam Brandram, "Johnny" Jones, C. A. Cole, and Peter Cunningham.

It is always perilous to name people as having joined the majority, since it often happens that the people you assumed to have joined that majority, long ago, write from Walton-on-the-Naze or Lyme Regis to tell you that they are only seventy-eight, and that they never felt better. But surely I am not wrong in saying that of the twenty-nine "jolly good fellows" who heard the chimes at midnight, at the Fielding, a quarter of a century since, at least twenty are dead.

They were all in their day notable men; but of some of them the repute has long since passed into "the portion of weeds and outworn faces." W. P. Hale, otherwise "Billy" Hale, was one of the sons of Archdeacon Hale, Master of the Charterhouse. "Billy," a bright scholar and humourist, was very partial to beer, and it was of him Thackeray said, paraphrasing the immortal bard:—"Take him for half and half, we ne'er shall look upon his like again." William Bolland, likewise saluted as "Billy," and the son of a well-known Baron of the Exchequer, was a jovial but impecunious bachelor, who entertained his friends in a large mansion, in the hall of which was placarded the following notice:—"The income of the Proprietor of this Establishment is not to be made a subject of conversation." Morgan John O'Connell was one of the "Liberator's" sons, had sat in Parliament, and was one of the kindest and cleverest and merriest Irish gentlemen that I ever met with; poor dear Frank Talfourd, had he lived, would have been the compeer of Mr. Burnand and Mr. Byron as a writer of burlesques; and Mr. John Bidwell was a distinguished Foreign Office official, who also won renown as an amateur harlequin, and was humorously warned by Lord Palmerston that "after one more appearance in spangles" he must resign.

Wyndham Smith, nicknamed "the Assassin," because, while an undergraduate at college, he nocturnally and accidentally slew a cat, was a son of Sydney Smith, Canon of St. Paul's. T. W. Bowlby was (I think, but am open to correction) the unfortunate gentleman dispatched by the Times to China as special correspondent during the war of 1857, who, with other Englishmen, was most cruelly done to death by the "silken savages." We made the nasty creatures pay heavily for murdering Mr. Bowlby and his fellows. Finally, "Johnny" Jones was a sculptor of distinction, who rivalled Morgan John himself as a teller of Irish stories and a singer of Irish songs. He (J. J.) took me to dine once at the Beefsteak Club, of which he was a member—the real Beefsteak Club, I mean—the "Sublime Society of Steaks," which held its symposia in an upper room of the Lyceum Theatre. I shall always remember my dinner with the Steaks with a kind of awe. There was a Duke there (I am not afraid of Dukes); but there were also present two ex-Chancellors, together with the late Sir Charles Locock and the late Sir Henry Holland. And I am afraid of lawyers and doctors.

"Ring out the old, ring in the new!" A new Fielding Club is, I learn, shortly to be "inaugurated." I know nothing of its composition; but it does not seem to please "Atlas," who remarks that "the aristocratic element, however uncongenial, is the basis of the club, and a few professedly comic and amusing people are admitted, to make sport."

If anything were needed in confirmation of the statement that Charles Dickens was the author of the "comic burletta," in one act, called "Is She his Wife? or Something Singular," it would be found in the original play-bill of the St. James's Theatre sent me by an obliging and anonymous correspondent, in which bill, dated the eleventh of March, 1837, it is distinctly stated that the "comic burletta" in question is "by Boz." The performances commenced with Weber's opera of "Oberon," done into English as an "operatic burletta," under the title of "The Enchanted Horn," the English librettist being the late Mr. T. R. Planché. Boz's "Is She his Wife?" came second. After that was performed, another "operatic burletta," called the "French Refugee," written by the still happily living Mrs. S. C. Hall. The entertainments (surely a most liberal bill of fare) concluded with yet another "burletta," "The Tradesmen's Ball." For the ensuing Monday (Harley's benefit night) was promised "Mr. Pickwick's First Visit to the St. James's Theatre."

Mem.: It was to evade the clauses of a vexatious Act of Parliament that all these pieces were classed as "burlettas." "Oberon" is a grand opera; "Is She his Wife?" and "The Tradesmen's Ball" were farces pure and simple; and Mrs. S. C. Hall's "French Refugee" was a most graceful and pathetic genteel comedy, in which the hero was played by Morris Barnett and the heroine by Miss Allison, afterwards the lamented Mrs. Seymour. The "Refugee" was made colourably operatic by the dragging in (by the head and shoulders) of a gifted English cantatrice, Miss Julia Smith. She was a niece of the Countess of Essex, once the famous Miss Stephens (I think) who sang "The Mountain Maid" to oblige, not Benson, but the vexatious Act of Parliament.

In another St. James's playbill, sent to me by the same kind hand, for Nov. 9, 1836, I find John Braham, after playing Artabanes, in the "Serious Burletta" (shade of propriety and Dr. Arne!) of "Artaxerxes," singing "Mad Tom" in character, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. G. Stansbury. Does anybody ever sing "Mad Tom" nowadays? Did Mr. Sims Reeves ever sing it? I have a very dim recollection of Braham in this frenzied ditty, the remembrance of which, I apprehend, has got confused in my mind with Mr. Henry Russell's "Maniac," which a few years afterwards took the town by storm.

The mention of two such names as those of John Braham and Sims Reeves at once recalls Charles Dibdin's "operatic burletta" of "The Waterman," and the exquisite songs of Tom Tug. Now, the charming ballad of "The Jolly Young Waterman" suggests to me a curious question. It may not be generally known that the exemplary Hannah More, who lived long enough to have been the friend of Dr. Johnson and (in her old age), to pat little Thomas Babington Macaulay on the head (the child, with his head full of Robinson Crusoe, asked the authoress of the "Sacred Dramas" whether she would partake of a glass of spirits), once wrote a comic song. It has a very serious moral tacked to it; but it is, nevertheless, professedly comic, and is to be sung to the tune of "I wish I was a Fisherman." The title is "The Hackney Coachman; or the Way to Get a Good Fare." It commences—

> I am a bold coachman, and drive a good hack,
> With a coat of five capes that quite covers my back.
> My wife keeps a sausage-shop, not many miles
> From the narrowest alley in all broad St. Giles.

Now, mark this verse:—

> Then my glasses are whole, and my coach is so neat,
> I am always the first to be called in the street.
> And I'm known by the name ('tis a name rather rare)
> Of the coachman that never asks more than his fare.

Does not all this irresistibly suggest Tom Tug, who was "Always First Oars with the fine City Ladies," and who, as a waterman, "ne'er was in want of a Fare." Was the resemblance between the exemplary Hannah's "Hackney Coachman" and Dibdin's "Jolly Young Waterman" accidental; or did Hannah paraphrase Charles for a pious purpose, or did Charles parody Hannah with mischievous intent?

Mem.: The good lady's anything but comic ballad of "The Ginshop" is really a most powerful production. It should be sung at the Coffee Music-Hall, the opening of which I am anxiously expecting. Here are two stanzas:—

> But hark! What dismal sound was that?
> 'Tis Saint Sepulchre's bell!
> It tolls, alas! for human guilt!
> Some malefactor's knell.
> O! woful sound! O! what could cause
> Such punishment and sin?
> Hark! hear his words. He owns the cause:
> Bad company and gin.

A gentleman writing to apprise me of Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild, M.P., having munificently built and presented a new reading-room and library to the town of Aylesbury, is good enough to speak with approbation of the small library of reference for the use of journalists which I ventured to give last week, and proceeds to ask me whether I could not draw up a list of books which might be useful to general readers. I am afraid that I am about the worst counsellor to whom application could be made for such a list. I know my own trade pretty well, and for the benefit of my fellow-journeymen alone I named the tools with which I have been accustomed to work; but in the matter of general reading I might prove worse than a blind guide. I might be a mischievous one. I should say that Mr. Bickers's printed catalogue would afford the most practical hints towards the formation of a library of moderate size, and for general readers.

I must own that I felt rather nervous and slightly guilty last week after penning that paragraph about alamode beef, and that I would willingly have cancelled the whole passage had there been time to stop the press. The lines were written on the impulse of the moment, when fond remembrance was o'er me stealing, and the Thirteen Cantons rose up before me as visions of "scenes so charming"—the cari luoghi. But, then, alamode beef is such a very vulgar viand. I tremulously expected to receive letters from scandalised correspondents sarcastically asking me what I had to say about tripe and cow-heel, and ironically seeking an opinion touching baked sheep's head.

Vain alarms! There lies before me a memorandum subscribed "S. B., Brixton," and written in a neat Italian hand, in which I am informed that the special flavour of alamode beef is due to the admixture therein of the powder of champignons. I should as soon have thought of Swift's "powder of Perlinpinpin." My informant goes on to say that the small mushrooms known as champignons are dried and powdered or are threaded and hung up for winter use. By some a catsup (I prefer "ketchup," orthographically) is prepared from the mushrooms and added the sauce; "but the best houses," concludes my informant, who is evidently an expert, "use the powders." More than this, the editor of the World, who as an epicure may be considered an Apicius, Lucullus, Cambacères, Brillat Savarin, and Lord Alvanley rolled into one—who habitually breakfasts on clear turtle, lunches on nightingale's brains, dines on ortolans sanpoudris with truffles (the white ones), and sups on humming-birds' tongues and the soft roes of whitebait stewed in the Launcelot champagne—is good enough to say in his current week's issue that many a time and oft, in his younger days, he has partaken of the "fourpenny plate" at that which he believes to have been the last alamode beef-house in London—Ball's, in Butcher Hall-lane, out of Newgate-street.

THE CITY OF CANDAHAR.

The town and citadel of Candahar, which now engage anxious attention, have held a beleaguered British force in bygone times and have been associated with the successes of the British arms in a campaign which was otherwise full of disaster. An Adjutant-General of the Persian army, J. P. Ferrier, previously a Chasseur d'Afrique, wrote a book on "Caravan Wanderings" in Persia, Afghanistan, and Turkestan, and the unpublished manuscript was translated by Captain W. Jesse, and edited by the late H. D. Seymour, M.P. In the course of the wanderings thus described, the author came to Candahar, the citadel of which he speaks of contemptuously as "without glacis, ravelin, or flanking defence to defend a long line of curtain;" but he adds, "it was strong enough, when held by a very weak garrison of British troops on March 29, 1842, to resist the whole Afghan army of 10,000 men." The occasion of which he speaks was when it was held by General Nott, whose force of Bombay troops withstood the insurgents and ultimately defeated them.

General Ferrier states that, in 1845, the citadel of Candahar was in good condition, "having been strengthened by the British when they held it." What was its state a few years before, we can see by the narrative of the late General Sir Henry Havelock, who, as Captain Henry Havelock, Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Sir Willoughby Cotton, wrote "The War of Afghanistan, 1838-9." The young soldier wrote:—

"Candahar is situated on an extensive level, which is bounded on the north and west by picturesque mountains of primitive rock. The city is quadrangular and its defences uniform. They consist of a wall of mud hardened by exposure to the sun, 33 ft. in height, without revêtement of stone or brick. The enceinte is divided into curtains and semicircular towers, is strengthened by a low fausse-braye, and defended by a ditch 10 ft. in depth and 24 ft. in width, at present only imperfectly filled with water, but which could in a few hours be well supplied from the canals of the Argandab that intersect the city. The southern side of this vast area is 1300 ft., the northern 1100 ft., the eastern 1600 ft., and the western (which is, in fact, two sides meeting in a large angle) 1900 ft. in length. There are four great gates in this extensive city wall (shuhur punah). The northern is entitled the Eedgah, the southern the Shikarpore, the eastern the Cabul, the western the Herat gate. Besides these, there are two less considerable portals in the eastern and western fronts of fortification, denominated the Berdurani and the Topkhanee, or artillery. The parapet is battlemented, loopholed, and pierced, as is the custom in Asiatic fortresses, with apertures for the purposes of throwing vertical missiles into the ditch. The towers, including those over the gates and at the four grand angles of the place, are sixty-two in number, and guns might have been mounted on these, as the rampart is wide, and there are good embrasures in the parapet; but, such has been the neglect of the Barakzais, that we found their artillery, consisting of some twenty indifferent pieces, parked in the open space in front of their citadel. That defence consists of an inner quadrangle of 200 yards retrenched in the centre of the northern face. Within its inclosure are the several courts and apartments of the Royal palace, lately usurped, together with the rule of their master, by the brothers of Futteh Khan. Its wall is protected on three sides by a good fosse; there is a large bastion in its southern face, and four small towers flank its eastern and four more its western front. The principal angles of the outer wall of the city are covered with circular counter-guards. Such, as a place of strength, is Candahar. Even if treachery and pusillanimity had not opened its gates to us, it is not probable it could long have resisted the fire of our batteries and the onset of our troops. The Sirdars might, if they had acted with ordinary resolution, have got together a garrison of 3000 or 4000 troops, for which force they had ample supplies for a full month at least; but there is nothing in the nature of the bulwarks of this capital, or in the character of its constituted defenders, to have saved it from the rapid fall by which two of the strongholds of Central Asia have since been prostrated. Its gates are as vulnerable as those of Ghazni or Khelat; and in any event an extensive wall, flanked only by very paltry towers, could not have offered a protracted resistance to its assailants if they had proceeded by the slower methods of a regular siege."

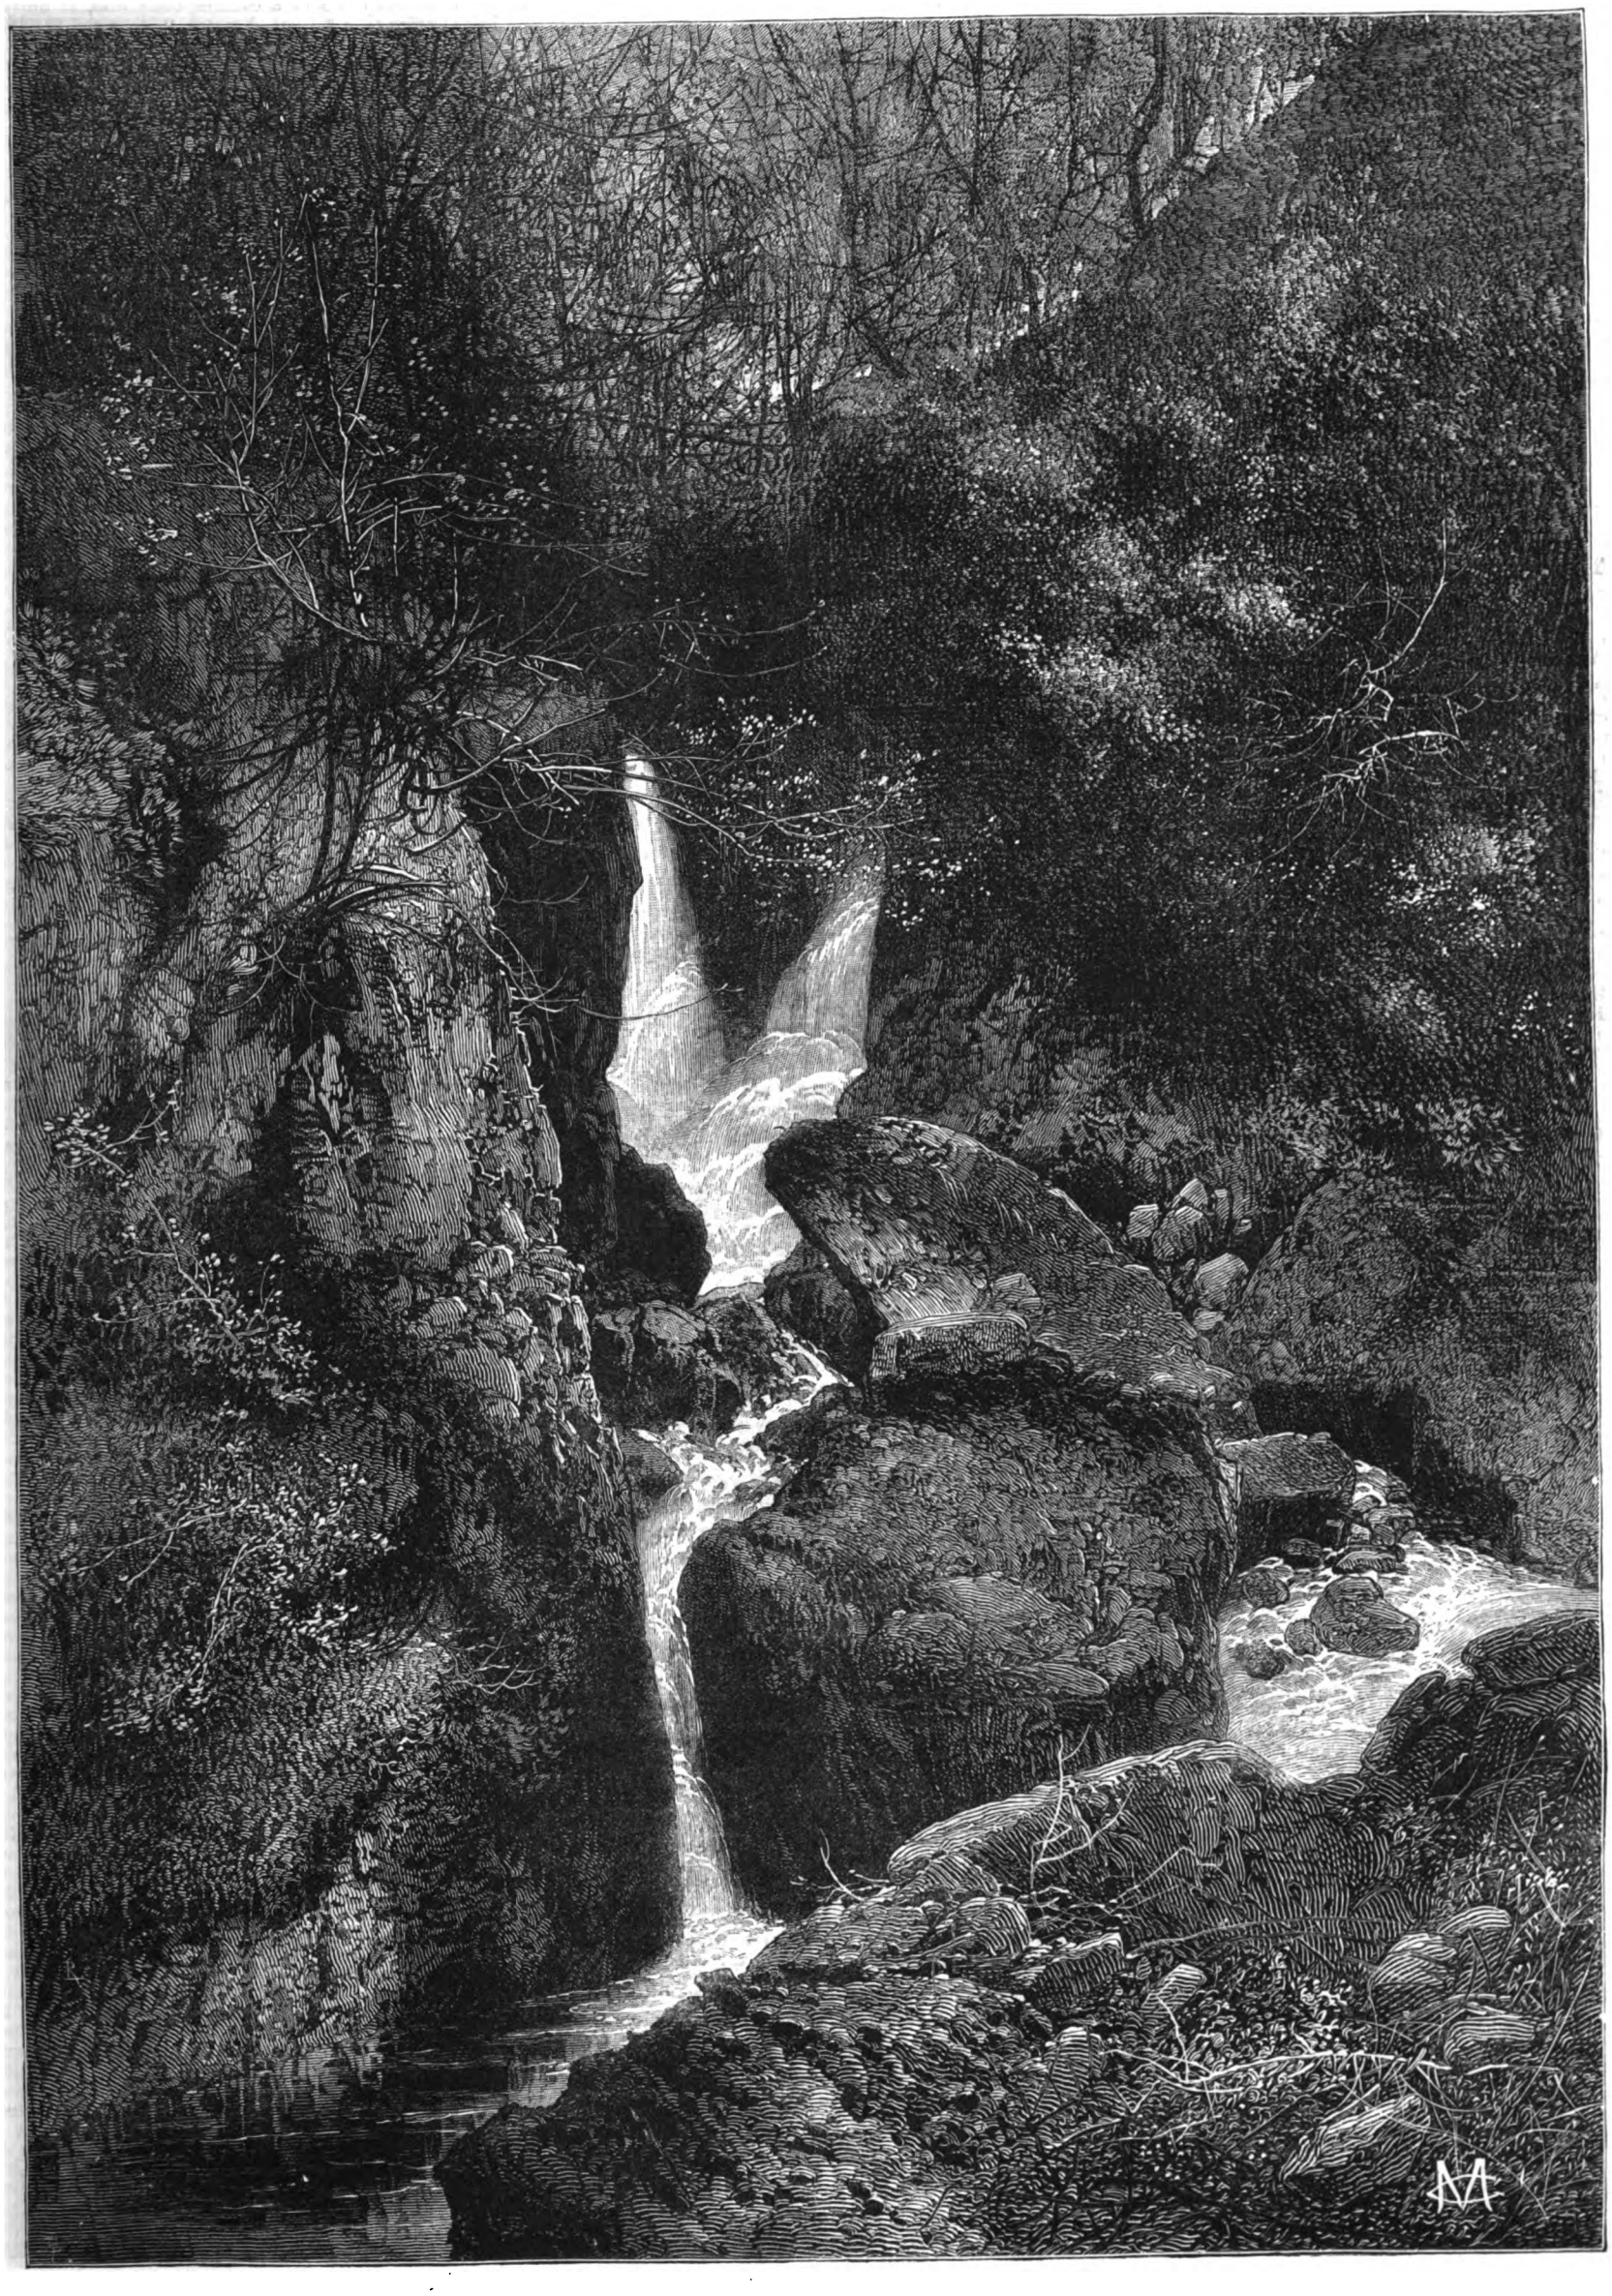
In a history of Afghanistan, published only two years ago, Colonel Malleson gives a description of the city which is of interest at this moment. He says:—



"The town of Candahar, situated at the foot of the Tarnah Valley, is separated from the river of that name by a short range of hills which divide the lower part of the valley and run parallel with the river for about twenty miles. Candahar is encompassed on three sides by high, sharp-pointed, rocky mountains, rising abruptly from the plain. The open side is that leading along the valley of the Tarnah. A considerable portion of the valley of Candahar is, in an ordinary way, fertile and well cultivated. It can boast of rich meadows, gardens, orchards filled with fruit-trees, fields of corn, barley, lucern, clover, and watered by numerous canals, fed through the break in the hills by the waters of the Argandab, one of the tributaries of the Helmund. These cultivated lands are chiefly on the south-western and western sides of the town. Three or four miles to the east the traveller encounters a portion of a cheerless plain, covered with stones, and scantily supplied with water. The town of Candahar is large and populous. Its form is that of an oblong square, 2000 by 1600 yards (about a mile square). Situated on the north side of the extensive plain called after the town, about two miles from the lofty mountain called Bala Wali, it is surrounded by a high but thin and weak wall, with several bastions. Its walls are 30 ft. high. The four principal bazaars, or streets, lead from the gateways and meet nearly in the centre of the town in a large circular building, covered with a dome about 120 ft. in diameter, called the charsu. This place is surrounded by shops, and it is regarded as a public market-place. The streets which converge in it divide the town into four nearly equal districts. The other streets in the town are mere lanes, formed by the narrow space between the high houses—houses far more lofty than those of the principal streets. The climate of Candahar is very dry, and in every respect superior to that of Hindostan. . . . Corn and most of the necessaries of life are dear at Candahar. Firewood is also very scarce. It is difficult to fix the number of inhabitants. Mountstuart Elphinstone declines to make the attempt. It seems to be acknowledged, however, that the population is in excess of that of Herat. If the Heratis may be estimated, as they have been, at 45,000, the Candaharis may possibly number 60,000."

STOCK GILL FORCE.

The residents in the neighbourhood of Ambleside, at the head of Windermere, have made a laudable effort to secure this beautiful piece of romantic natural scenery for the public enjoyment. It is situated but ten minutes walk out of the village of Ambleside, in a copse bearing the name of Nelly Close, on the side of Wansfell, a mountain rising to the height of 1590 ft. Stock Gill or Ghyll is a stream flowing down from Kirkstone, north-east of Ambleside, to join the Rothay before it enters Lake Windermere. The "force," or waterfall, descends 70 ft. in three successive cascades, the two highest divided by projecting rocks from each other; below stands a picturesque old mill, which has been a favourite subject for artists.

In the year 1878, the property through which lies the path to the Stock Gill Force—a path which had, from time immemorial, been free to the public—was sold by auction. It was purchased by a gardener of Ambleside, who immediately closed it to the public, except upon payment of threepence. A good deal of dissatisfaction being felt at this, a small committee was formed with a view, if possible, of proving the right of way up to the Falls. After some altercation, the matter was brought before a court of law at Liverpool, and the very best counsel were engaged on either side. The jury, however, could not agree, and the matter was still unsettled. Hereupon, a committee of fifteen townspeople decided to purchase the property, if the owner would part with it at a reasonable price. The terms were settled, and the purchase was effected. The Committee are bound, by the terms of the transfer, to hand over the grounds to a properly-constituted local authority to be free to the public for ever, when their purchase-money has been refunded. They are making strenuous efforts to accomplish their object as speedily as possible. The amount to be raised is £2000. A grand bazaar in aid of the fund is to be held on Aug. 10 and two following days, in the grounds of Stock Gill Force. We now present an Illustration of Stock Gill Force, and commend the matter to our readers' liberality, hoping that many of them will enjoy a visit to the Lake district in the present season.

Ambleside is certainly the best place to choose for their head-quarters, being within a morning's walk of Rydal and Grasmere, and commanding all the upper part of Windermere as far as Bowness, which is easily accessible by railway. This seems a fit opportunity for noticing a newly published guide-book, Mr. M. J. Baddeley's "Thorough Guide to the English Lake District," issued by Messrs. Dulau and Co., of Soho-square. It contains an excellent series of coloured maps, the general map on a scale of three miles to the inch, and the section maps one mile to the inch, corrected from the Ordnance Survey. The colours indicate the differences of surface altitude, at intervals of 500 ft. in height; the ground lower than 500 ft. being tinted whitish green, that from 500 ft. to 1000 ft. green; from 1000 ft. to 1500 ft. whitish brown; still higher ground full brown, and so on, which shows the contour of the land very well. The descriptive commentary is pleasantly and sensibly written, and the directions to pedestrian tourists are sufficiently precise.

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

Under this heading will be found, in the second sheet of our present publication, all the details yet received of the disastrous conflict on Tuesday week, the 27th ult., near Khushk-i-Nakhud, fifty miles west of Candahar; the defeat and partial destruction of the brigade commanded by General Burrows, with the loss of 1200 lives on our side; a large proportion consisting of British troops; the situation of the garrisons of Candahar and Khelat-i-Ghilzai, which are likely to be closely beleaguered; the movements of our forces in Afghanistan to their relief, and of additional reinforcements from India. A narrative of the events of six weeks preceding this military catastrophe, borrowed from one of our daily contemporaries, is also subjoined; while descriptions of the city and fortress of Candahar, of the approach to it from the south, and of the country westward to the River Helmund, with Views of the scenery, maps and plans of the topography, are prepared for this Number of our Journal. We are indebted to Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph for the most important Sketches of the Helmund at Girishk, where the first check to British arms, by the desertion of the Wali's infantry to Ayoub Khan, seems to have taken place; we have to thank Brigadier-General W. Fane for one of the Citadel and town gate of Candahar. Two other views of that city have been reprinted from our former Numbers; one of them having appeared on Oct. 2, 1878, and the other, showing the cantonments of General Sir Donald Stewart, on Sept. 20, 1879. The description of Candahar accompanies the first-mentioned Engraving on our fourth page, and that of the neighbouring country, supplied by the lecture of Sir M. Biddulph to the United Service Institution, is printed with the Map on page 152. Our Illustrations include a Portrait of Abdurrahman, the newly-appointed Ameer of Cabul, and some representations of Royal Horse Artillery and detachments of the 66th Regiment on the march, and a scene of actual combat, British infantry soldiers standing together at bay, when surrounded by a vastly superior force of Afghan horsemen, which is figured on the front page.

There is at the hour of this present writing, on Wednesday evening, little or no news of the military situation. It is apprehended that the next move will be to attack the British outpost at Chaman, on the road from Quetta to Candahar, aided by a gathering of tribesmen in that district, to cut off the reinforcements sent to the relief of General Primrose. We learn by a telegram of last Tuesday from Cabul that a division of over 8000 troops, under Sir F. Roberts, will march upon Candahar, viâ Ghuzni, on Sunday next. The division will include the following British regiments — the 60th, 72nd, and 92nd Foot, and the 9th Lancers. The Viceroy of India announces that the reinforcements proceeding from Bombay and Bengal by the Bolan line for Candahar and the communications are—from Bengal, H Royal Artillery and another battery not named, 15th Hussars, 8th Bengal Cavalry, 63rd Foot, 3rd and 4th Native Infantry; from Bombay, 5-8 Royal Artillery, Mountain Battery (just started from Poona), 78th Foot, 13th and 15th Native Infantry.

The dispatch of large military reinforcements from England to India has, during the past eight days, incessantly occupied the War Office, the Admiralty, and the India Office at Westminster; and there has been great activity at Portsmouth, Woolwich, Aldershott, and other military centres. The troops immediately to be sent out from England are the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, 1st battalion, from Woolwich, the 77th regiment, the 1st battalion of the Rifle Brigade, proceeding direct to Bombay; while from the Mediterranean stations will be sent the 2nd battalion of the 24th, the 61st, and the 98th regiments. The Orontes and the Tamar are the first troop-ships to start, probably by the end of this week; they take out reliefs for the Malta and Gibraltar garrisons, part of which may then be available for service in Afghanistan.

A large new sea-water swimming-bath was on Monday opened at Ilfracombe.

A deputation of medical men had an interview yesterday week with Earl Spencer and Mr. Mundella to ask for a reform of the Medical Council by the direct representation of the profession upon it, and that the character of the examinations should be improved. Mr. Mundella pointed out that the Medical Council was very powerful in Parliament, and that very little could be done without unanimity among medical men themselves. Earl Spencer promised that the careful attention of the Government should be devoted to the subject.

At the meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works yesterday week the engineer and the consulting chemist submitted a report with reference to the recent fatal gas explosion near Tottenham-court-road. This document, a copy of which was ordered to be sent to each of the London gas companies, urged the desirability of calling the attention of gas companies generally to the danger of applying a naked light to the top of a stand-pipe connected with the main, as was done in this case, an act which ought never to be repeated without precautions quite easy of appliance, which would be effective in obviating danger.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Aug. 3.

The political barometer without being at "set fair"—it never is at "set fair"—is oscillating within the limits of "variable," and is certainly very far from storm. The moderate Republicans have long ago come to the conclusion that, in politics as in nature, nothing is done brusquely and by leaps. The Radicals, too, have learnt to look upon the present epoch as one of evolution, and not of revolution. The advanced newspapers are preaching not a campaign of vengeance, as it was prophesied they would when Rochefort, Vallès, Pyat, and the rest of them returned, but a campaign of constitutional reform. The Radicals, with Rochefort at their head, are crying out for a revision of the present Constitution of 1875, which is reactionary in spirit and in form; and there seems, indeed, to be every probability that the next general elections will take place on this platform, two of the leading points of which will be the abolition of the Senate, which Rochefort has compared to the double-six in the game of dominoes, because everybody wants to get rid of it, and the separation of Church and State.

Rochefort's campaign against Gambetta as the leader of the "Opportunist" party is the great event of the day, and his new paper, l'Intransigeant, is read by everybody. The author of La Lanterne and the editor of La Marseillaise was for three years, from 1867 to 1870, the spoilt child of Paris. The Lanterne was devoured by the Empress at the Tuileries, and by the Barons and Counts of the Jockey Club, as eagerly as by the working men over their breakfast at the marchand de vin. But the loves of Paris are generally as capricious as her hatreds. Paris idolises a man and then forgets him utterly. The case of Rochefort is an exception. He has kept up the zeal of the Parisians by the events of his life, by his duels, his lawsuits, which constantly awakened the forgetfulness of the crowd. There is something heroic, too, about the man, and a fearlessness, of which he gave notable proof in his escape from Noumea in 1874. It is curious that, with all his wit and all his prestige, Rochefort is not a man of the crowd, as Gambetta is. He has rather a tendency to avoid crowds and public meetings. Twice the people of Paris have wished to carry him in triumph on their shoulders—on the day of the burial of Victor Noir and when he arrived in Paris on July 12. On both occasions he played hide-and-seek with his admirers and escaped. Au fond, Rochefort is melancholy and a little disgusted with everything. But what a power he represents in Paris! Never did the pamphlets of Paul Louis Courier or the chansons of Béranger approach the vogue of his Intransigeant.

The elections for the partial renewal of the Departmental Conseils Généraux, which took place on Sunday, resulted in an immense increase for the Republican party. These departmental councils are of no practical importance whatever, except in the case of the Senatorial elections, when they form a large portion of the electoral colleges. Still, the increase in the number of the Republican councillors elected is a striking and infallible proof of the progress of the Republic in the favour of the population of France in general.

The French are making serious efforts to get a footing in Central Africa. The Minister of Public Works has sent out a mission to study the line of the proposed Trans-Saharan Railway, and the plan of a railway connecting the colony of Senegal with the Niger is under consideration at the Ministry of the Marine. Last year the French built the fort of Bafoulabé, and thus brought their frontier considerably nearer the Niger; this year they are building a fort at Kita, which will advance their frontier 250 kilomètres and bring them within 250 kilomètres of the river. At the beginning of the year a mission, under the guidance of Captain Gallieni, was sent out to secure the friendship of the tribes through whose territory the railway is to pass. News of the progress of this mission has arrived. The expedition left St. Louis on Jan. 30, and arrived at Kita on April 27, without accident. Captain Gallieni obtained all the concessions necessary for the construction of a fort, and made treaties of friendship with the neighbouring chiefs. The caravan was then formed, and the mission proceeded eastward until May 11, when they were attacked by the Bambarras and lost half their number. The rest escaped, and succeeded in passing the Niger on May 15, and have not since been heard of. The news has been brought by M. Bayol, one of the expedition, who volunteered to return almost alone, and without resources, in order to bring news of the misfortune. The mission has thus only half accomplished its task. On Friday M. Bayol read a paper before the Paris Geographical Society explaining some entirely new details about the upper affluents of the Senegal and the region of the upper Niger.

Everybody knows the romantic legend of the captivity of Richard Cœur de Lion and of his discovery by the faithful troubadour Blondel de Nesles. M. Zeller, the eminent historian, has devoted a part of the forthcoming fourth volume of his "Histoire d'Allemagne" to examining this episode, which is of high importance in connection with the great interests of Christianity, the rivalry of the Guelphs and Ghibellines, and the struggle of the Emperor Henri VI. against Henry of Brunswick, and against ambitious vassals. M. Zeller's fourth volume, an extract from which he read recently before the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, promises to be of extreme interest. I notice it prematurely because it has upset one of the ideas that I had gained from my school history of England, which represented Richard as being kept in close confinement behind bars and bolts. M. Zeller tells us that he was kept in mitigated captivity only at the Château of Trifels in Alsace, and that he was allowed to hunt and to listen to passing minstrels and troubadours. Perhaps, says M. Zeller, Blondel de Nesles was amongst these latter, and received some secret mission from his master. All the same, I regret the old and, of course, inaccurate legend.

I find in Didot's "Biographie Universelle," which maintains the old dungeon theory, that the Castle of Trifels is described as being in the Tyrol. This, however, is an error. The excellent "Biographie Universelle" is, by-the-way, not infallible. You will search in it in vain for the name of Brigham Young; but you will find a capital article on that gentleman under the heading, "Brigham le Jeune!"

M. Récipon, a Radical deputy and millionaire, and a devoted follower of M. Gambetta, has bought half the shares in the Journal des Débats, the political direction of which he will share with M. Léon Say. It is believed, not without reason, that this old and respectable organ will henceforward become a pure Gambettist organ, like the République Française.

Yesterday some sixty amnistiés, who had landed at Brest on the previous day, arrived in Paris. Amongst them is the heroic Garibaldian, Amilcar Cipriani, who was the aide-de-camp of Flourens.

Rochefort has dubbed Gambetta with the title of Satrape Engraissé. The Gambettists offered a first-class prefecture to any journalist or publicist who shall find a definition of Rochefort in reply. There is no lack of competitors, but the vengeful dart has not yet been forged. The best attempt as yet is Le Vampire alourdi.

T. C.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

This column will not bear the title of "Plays and Players" any more. I will not go so far as Messrs. Moore and Burgess, who, in consequence of a dispute about a title with some rival company, solemnly declared that the Christy Minstrels were abolished for ever, but they would be resuscitated in the Moore and Burgess Minstrels; but I cheerfully surrender my title to the dramatic critic of a contemporary who, it appears, has been heading his theatrical notes "Plays and Players" ever since last March; whereas I have only used the title since last June. As I have not been so fortunate as ever to have seen (to my knowledge) the contemporary in question, I hope that I shall not be accused of plagiarism. As for "The Playhouses," that, I take it, as a title, is as much common property as "Money Market and City Intelligence;" but if any critic be of a contrary opinion, and can show a prior claim to my new title, I will call it "the Act Drop" or "the Catcall," "the Orchestra Stall" or "the Shilling Gallery." What is there in a name?

Old Drury wore quite a Boxing-Night aspect on Saturday last, when the good old house was literally crammed by an uproarious but good-tempered and appreciative audience, assembled to witness the first performance of a new sensational and realistic drama, in five acts and nine tableaux, called "The World." Let me hasten to say that the "World," which was from first to last received with clamorous applause, was a distinct, genuine, brilliant, and "all round" success. So the audience, with deafening unanimity declared; and so the critics, with tolerable unanimity, agreed among themselves. It stands to reason that a piece which the authors, Messrs. Paul Meritt, Henry Pettitt, and Augustus Harris, candidly avow to be "sensational and realistic," does not call for any peculiarly laborious or thoughtful criticism. One does not approach it as one does a new impersonation by Mr. Irving or a new piece by Mr. Wills, or Mr. Gilbert, or Mr. Merivale. When sensationalism and realism are boldly inscribed on the banners hung out from the outward walls of the T. R. D. L. the critic has a right to look for little beyond a drama built more or less on the lines of "Formosa," the "Streets of London," the "New Babylon," with, perhaps, a touch of poor Andrew Halliday's "Great City," and a spice of wonderful "Golden Daggers" which promised so much and performed so little, a few years ago. I went to Drury Lane expecting little; but I was agreeably surprised to find a drama with a very simple yet clear and intelligent plot, replete with incidents which can scarcely be called exaggerated, seeing that they are mainly drawn from or suggested by incidents of recent occurrence and in real life, and throughout fertile in features of the liveliest interest. Add to a very skilfully constructed scenario dialogue which makes no pretence to be either very witty or very pathetic, but is, nevertheless frequently bright and vigorous, always intelligible, and wholly devoid of melodramatic clap-trap, scenery, and "getting up" of a really superb nature, and you have before you a few of the causes which contributed to the success of "The World." There may not be precisely "millions in it," as Colonel Mulberry Sellers would say, still, I shall be surprised if the drama of Messrs. Meritt, Pettitt, and Harris does not have a long run, and bring plenty of money into the coffers of Drury Lane.

If there were not I know not how many daily and evening papers, I should very carefully analyse the plot and describe, scene by scene, the incidents in "The World"—and a rare bore you would think me for my pains. But as all the dailies and all the evenings, to say nothing of the Observer on Sunday morning (the dramatic critic of the Observer is the only weekly journalist who takes snuff and drinks green tea: it is only by means of continued repetitions of rappee and macabaw and copious potations of thea viridis that he is able to keep awake so as to finish his article for the Sunday morning edition) have given more or less exhaustive abstracts of the scheme of "The World." I shall merely say that all the five acts hinge on the fortunes and misfortunes of a wealthy English Baronet, Sir Clement Huntingford (Mr. William Rignold), who has a wicked or "hoodlum" brother, Harry Huntingford (Mr. Augustus Harris), whose energies throughout four acts and three quarters are devoted to the task of destroying his virtuous kinsman and getting hold of his title and estates.

The good Sir Clement has, under the pseudonym of Charles Hartley, wooed a guileless damsel, Mary Blythe, who follows the vocation of a governess; but the "hoodlum" Harry, strives to rob his brother of Mary's affections, being himself (the naughty little man) married to a tall and beauteous lady, Mabel Huntingford (Miss Helen Barry), whom he shamefully ill treats, yet who loves him fondly. This is assuredly the "Way of the World." The "hoodlum's" prime coadjutor in villany is a horrible Jew swindler, one Moss Jewell, alias Isidor de Montmorency (Mr. Harry Jackson), who indulges in such pretty little kickshaws of crime as sending parcels of sham diamonds, heavily insured, from the Cape Colony to Europe, together with an infernal machine snugly ensconced in a bale of wool, and warranted to explode at a given time. The wretch is also a frequenter of fancy-dress balls; he discounts bills at sixty per cent, and he makes the most atrocious puns possible of conception. The evolution of the dramatic epopœa comprises the blowing up of the ship with the sham diamonds and half the dramatis personæ on board, a shipwreck, and an (very well managed) exhibition of the dreadful sufferings of the survivors on a raft in mid-ocean; the consumption of much champagne and the concoction of some more villany at the Royal Aquarium; the attempted murder of Sir Clement by his "hoodlum" brother in a room at the Great Hotel, and the real (stage) murder of a subordinate villain named Bashford (Mr. Charles Harcourt). Then there is a scene at a lunatic asylum, whither Sir Clement has been consigned on the certificate of two unscrupulous mad doctors (Messrs. Lilly and Beck), and in the grounds attached to which there is a most forcibly organised "up and down fight" between Sir Clement and the warders.

Virtue is triumphant and vice is punished, at last. The "hoodlum" brother tumbles down the shaft of the litt at his chambers, and the cage which descends immediately after he has fallen exhaustively conveys the idea of his being completely and satisfactorily "squelched." Sir Clement marries Mary Blythe, and settles a handsome annuity on the widowed Mrs. Mabel Huntingford; Moss Jewell and his confederate in rascality, a lawyer named Lumley (Mr. J. R. Gibson), are walked off by the detectives; and "The World"—the Drury Lane one, at least—comes to an end with the long-promised tableau of the fancy ball, in which there is a really magnificent ballet.

Mr. William Rignold played the persecuted Baronet with frank and manly vigour, and in the fight at the lunatic asylum was amazingly active and vigorous; Miss Fanny Josephs was extremely graceful and ladylike as Mary Blythe; and Miss Helen Barry was pathetic, and, at need, powerfully dramatic as the ill-used Mabel. I should award unstinted praise to Mr. Harry Jackson for his thoroughly humorous and by no means overdrawn presentment of Moss Jewell, were

I not altogether sick and tired of the comic Jew on the stage, Mr. Fagin in fashionable attire and patent leather boots, and with a gold-rimmed eyeglass, has become quite as wearisome a personage as Mr. Fagin in a greasy, ragged dressing-gown frying sausages in the Thieves' ken by Saffron-hill.

I am glad to find that the little forecast on which I ventured as to the probability of there being a hundred thousand people at the Alexandra Palace on Bank Holiday was verified. It seems that the total number of visitors who paid for admission to the palace on Monday was 107,832. It would appear that their hunger and thirst was on a par with their numerical strength; since I find from the commissariat returns of the day that the holiday-makers at the Alexandra devoured twenty-two tons of meat; seven tons of potatoes, and 42,000 loaves of bread. The quantity of wine, spirits, and beer (the company being English) was naturally very large; but the lovers of temperance should be pleased to hear that Mr. Willing's guests drank 9000 dozen of soda water, ginger beer, and other aerated beverages, and 30,000 cups of tea and coffee, and that in the course of the day 230,000 gallons of water were used for various purposes. There were no fights, and not one instance of disorderly conduct on the part of this prodigious concourse of people, mainly composed of working men, their wives and families. Score one for the effects of the Education Acts and the School Board for London.

Placing faith in the variety which is said to be charming, Mrs. Bateman has again changed the bill-of-the-play at New Sadler's Wells. The bright little theatre by the side of the New River, the purity of which Mrs. Bateman seeks to reflect on the stage of New Sadler's Wells, now offers good old English Comedy as a suitable summer amusement. There is a fine old Haymarket ring about the name of Chippendale, which should stamp with the hall-mark of public approval the performance this week of "She Stoops to Conquer" and next week of "The Rivals." With such capable representatives as Mr. and Mrs. Chippendale, Miss Virginia Bateman, and Miss Compton, not to enumerate the whole company, the gay comedies of Oliver Goldsmith and Sheridan could hardly fail to go well.

I went a few evenings since to see the delightful Opéra Comique, "Madame Favart," at the Strand, which has now, I should say, been played some five hundred times; but M. Offenbach's music and Mr. Farnie's brisk libretto continue as fresh and as charming as ever. In the part of Madame Favart that excellent artist Miss St. John has been replaced by a cantatrice of Swedish extraction, Mdlle. Sylvia, who has a voice of most delicate quality, and sings and acts with much sprightly grace and feeling. G. A. S.

COVENT GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The Royal Italian Opera-House was reopened on Saturday last for the usual series of promenade concerts—again under the direction of Messrs. Gatti, who have engaged an orchestra fully equal to that of any previous occasion. It numbers about one hundred performers, the conductor being, for the first time at these concerts—Mr. F. H. Cowen, with Mr. A. Burnett, the leading violinist, as his assistant. That the appointment is a judicious one was manifested on the opening night, when the chief portion of the programme was directed with high efficiency by Mr. Cowen, who was ably replaced in some of the later pieces by Mr. Burnett. Meyerbeer's overture to "L'Etoile du Nord," and that to Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," were very finely given; as were the "Scherzo" from Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Massenet's Entr'acte, "Sevillana" (from "Don Cæsar"), a pleasing "Serenade" by Haydn, the March from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," some elaborate ballet music from Rubinstein's opera, "Feramors," and a well-arranged selection from M. Thomas's "Mignon." This has been very effectively adapted by M. Audibert, and included prominent solo passages finely played by Mr. Radcliff (flute), Mr. J. Egerton (clarinet), and Mr. Howard Reynolds (cornet). Besides these, some dance pieces were given; and the occasional co-operation of the fine band of the Coldstream Guards, directed by Mr. F. Godfrey, added much to the powerful effects.

The other instrumental performances consisted of solos contributed by Miss Bessie Richards and Mr. H. Reynolds. The clever lady pianist was applauded in her rendering of Mendelssohn's "Serenade" and "Allegro Giojoso" and Liszt's adaptation, with orchestral accompaniments, of Weber's "Polacca," Mr. Reynolds having been enthusiastically encored in his execution of an air from "La Sonnambula."

Although the vocal music was not of great importance, it produced special effect, doubtless from the excellence of its rendering, the singers having been Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss Mary Davies, and Mr. E. Lloyd, who were all encored in nearly every instance. In the first part Madame Sterling sang the air "O Fatima," from Weber's "Abu Hassan," Miss Davies gave Mr. Sullivan's "Let me dream again," and Mr. Lloyd Balfe's ballad, "When other lips," each singer having contributed popular songs with equal success in the second part of the concert.

Monday was a popular night, the programme having been expressly arranged for the Bank Holiday; Tuesday's concert was miscellaneous, Wednesday was a classical night, and yesterday (Friday) evening's selection was to include some favourite ballads.

Judging from the large attendances, these concerts seem likely to prove, as they deserve to be, highly successful. Considering the comparative dearth of musical performances in London just now, the large public which is always to be found here—even when the metropolis, by a figure of speech, is said to be "empty"—will doubtless appreciate daily the high-class entertainments so liberally provided by Messrs. Gatti at such small cost to the visitors.

Mr. W. H. Holmes gave an excellent concert last Saturday afternoon at the Royal Academy of Music, one of a series, partly in illustration of his new work, "Notes upon Notes," of which the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have accepted the dedication. He was ably assisted by some of his pupils. The programme was altogether out of the common.

At Devonport dockyard on Tuesday, another war-sloop, the Espiègle—sister ship to the Mutine, launched a fortnight ago—was set afloat. She carries six guns, is of 900 horse-power, and will be promptly fitted for commission. The naming was performed by the wife of Admiral Curme, admiral superintendent of the dockyard.

Mr. H. Russell Evans, the Mayor of Newport, has, at the request of the French Government, presented a gold medal of the first class to Captain Tonkin, and gold medals of the second class to Edward Richards, mate, and Walter and Richards, seamen, all of the British steamer Companie, of Cardiff, in acknowledgment of their services to a sailor of the French steamer Valentine, of Dieppe, whom they saved from drowning at the risk of their own lives.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with her characteristic sympathy for her soldiers, performed an interesting ceremony on Wednesday week. By her Majesty's command Lieutenant-Colonel Tongue, 1st Battalion 24th Regiment, at Gosport, with Lieutenants Weallens and Phipps and a colour-guard, came to Osborne with the colours of the regiment, one of these being the Queen's colour which was found in the river Tugela after Isandula, where Lieutenants Melville and Coghill were killed in their gallant endeavour to save them. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, received the colours in the corridor, and, after inspecting them, the Queen tied a wreath of immortelles to the head of the recovered colour as a mark of her deep sense of the heroism of the two young officers who gave their lives to save them. The Rev. Canon Prothero (uncle of Lieutenant Phipps) was present on the occasion. The Empress Eugénie, when in Zululand, placed two wreaths purposely given her by the Queen on the graves of Lieutenants Melville and Coghill.

Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood and the Hon. Lady Wood, and Captain Bigge, Royal Artillery, arrived at Osborne the next day and dined with the Queen and Princess Beatrice. Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby were invited.

Her Majesty and the Princess drove out with Sir Evelyn and the Hon. Lady Wood the following morning, and in the evening Captain Edwards and Captain Bigge were included in the Royal dinner circle.

The Queen held a Council at Osborne last Saturday, at which were present Earl Spencer, Earl Sydney, and the Earl of Kenmare. The two first-named Earls had audiences of her Majesty. After the Council M. Callainaki Catardji, Minister for Roumania, and M. Marinovitch, Envoy from the Prince of Servia, presented their credentials; and Sir Horace Rumbold, Bart., kissed hands on his appointment as Minister at Buenos Ayres. The Queen knighted Mr. Philip Protheroe Smith, Mayor of Truro, and Mr. George H. Chambers, chairman of the Royal Victoria and Albert Docks. Princess Beatrice was with her Majesty during the ceremony. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived at Osborne in the evening, and Earl Spencer joined the Royal dinner party.

The Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice, attended Divine service on Sunday at Osborne, performed by the Rev. George Connor, Vicar of Newport.

Her Majesty, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, has cruised about the Solent during the week, and witnessed the several regattas of the Royal Yacht Squadron. The Queen has also visited Cowes and driven to Newport and other parts of the island.

Lady Waterpark has succeeded Lady Southampton as Lady in Waiting; and Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph has arrived as Groom in Waiting to her Majesty.

Colonel the Hon. Henry Byng has left Osborne.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have concluded a busy season. At the close of the Goodwood week the Prince came to town, the Princess remaining with the Duke and Duchess of Richmond for the day. The Prince during his few hours' stay called to inquire after the Duchess of Westminster. His Royal Highness, accompanied by his daughters, left town on Saturday afternoon for the Isle of Wight, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught travelling with him in the special train from Victoria station. At Chichester the Princess joined the train, having driven from Goodwood House. Upon arriving at Portsmouth, shortly after six, the Royal party was received by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the chief dockyard officials. The Royal travellers embarked on board the Royal yacht Osborne, Commander Lord Charles Beresford, and crossed to Cowes, due honours being given from the harbour. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught went on a visit to the Queen. The Prince and Princess, with their family, have passed the week on board their yacht during the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta. The Prince's yacht Formosa, which competed in the race on Tuesday for her Majesty's Cup, came in first, and won the prize.

The Duchess of Teck visited the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army at Clarence House, Roehampton, last week, and presented the prizes to the successful pupils of the institution. Her Royal Highness and the Duke of Teck and Prince and Princess Christian were in the House of Lords on Monday night during the debate on the Compensation for Disturbance Bill. The Duke and Duchess and the Duke of Cambridge were also in the House on Tuesday night.

The Duke of Cambridge visited Aldershott Camp on Tuesday, and was present at a sham fight.

Princess Frederica of Hanover, accompanied by her husband, distributed the prizes on Thursday week (Speech Day) at Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, Wimborne, Dorset.

The Duke of Norfolk, Hereditary Earl Marshal, has nominated Mr. Tucker, Rouge Croix Pursuivant of Arms, to the Patent Office of Somerset Herald in Ordinary, so long held by the late Mr. Planché.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Lord Algernon Percy, Grenadier Guards, second and youngest son of the Duke of Northumberland, with Lady Victoria Frederica Caroline, eldest daughter of the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, was solemnised on Tuesday, between one and two o'clock, at St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square. A number of the officers belonging to the Grenadier Guards and some of the non-commissioned officers serving in the bridegroom's battalion were present. Captain W. H. Mackinnon was best man. The bridesmaids were Lady Albertha Edgcumbe and Lady Edith Edgcumbe, sisters of the bride, Lady Florence Anson, Miss A. Macdonald, Miss Dundas, Miss Heber Percy, Lady Alexandra Hamilton, and Lady Katherine Scott. The service was choral. The officiating clergy were the Rev. G. H. Wilkinson, Vicar of St. Peter's and Hon. Canon of Truro; the Rev. G. R. Portal, Rural Dean, Rector of Burghclere, Hants; and the Bishop of Truro. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a dress of white satin trimmed with kiltings and ruches of the same and draped with old Brussels lace, caught up by bunches of orange-flowers, the bodice high to the throat; and over a wreath of orange-flowers a veil of the same lace. The jewels worn were a pearl necklace, with diamond and pearl pendant, the gift of the Duke of Northumberland. The bridesmaids' dresses were of white llama, trimmed with white satin and cream-coloured lace; bonnets of cream lace, ornamented with bunches of dark carnation. Each carried a bouquet of white flowers and carnations, and wore a brooch set with pearls and lapis lazuli, the gift of the bridegroom. The large wedding party breakfasted at the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe's residence, in Belgrave-square. At a quarter past three Lord Algernon and his bride left for Albury Park, the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland's seat, near Guildford—the bride being conducted to her carriage by the Duke of Northumberland. The non-commissioned officers of the Grenadier Guards lined the way from the door to the carriage on their departure. The bride's travelling-dress was of grey cashmere trimmed with satin of the same colour, and ruby velvet and steel beads, with hat to match. Some 200 presents were received by the bride and bridegroom on their marriage, amongst them being a cashmere shawl from the Queen; a pearl and turquoise bracelet, from the Prince and Princess of Wales; a crystal locket, with monogram in jewels, from the Crown Princess of Germany; three silver candelabra, from the officers of the Grenadier Guards; also valued gifts of silver services and articles from the Alnwick and other households of the Duke of Northumberland; from the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe's household; from the Countess of Mount-Edgcumbe's household; from those connected with the Mount-Edgcumbe estate living in Devonport, Stonehouse, and Cremyll; from the artisans employed at Mount-Edgcumbe, and from the Sunday-school children at Cremyll; and a valuable collection of jewellery, plate, china, and objects of art from the relatives and numerous friends of both families. The tenantry on the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe's estates have requested Mr. Sant, R.A., to paint a portrait from a photograph of the late Countess of Mount-Edgcumbe, mother of the bride, as their gift to the bride. Great rejoicings in celebration of the event took place at the Duke of Northumberland's baronial residence at Alnwick Castle, where 500 labourers, cottagers, and small tenantry were entertained at a dinner, also the employés and others at Sion House, Isleworth, about 100, and 200 of the labourers and small cottagers at Albury, Surrey, were similarly entertained.

At the same church, on the same day, were married Mr. Algernon Turnor, son of Mr. Christopher Turnor, of Stoke Rochford, Lincolnshire, and Lady Caroline Turnor, and late private secretary to the Earl of Beaconsfield, with the Lady Henrietta Stewart, sixth daughter of the late and sister of the present Earl of Galloway. The bride on her arrival was received by her brother the Earl of Galloway, who gave her away. Her bridesmaids were Ladies Jane and Isabel Stewart (her sisters), Miss and Miss Dora Turnor (sisters of the bridegroom), Misses Blanche and Grace Tollemache, the Hon. Edith Campbell, Misses Evangeline and Kathleen Chichester, and Miss Blanche Farquhar. The bride wore a dress of white silk, with Brussels lace flounces and pearl trimmings, and Brussels lace veil over a wreath of orange-blossoms. The jewels were of pearls and diamonds, including a pearl and diamond necklace, the gift of Mr. and Lady Caroline Turnor. The bridesmaids were dressed alike in white Madras muslin trimmed with écru lace, and bonnets to match trimmed with white roses, oak apples and leaves, and geranium-coloured strings; and each lady wore a diamond and pearl brooch, the gift of the bridegroom. Mr. Edward Hope officiated as best man. The nuptial rite was performed by the Rev. Canon Wilkinson, M.A., Vicar of St. Peter's, assisted by the Rev. J. Moore Lester, M.A., Vicar of Stony Stratford. The Countess of Galloway entertained the wedding party at breakfast at her residence in Eaton-square. The Earl of Beaconsfield was unable to be present owing to urgent Parliamentary business. The bride and bridegroom left for Golden Grove, Carmarthenshire, the seat of Viscount Emlyn, for the honeymoon. The bride's travelling-dress was of plum-coloured velvet, with Sicilienne silk and lace, with bonnet to match. The wedding presents were nearly 300 in number, including from the cottagers of Stoke Rochford village a pair of silver candlesticks; the servants of Stoke Rochford, gilt drawing-room clock and ornaments; and the Countess Dowager of Galloway's servants, a Dresden china duplex lamp.

The marriage of Mr. Edward Southwell Trafford to the Hon. Eleanor Mary Petre, will take place on the 25th inst., at Felix Hall, Kelvedon, Essex.

The marriage between the Hon. Edward Knatchbull-Hugessen, eldest son of Lord and Lady Brabourne, and Miss Amy Beaumont, youngest daughter of Mr. and Lady Margaret Beaumont, is fixed for the first week in November.

Marriages are arranged between Mr. Robert Wilmot, only son of Mr. Montagu Wilmot, of Norton House, Glamorganshire, and Lady Flora North, only daughter of the late Lord North, and sister of the present Earl of Guildford; and between Captain R. A. Montgomery, Royal Artillery, second son of Mr. and Lady Charlotte Montgomery, and Miss Maud Gosling, second daughter of Mr. Richard Gosling, of Ecclesfield, near Staines.

Captain the Hon. W. Lloyd Howard and Captain T. H. Garrett, of the 16th Lancers, were on Tuesday fined £4 7s. at Fareham, near Portsmouth, for setting two dogs to worry a cat.

At a meeting of the renters of Drury Lane Theatre on Saturday last a report of the renters' committee was read. It stated that the theatre is now let to a satisfactory tenant, Mr. Augustus Harris. The theatre is in both structural and decorative repair; it is let for five years from Oct. 9, 1879, at £5000 a year for three years, and also let for a further period of two years at £6000 a year, subject to a condition that enables the tenant to determine his holding at the expiration of the three years' term at £5000 annual rent, with the additional rent of £10 for each performance beyond 200. It is added, "Your committee are of opinion, considering the cost and size of your theatre, its historical associations, that it is the home of the Christmas pantomime, and that the theatre has been repeatedly shown to be eminently adapted for Italian Opera and grand spectacular theatrical exhibitions of every kind and description, that at a rent of between £5000 and £6000 it is the cheapest theatre in the metropolis, and they venture to hope that the lessee will at his yearly balance find that, large as the establishment is, that large as the anxiety and trouble of management of so considerable an undertaking necessarily must be, the issue to him will be such as his enterprise and skill deserves." The committee add that the arrangements for extinguishing fire are highly satisfactory.

THE VICEROY OF INDIA.

The appointment by Mr. Gladstone of the Marquis of Ripon, who six years ago joined the Roman Catholic Church, to this great office of State, as the representative of her Majesty in the Indian Empire, was made an occasion for a hostile agitation, working upon the Protestant jealousies of Englishmen and Scotchmen, against the present Liberal Government. That unworthy and utterly groundless appeal to blind religious antipathy and to obsolete maxims of political exclusiveness, has spent its passing strength in a vain expression of affected alarm, and in the self-exposure of vulgar and ignorant folly. It needed only to be pointed out that the administration of civil and military rule in the Asiatic dominions which are inhabited by a vast heathen and Mussulman population should be the last employment that ought to be monopolised by members of the Established Church of England. One of those who lately held that office, the Earl of Northbrook, speaking the other day in the House of Lords, made a very effective answer to those who object to Lord Ripon's appointment on the ground of his religious opinions. "There is probably no office under the Crown," he said, "in which the occupier has less to do with religious questions of any kind, connected with either the Protestant or the Catholic Church, than the office of Viceroy of India. During the four years that I was Viceroy I can hardly remember a single instance in which a question connected with the ecclesiastical establishments of India came before me." And Lord Northbrook went on to say, "the miserable law having been struck off the Statute-book which placed our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects under disability from serving the Crown, it seems to me that the simple question was whether the noble Marquis was the most fitting man to be sent to India, and not whether he was a Roman Catholic or a Protestant."

This being "the simple question" of political interest upon the recent appointment of Lord Ripon, we have little else to do, in our biographical commentary here, than to mention, however briefly, the public services he has rendered to his country during the past thirty years, in both Houses of Parliament, and in several administrative posts of great utility and responsibility, though since the year 1874 he has rather seemed to choose a private life.

The Right Hon. George Frederick Samuel Robinson, Bart., Earl de Grey, and Earl of Ripon, Viscount Goderich, Baron Grantham, Knight of the Garter, is in the fifty-third year of his age. His father was the late Earl of Ripon, the Right Hon. Frederick John Robinson, who was Prime Minister in 1827, and held afterwards the offices of Colonial Secretary, Lord Privy Seal, and President of the Board of Control for India. He married the only daughter and coheiress of the fourth Earl of Buckinghamshire. Their son, the subject of this memoir, was born Oct. 24, 1827. The father was created Viscount Goderich in that year, and in 1833 was advanced to the earldom of Ripon. He was second son of Lord Grantham, a diplomatist and placeman of the Georgian era, whose elder son became Earl de Grey in 1833, this earldom descending, by the terms of letters patent granted in 1816, from his aunt, Countess de Grey and Baroness Lucas.

Viscount Goderich, as the present Viceroy of India was commonly styled in his father's lifetime, began life, in 1849, as attaché to a special embassy to Brussels. At the general election of 1852 he was sent to the House of Commons as M.P. for Hull, but next year left that seat to contest Huddersfield, which he won for the Liberals, and in 1857 was elected for the West Riding. He succeeded his father, as Earl of Ripon, in January, 1859, thereby entering the House of Lords. In November of the same year, by the death of his uncle, he became also Earl de Grey. He was known as Earl de Grey and Ripon till June, 1871, when he was raised to the rank of Marquis, as a reward for negotiating the Treaty of Washington.

As a consistent and diligent member of the Whig party, under the leadership of Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell, allied with the Peelites or Conservative Liberals, Lord Goderich took his share in the debates a quarter of a century ago, especially those concerning administrative reform. Soon after entering the Upper House as Earl of Ripon, in 1859, he was appointed by Lord Herbert of Lea to be Under-Secretary of State for War; and in February, 1861, when the India Office was intrusted to Sir George Cornwall Lewis, Earl de Grey and Ripon was made Under-Secretary for India. That two such eminent departmental Ministers should have successively preferred him as their subordinate in their different branches of Government service, is a very high proof of the reputation he had already earned for business-like efficiency, and for practical discretion in the management of complicated details. His course of subsequent official promotion was directed along the same lines; thus in April, 1863, upon the death of Sir G. C. Lewis, then Secretary for War, Earl de Grey and Ripon took his place at the War Office; and in February, 1866, he became Secretary of State for India, in Lord Russell's last Ministry, filling the place of Sir Charles Wood, now Lord Halifax. These official experiences must be allowed to be exactly those which are most likely to have qualified him for the duties of Viceroy of India in time of war. They will bear comparison, at any rate, with the antecedents of Lord Lytton, whose entire public life had been spent in diplomacy at several European Courts, and who knew as little of India as he did of war till he was sent out there by Lord Beaconsfield, and plunged by Lord Salisbury's rash enterprise into the disastrous invasion of Afghanistan.

The chief work performed by Lord Ripon as one of Mr. Gladstone's Ministry coming into power in 1868, was the settlement of our perilous and ungracious dispute with the United States of America upon the question of compensation for damages caused by the equipment here of the Alabama and other Confederate cruisers at sea, to prey on the commerce of the Northern States. It is true that the attorney-like sharpness of diplomatic agents for the United States took advantage of a certain vagueness and slackness in the terms of the international convention prepared by a Joint High Commission, of which Earl de Grey and Ripon was head. We fear it cannot be denied that the want of technical diplomatic skill in framing that document left an unperceived opening for exorbitant pecuniary demands, enormously transcending the proper scope of the agreed arbitration, and resembling a huge American practical joke. Before this startling perversion of the original agreement, which had been fairly and honourably intended by the representatives of both nations, suddenly arose to disturb the harmonious progress of that important affair, much credit was freely allowed to his Lordship for his conduct of the negotiations at Washington. He had been made a Knight of the Garter in 1869, and was created Marquis of Ripon in 1871, for merits and services which nobody was then inclined to deny. The worst that can be said of it is that he had inadvertently blundered in overlooking a possible misinterpretation of the Treaty which he assisted to prepare; but the Foreign Secretary of that period must bear some part of the blame. The Marquis of Ripon is not, like Lord Lytton, a trained professional diplomatist, and we do not suppose he will ever be thought of as a Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. As Lord President of the Council, with Mr. Forster as Vice-President, he has created the existing system of elementary education.

This is all that can be said, within our limited space at present, of his political services in former Liberal Administrations. The integrity and vigour of his character, his thoroughgoing earnestness of purpose and fidelity to principle, are recognised by friends, and not less by opponents. It is well known that the Freemasons of England are wont to look seriously to the moral qualities of a man of rank whom they choose for their Grand Master. They conferred that high honour upon the Marquis of Ripon, in succession to Lord Zetland, on April 23, 1870; and he was at that time second to none in his personal claims, though he showed no such eager ambition, to the reversionary Leadership of the Liberal party in Parliament, in the event of Mr. Gladstone's retirement from its burdensome duties. But Lord Ripon, in 1874, becoming persuaded of the truth of the Roman Catholic doctrines, voluntarily sacrificed to his sense of religious duty those prospective honours which must ever be cherished by an English nobleman, conscious of his ability to rule and guide the counsels of the State. He, the son of a Prime Minister, gave up for ever the fair chance he had of some day being Premier, and renounced, at the same time, that supreme rank in Freemasonry which is now held by the Prince of Wales. Here was a proof of that sincerity and honesty which Englishmen, Protestant or Catholic, should know how to appreciate. It is not for the exercise of these virtues, however we may differ with Lord Ripon and others in their theological creed, that we will join in denouncing him as unfit to be Viceroy of India.

With respect to his private relations, he married, in April, 1851, his cousin, Henrietta Anne, daughter of Captain Henry Vyner and Lady Mary Vyner, a Lady of the Queen's Bedchamber. His son, Earl de Grey, twenty-eight years old, has been M.P. for Ripon. The character of Lord and Lady Ripon's dealings, as landlord and lady of the place, with their Yorkshire tenantry and neighbours, is attested by the affectionate farewell address presented to them on May 6, just before their departure to India. We wish that address could here be quoted at length, for it would give real pleasure to all our readers who comprehend the habits of English rural society. Its language is touching and tender, as well as respectful, in what it says of the homely happiness of village life, where such persons as Lord and Lady Ripon exert the powers of wealth and rank to do all the good they can. This passage, at least, shall be reprinted, with reference to their mission to the Viceregal Court of India, which is a matter of national concern:—

"To both alike we would say 'all joy.' No better choice, as we believe, could have been made; on no worthier shoulders could so great a burden have been laid; and there is no Englishman to whom his countrymen could more confidently hope that the power would be given to restore peace to India, and to confirm throughout the East the old trust in England's word, which was her honour and her strength, than the statesman who, if he possessed no other claim to our gratitude, will be remembered in history as England's representative, wise and firm, just and courteous, in the first great act of international arbitration. Lord Ripon, may God grant that to the joy of having promoted peace and goodwill in the West, and of having made national education a reality at home, you may add thankfulness that He has used you to teach to Christian and to heathen in the East, that England is not only powerful, but before all things gentle, just, and true."

THE EMPRESS EUGÉNIE AT ST. HELENA.

The return voyage of the widowed Empress from South Africa, where she had been to visit the spot that witnessed, a twelvemonth ago, the death of her only son in the late Zulu War, has been occasionally noticed in this Journal. Her Majesty was conveyed back to England from Capetown by that magnificent steam-ship the Trojan, which was recently built, in the Clyde, for the mail service performed by the Union Steam-Ship Company.

We described the Trojan before she went out to the Cape, in the first week of May, as it was then understood that she would return with the Empress on board of her. This vessel is the thirty-seventh which the Union Company have built or purchased since they began operations in 1857, and she has made the 1033rd voyage effected in their service between England and the Cape. The Trojan is thought superior even to the Arab and the Pretoria, belonging to the same Company; and now the quickness, safety, and comfort of the passage to and from South Africa, by these noble vessels, or by those of Messrs. Donald Currie and Co. (the Colonial Mail Line), are such as cannot elsewhere be surpassed.

This steamer, carrying the Empress Eugénie on the homeward voyage, touched at St. Helena on Monday, the 12th ult., when the Empress and her party of travelling companions landed there. Her Majesty, with whom were General Sir Evelyn Wood, K.C.B., V.C., and Lady Wood, besides her own personal attendants, was received by the Governor, his aide-de-camp and staff, at the landing-stage of Jamestown. We have to thank the Rev. J. C. Lambert, Vicar of Jamestown, for a Sketch of this scene and for one of the Empress's visit to Napoleon I.'s tomb at Longwood. The party were conveyed to Longwood from Jamestown in four carriages provided by the Governor of St. Helena. They first visited The Briars, which is the villa inhabited by Napoleon I. when first he arrived in the island. At Longwood Old House, which was his principal and final residence, and where he died in 1821, after five years' detention in exile, the widow of his nephew and Imperial successor stayed more than an hour. She made a minute inspection of every room in the house, and seemed more especially affected by the sight of the apartment in which he drew his last breath. The very spot where he lay in that room is marked by the erection of a marble bust, inclosed within a rail, which was done, if we remember correctly, by order of Napoleon III. The house was purchased and entirely restored by the late Emperor about twelve years ago, and has since been under the care of M. Mareschal, appointed by the French Government to keep it in order; but he has now been recalled from St. Helena by the Government of the French Republic. The Empress also visited the well-known tomb, surrounded by willow-trees, which thousands of English and foreign travellers have seen, usually plucking a sprig of willow to carry home with them as a memento of historical renown and the end of mortal greatness.

Last week's arrivals of live stock and fresh meat landed at Liverpool from the United States and Canada were much larger than that of the previous week—the totals being 2323 cattle, 2308 sheep, 288 pigs, 6305 quarters of beef, 575 carcasses of mutton, and 185 dead pigs.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Though the weather was fairly favourable last week, nearly all the heavy rain falling in the night, we have seen many more successful meetings at Goodwood. The company was, perhaps, up to the average; but many of the races, and, notably, the cup, proved comparative failures. Phénix scored a ridiculously easy victory over Parole and Gil Blas in the Lennox Stakes, the first event on the Wednesday's card; and, after Archer had won the Visitors' Plate on old Cradle, a field of half a dozen turned out for the Sussex Stakes, decidedly the most important race of the week, if its bearing on future events is considered. All the six competitors are engaged in the St. Leger; and the meeting of Mask and Zealot excited the greatest interest. The former has improved wonderfully since the summer, and his muscular development is now extraordinary. Unfortunately, he has a large thoroughpin on the near hind leg; but if this does not interfere with his preparation he is likely to run even better at Doncaster than he did at Epsom. Excuses were made for Zealot on the ground that the course was too short for him, and Jenny Howlett's partisans pleaded want of condition; still there is no getting over the fact that Mask beat them all without ever being asked to gallop. Iroquois was rather lucky in the Lavant Stakes, as Isola Madre, an own sister to Isonomy, requires time, and Prince Regent, a very promising own brother to Victor Chief, broke a blood-vessel, and did not finish the distance. Later in the day the American was pulled out again for the Findon Stakes, and caught a Tartar in Wandering Nun, a very smart filly indeed, except when running in the best company, when she is just outchased. We strolled down to the start for the Stewards' Cup, one of the prettiest sights of the meeting; and, after seeing Archer get well away in front with Hackthorpe (8 st. 8 lb.), while Elf King (7 st. 9 lb.) was not at all conspicuous, we were surprised to learn that the latter had just managed to catch and beat the favourite; Veto (6 st. 7 lb.), the ex-selling plater, was a good third.

Peter, now one of the grandest horses in training, made a sad example of Phénix and Parole in the Singleton Stakes, and a race between him and Charibert, over about six furlongs, would be one of the most sporting events of the season. A match for the Goodwood Cup had not occurred since 1828; and it was a great disappointment when only Chippendale and Dresden China turned out to contest it. To our mind, the former seemed a little light, and walked round in a rather lifeless style, which gave one the idea that he was over-trained; while the mare, on the other hand, looked slightly above herself. The race was really only run for about three-quarters of a mile—most suicidal policy for Chippendale, who ought to have forced the pace, just as he did when opposed to Isonomy at Ascot; and, under all the circumstances, the downfall of the favourite was no surprise to anyone. It was pleasant to see Tom Chaloner up again in the Bentinck Memorial; and he had a pleasant ride on Jessie Agnes, who galloped three miles of the long course with rare dash and resolution. After her wretched exhibition of the first day, few expected to see Paw Paw win the Molecomb Stakes; and really the form of the American stable is becoming strangely contradictory. Just before the decision of the Chesterfield Cup there was a tremendous downpour of rain, which made the course so heavy that Lord Clive (8 st. 1 lb.), who likes hard ground, never showed to the least advantage. The luckless Sword Dance (6 st. 7 lb.) ran well, but Victor Emanuel (6 st. 7 lb.) had matters all his own way some distance from home. The Queen's Plate, which brought Roehampton, Thurio, and Inval to the post, afforded one of the best races of the meeting. Inval made running at a capital pace for a mile and a half, when he was done with, and a pretty finish between the other pair resulted in Thurio's success, the strong pace throughout being all in his favour.

Compared with most of those that have preceded it, the sale of the Sandgate yearlings on Saturday last was a great success. A beautiful colt by Rosicrucian—Adrastia, and, therefore, half-brother to Favo and Favorita, made 1250 gs., the highest price of the day, and then came a sweet filly by Adventurer—Chic (840 gs.). A good many other remunerative, though by no means sensational, prices were obtained, and, finally, the thirty lots brought in an average of 265 gs.

"Drawn on account of rain" has been the melancholy termination to many important cricket matches of late, and we have little to chronicle this week. "Gentlemen v. Players of the North" ended in favour of the professionals by three wickets; the scoring on both sides was small, but Mycroft bowled in fine form. Yorkshire has beaten Derbyshire by seven wicket, but Australia v. Gloucestershire, England v. Kent, and Surrey v. Sussex, are all unfinished at the time of writing.

The annual meeting of the National Archery Society, the chief toxophilite event of the season, took place at Shrewsbury on Wednesday and Thursday, last week. The winners of the principal prizes, the societies to which they belong, and the scores made by each, are subjoined:—Ladies' first gross score, £15, Mrs. Leigh, Cheltenham Archers, 600; second, £13, Mrs. Horniblow, Grand National, 593; third, £11, Mrs. Butt, West Kent, 589; fourth, £10, Mrs. Marshall, East Sheen, 569; fifth, £9, Mrs. Everett, Tytherly Park, 539; sixth, £8, Ainsworth, North Lonsdale, 496; seventh, £7, Mrs. Ainsiv, North Lonsdale, 496; eighth, £6, Miss Legh, Cheltenham Archers, 489. Gentlemen's first gross score, £15, Mr. Palaret, Royal Toxophilites, 897; second, £13, Mr. Everett, Royal Toxophilites, 762; third, £11, Mr. Rimmington, Royal Toxophilites, 632; fourth, £10, Captain Allen, Wye Archers, 632; fifth, £9, Nesham, Mid-Surrey, 576; sixth, £8, Mr. Phillips, Barnsdale Archers, 575.

The programme for the week of the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta opened with the annual meeting and dinner on Monday, at Cowes—Earl Wilton, the Commodore, presiding. The Prince of Wales was present, and amongst the new members elected was the Right Hon. W. H. Smith. Later in the day Prince Batthyany entertained the Prince and Princess of Wales and the majority of the members of the squadron at Eaglehurst Castle. The sailing began on Tuesday for the Queen's Cup, which was won by the Prince of Wales's cutter Formosa, in which his Royal Highness himself sailed; on Wednesday the Royal Yacht Squadron's prize of £150 was sailed for, open to cutters and yawls of not less than thirty tons belonging to any Royal Yacht Club; Thursday's sailing for the Town Cup—a piece of plate valued £100—open to all yachts over thirty tons, and belonging to any club; and on Friday the sailing closes with a squadron-match for a £100 prize, open to any recognised club. On Tuesday the Samoena won the £100 prize, and the Latona the second prize of £50; the Vanduara, from whom much had been expected, lost much time by going on the wrong side of the mark-boat.

The race for "Doggett's Coat and Badge" and some minor prizes was rowed last Saturday afternoon between London Bridge and Chelsea. There were six competitors, and the principal prize was won by W. J. Cobb, of Putney.

Mr. William Chuteman, of Bow Works, Sheffield, was on Tuesday elected Master Cutler, in succession to Mr. J. B. Jackson, retired.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Earl of Beaconsfield, when he smilingly picked his way with accustomed care and deliberation to the centre seat on the front Opposition bench on Monday, looked unusually well. His Lordship's sojourn at Hughenden to see the roses bloom had evidently been of benefit to his health. The consciousness that he and his noble friends would be once again in a large majority may have been additionally cheering to his Lordship. Rarely of late years has there been so great an assemblage of Peers. The Conservative side was more than full, and the Ministerial benches were thickly occupied. Tearing themselves away from umbrageous retreats on the Continent, the Marquis of Salisbury and Earl Cairns had returned to swell the chorus against the Compensation for Disturbance in Ireland Bill. In both the side galleries and in the balconies near the Throne Peeresses sat, and whilst the sunbeams shone through the stained-glass windows they may be almost said, in the glowing language of a Times' leader-writer, to have "presented a spectacle of unsurpassed brilliancy." But when the sun sank, the lines of ladies in dark rather than bright morning dresses added little more than their natural vivacity to the scene. It may be mentioned that among the most interested listeners, or, perhaps, eyewitnesses, were the occupants of the Royal balcony, Prince and Princess Christian, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck; and the varying throng of Ministers and ex-Ministers, who from the space before the Throne possibly cast covetous glances now and then towards the seats filled by hereditary legislators.

The audience was ready. So was the piece, rehearsed and amended with infinite care in the Lower House. But ere the curtain was drawn up on the principal play, Lord Kimberley had to perform his one-act part. The Secretary for the Colonies went through his task well. It was an ungrateful thing to do; but, with the requisite mingling of firmness and tact, Lord Kimberley announced that Sir Bartle Frere had been recalled from South Africa, and the announcement elicited no comment.

Earl Granville then rose. The speech in which the noble Earl moved the second reading of the measure for granting compensation to evicted tenants in Ireland was generally agreed to be the most effectively delivered address that has been heard from him for some time. The Foreign Secretary repeated, in his own clear way, the Ministerial argument that it was the exceptionally great number of evictions during the period of deep distress in Ireland which induced the Government to introduce this bill as a temporary and exceptional measure only. The sting was taken out of Earl Grey's amendment, that the bill be read the second time that day three months, by Earl Granville's trenchant remark that within the past quarter of a century no considerable measure had been introduced which had not been denounced by the noble Earl. Laughter greeted this sally, as it did Lord Granville's later appeal to the noble Earl, who was addressing the Conservative benches, to "Turn this way: they are converted!" Earl Grey stoutly continued his adverse criticism of the bill, which would, he argued, drive capital away from Ireland by rendering the payment of rent uncertain. Lords Emly and Waveney defended the bill from different points of view, and Lords Lansdowne, Dunraven, and Waterford regretted they had to attack it.

The Earl of Derby made a well-reasoned and impartial speech. The gist of it was that it might have been better if the bill had never been introduced, but that, as the House of Commons had passed it, and the Irish People expected it, it would be better to so amend it in Committee as to limit its operation to a twelvemonth and restrict it to a smaller class. The slashing speech of the Marquis of Salisbury was not altogether free from the personal attack on Lord Derby that the noble Marquis has presumably taken a delight in since he coupled the noble Earl's name with that of an infamous character in English history; and a stronger member of the Ministry than Lord Kimberley might have been found to reply to Lord Salisbury's unreserved condemnation of the bill.

Earl Cairns resumed the debate on Tuesday before another exceptionally large assemblage of peers and peeresses. His was an exhaustive and exhausting speech, too long by half, the multiplicity of detail weakening the effect of his arguments against the bill. His Lordship compared the action of the Government to the man who, touched by a charity sermon, put his hand into the pockets of his neighbour to gain a contribution to the plate. But this was an unjust and ungenerous allegation, replied the Lord Chancellor, the fact being that whereas the late Government only contributed £750,000 to the alleviation of Irish distress, the present Government had increased the amount to £1,500,000. Lord Selborne also reminded the House that the bad harvest of the past year meant a loss of over ten millions sterling to the peasantry, whom the Ministry proposed to help over their period of difficulty by means of this and its companion measure. The Duke of Somerset was not to be hindered from denouncing the measure; nor was the Earl of Zetland. Lord Monck put in a plea for the poor bill. But Lord Cranbrook only assailed it with the greater vehemence, finding a foeman worthy his steel, in the Duke of Argyll, to whom the Earl of Beaconsfield replied in a retrospective speech dwelling mainly on the action of the Tory Party on the lines of the Devon Commission, and holding that up as an example for Earl Granville to follow in legislating for Ireland. The leader of the Government having briefly replied to the point, the bill was defeated by the large majority of 231—282 against 51.

The Relief of Distress Act Amendment Bill was, on the other hand, read the third time and passed yesterday week. And on Monday the approaching close of the Session was heralded by the Royal assent being given by Commission to a large number of measures prior to the commencement of the absorbing debate on Irish evictions.

COMMONS.

The serious illness of Mr. Gladstone has, not unnaturally, rendered the proceedings of the Lower House more subdued than when the irreconcilable little knot below the gangway on the Opposition side—a knot in which Lord Randolph Churchill, Mr. Gorst, and Sir H. Drummond-Wolff seemed to have inextricably tied themselves—strove night after night to badger the Prime Minister. Some of the old Adam broke out, however, on Monday, when Mr. Dodson's wreathed smiles at the cordial outburst of cheering which his reappearance drew from the Ministerialists, faded into glumness at the resounding peal of ironical exclamations that came in answer from Lord Randolph Churchill and his associates. When Lord John Hay took the oath as member for the Wigtown Burghs, the cheers of the Conservatives again rang cheerily through the House.

The bright smile on Mr. Herbert Gladstone's face as he answered an inquiry addressed to him by an hon. member in the gallery during the question-time on Monday was accepted as a welcome signal that the Prime Minister was better. If his sudden illness had not confined the hon. gentleman to Downing-street, it was felt by many observers who had nightly noticed the effects of the constant strain on Mr. Gladstone's constitution that he would sooner or later have been imperatively compelled to seek rest and retirement. Early and late the Prime Minister was at his post. Were the Parliamentary business now conducted on the good old lines which facilitated legislation as recently as when Lord Palmerston was Premier, the Leadership of the House, if taken easily, ought not to be beyond the strength of a veteran statesman. But when, in addition to the great increase in the number of bills and questions brought forward, a puny group of members cultivate Obstruction into a fine art by every conceivable means, by usurping the special functions of the Speaker on the plea of Order, by personal interruptions which a firm Speaker would instantly rebuke and suppress, and by purposely scheming to harass the Prime Minister, the nature of the difficulties Mr. Gladstone has had to face may be imagined. This illegitimate Opposition, never directly countenanced, but at the same time never censured by Sir Stafford Northcote, told in the long run on the Prime Minister, conscientious to a fault in the scrupulously exact fulfilment of the smallest duties of his high office. Pitiably pale, Mr. Gladstone bravely struggled against his weakness on the Thursday and Friday of last week, when he stopped late in the House to push through the new Budget Bill, and the Hares and Rabbits Bill, which (Mr. Brand having withdrawn his amendment) was ultimately read the second time without division. The House has not seen the Prime Minister since the Friday evening. Fever followed a chill, as described in another paragraph; and, pending the absence of Mr. Gladstone, the leadership of the House has devolved upon the Marquis of Hartington.

To Mr. Broadhurst was it left on Monday, it may be remarked, to express the general feeling of regret that prevailed at the cause of Mr. Gladstone's absence. A murmur of sympathy greeted the allusion, which followed a reference to the hon. member's opportune and sensible question as to whether the Government during the recess could not so rearrange the hours of business as to adjourn at midnight.

Lord Hartington, his hands full during the day with administrative business regarding India and the new Afghan embarrassment, has had in the evening to gratify the curiosity of hon. members eager to learn the latest news from Candahar and Cabul. On Monday his Lordship, in the course of a series of replies to multifarious questions, said he was not aware that Afzul Khan, the former Governor of Candahar, was with Ayoub Khan; but he had heard Afzul Khan was a guest of Persia in April last. On Tuesday the Secretary for India had further to state that telegrams had brought details of the losses sustained by General Burrows's forces, and news that Ayoub Khan was moving to attack Chaman, whilst Sir F. Roberts with a powerful force had received orders to march from Cabul on Candahar.

Mr. Mundella on Monday presented a comprehensive view of our State educational system, and obtained votes of £1,466,077 for education in England and Wales, £179,768 for the Science and Art Department, £214,303 for education in Scotland, and £10,734 for the National Gallery. On Tuesday the House sat late in Committee on the Employers' Liability Bill, Mr. Dodson having the conduct of the measure.

The Employers' Liability Bill occupied the greater part of Wednesday afternoon, when Sir Edward Watkin's amendment to exclude from the action of the measure all railways having a mutual insurance fund was negatived, but little progress was made with the bill.

ILLNESS OF MR. GLADSTONE.

A profound impression was created throughout the country and Europe on Monday by the news that the Prime Minister was seriously ill. The medical adviser and the friends of Mr. Gladstone had noticed for a week past that his assiduous attention to public business and constant attendance in the House of Commons were visibly telling on his strength, but all attempts to induce him to spare himself failed. During the whole of Friday morning, last week, he was actively engaged in the transaction of official business in Downing-street, and in consultation on Afghan affairs, and was so busily employed that he did not permit himself time to take refreshment during the day. During the afternoon sitting he did not feel well. In the evening he attempted to keep an engagement to dine with Lord Frederick Cavendish, M.P., Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and on his arrival in fulfilment of the appointment complained of being ill. During dinner he was compelled to retire from the table, and soon afterwards felt so seriously unwell that he went home. On Saturday Mr. Gladstone breakfasted in bed, and on rising and attempting to work as usual was attacked by shivering fits. There was a Cabinet Council summoned for two o'clock, and it had been his intention after the Council to go into the country to Mill Hill, where he had been passing some recent Sundays, and in the hope of carrying out his programme he endeavoured to disregard and shake off his cold. Mrs. Gladstone, however, took a juster view of the case. Dr. Clark was sent for, and finding considerable fever, and a temperature of 103 deg., at once sent his patient to bed. On Sunday morning the following bulletin was issued:—

10, Downing-street, Aug. 1 (8.30 a.m.)

Mr. Gladstone, having got chilled when exhausted, is suffering from some congestion of the base of the left lung, with fever. The fever, however, has abated during the night, and the local symptoms are not increased.

(Signed) ANDREW CLARK.

Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Mr. Gladstone's colleagues made repeated inquiries, and were duly informed by Mr. Herbert Gladstone of the gradual lessening of the fever. On Monday Mr. Gladstone was seen by Sir William Jenner as well as Dr. Clark; and afterwards they jointly issued the following reassuring bulletin:—"Mr. Gladstone is doing as well as could be expected, but the fever continues." So great was the excitement caused by the news of the Prime Minister's illness that telegrams from all parts of the empire and the Continent constantly arrived in Downing-street. Over 2000 people, it is estimated, called personally on Monday alone, and about 1000 cards were left. Lord Rowton visited the Premier's residence for the purpose of conveying a message from the Earl of Beaconsfield. At ten o'clock on Tuesday night a telegraphic message was received from her Majesty the Queen, expressing her gratification at the improvement in Mr. Gladstone's health, thanking Mrs. Gladstone for the news sent, and requesting the latest information. This was telegraphed to Osborne after Dr. Clark had seen the right hon. gentleman.

We are authorised to state that in consequence of the illness of Mr. Gladstone the Lord Mayor's dinner to her Majesty's Ministers, announced to take place at the Mansion House to-day (Saturday), will not be held.

HOME NEWS.

In accordance with general anticipation, Mr. F. C. Burnand has been offered, and has accepted, the editorship of Punch.

Mr. Augustus Prevost has been appointed treasurer of University College Hospital, in place of the late Mr. Enfield.

Mr. Horace Marshall, C.C., has given fifty guineas to the fund for repairing the Printers' Almshouses at Wood-green.

At the annual dinner of the Newsvenders' Benevolent Institution, which was held at Willis's Rooms last week, subscriptions amounting to £135 were announced.

Orders were received at Chatham Dockyard last Saturday evening directing that the armour-plated ship Superb be immediately got ready for commission. The Superb is a new vessel, and one of the largest in the Navy.

An extension of the Metropolitan Railway from Willesden to Harrow was opened last Saturday. It is intended to carry the line to Pinner and Watford, and ultimately to form a junction with one from Rickmansworth.

The Duke of Norfolk, Hereditary Earl Marshal, has nominated Mr. Tucker, Rouge Croix Pursuivant of Arms, to the Patent Office of Somerset Herald in Ordinary, so long held by the late Mr. Planché.

In the Exhibition Palace, Dublin, on Monday, the meeting of the High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters was begun, under the presidency of the Chief Ranger, Brother Dowling. A fête was held in the evening.

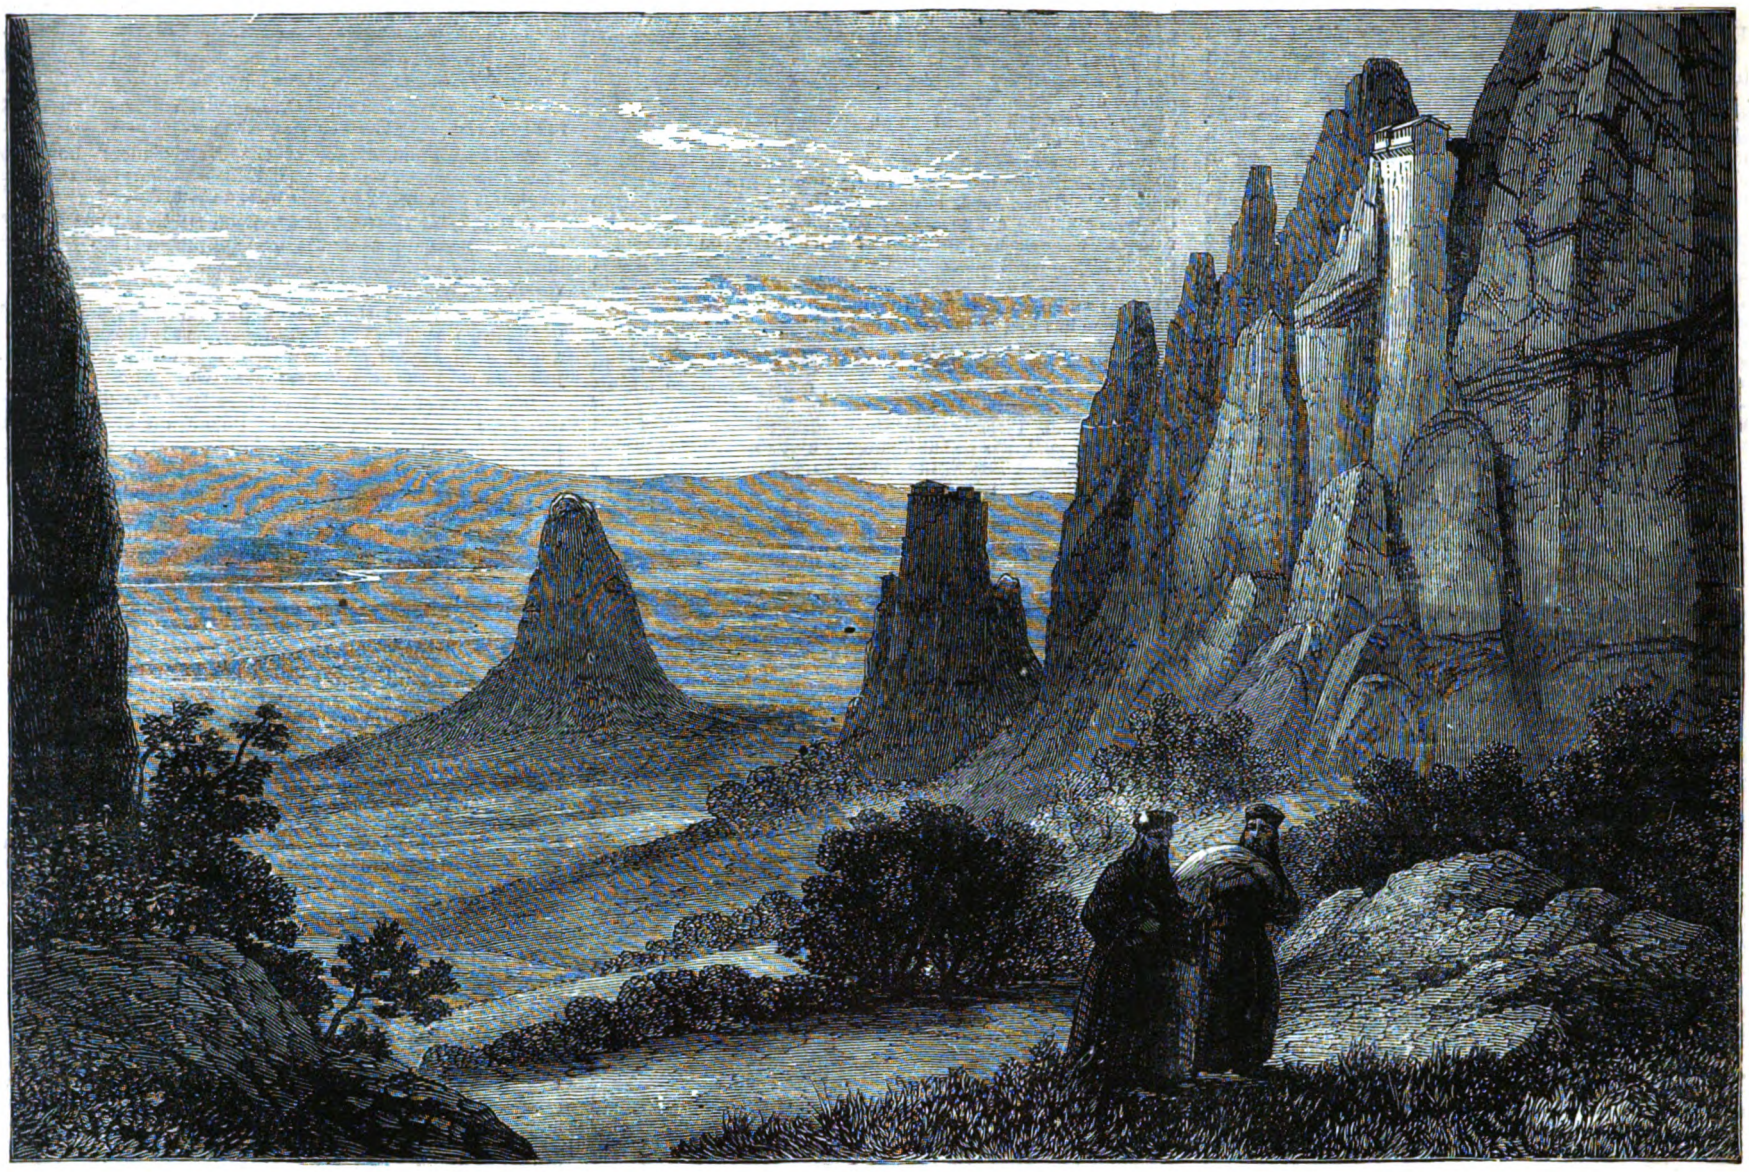
Messrs. Adams and Sons have issued a new edition of the "Improved District Railway Map of London," a guide to the means of communication between various parts of the metropolis which will be found extremely useful by holiday visitors.

Stronsay Pier, Orkney, which has been in course of construction during the last year, was yesterday week opened for traffic by Colonel Balfour, of Balfour Castle, who was at the same time presented by his tenants with a solid silver tureen.

The new buildings, comprising a spacious saloon and theatre, erected on the Scarborough Spa, were formally opened on Monday by the Lord Mayor of London, who was accompanied by the Lady Mayoress and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. There was a state procession through the town to the Spa grounds, and in the evening there was a banquet in the Spa Saloon, at which the Mayor of Scarborough presided.

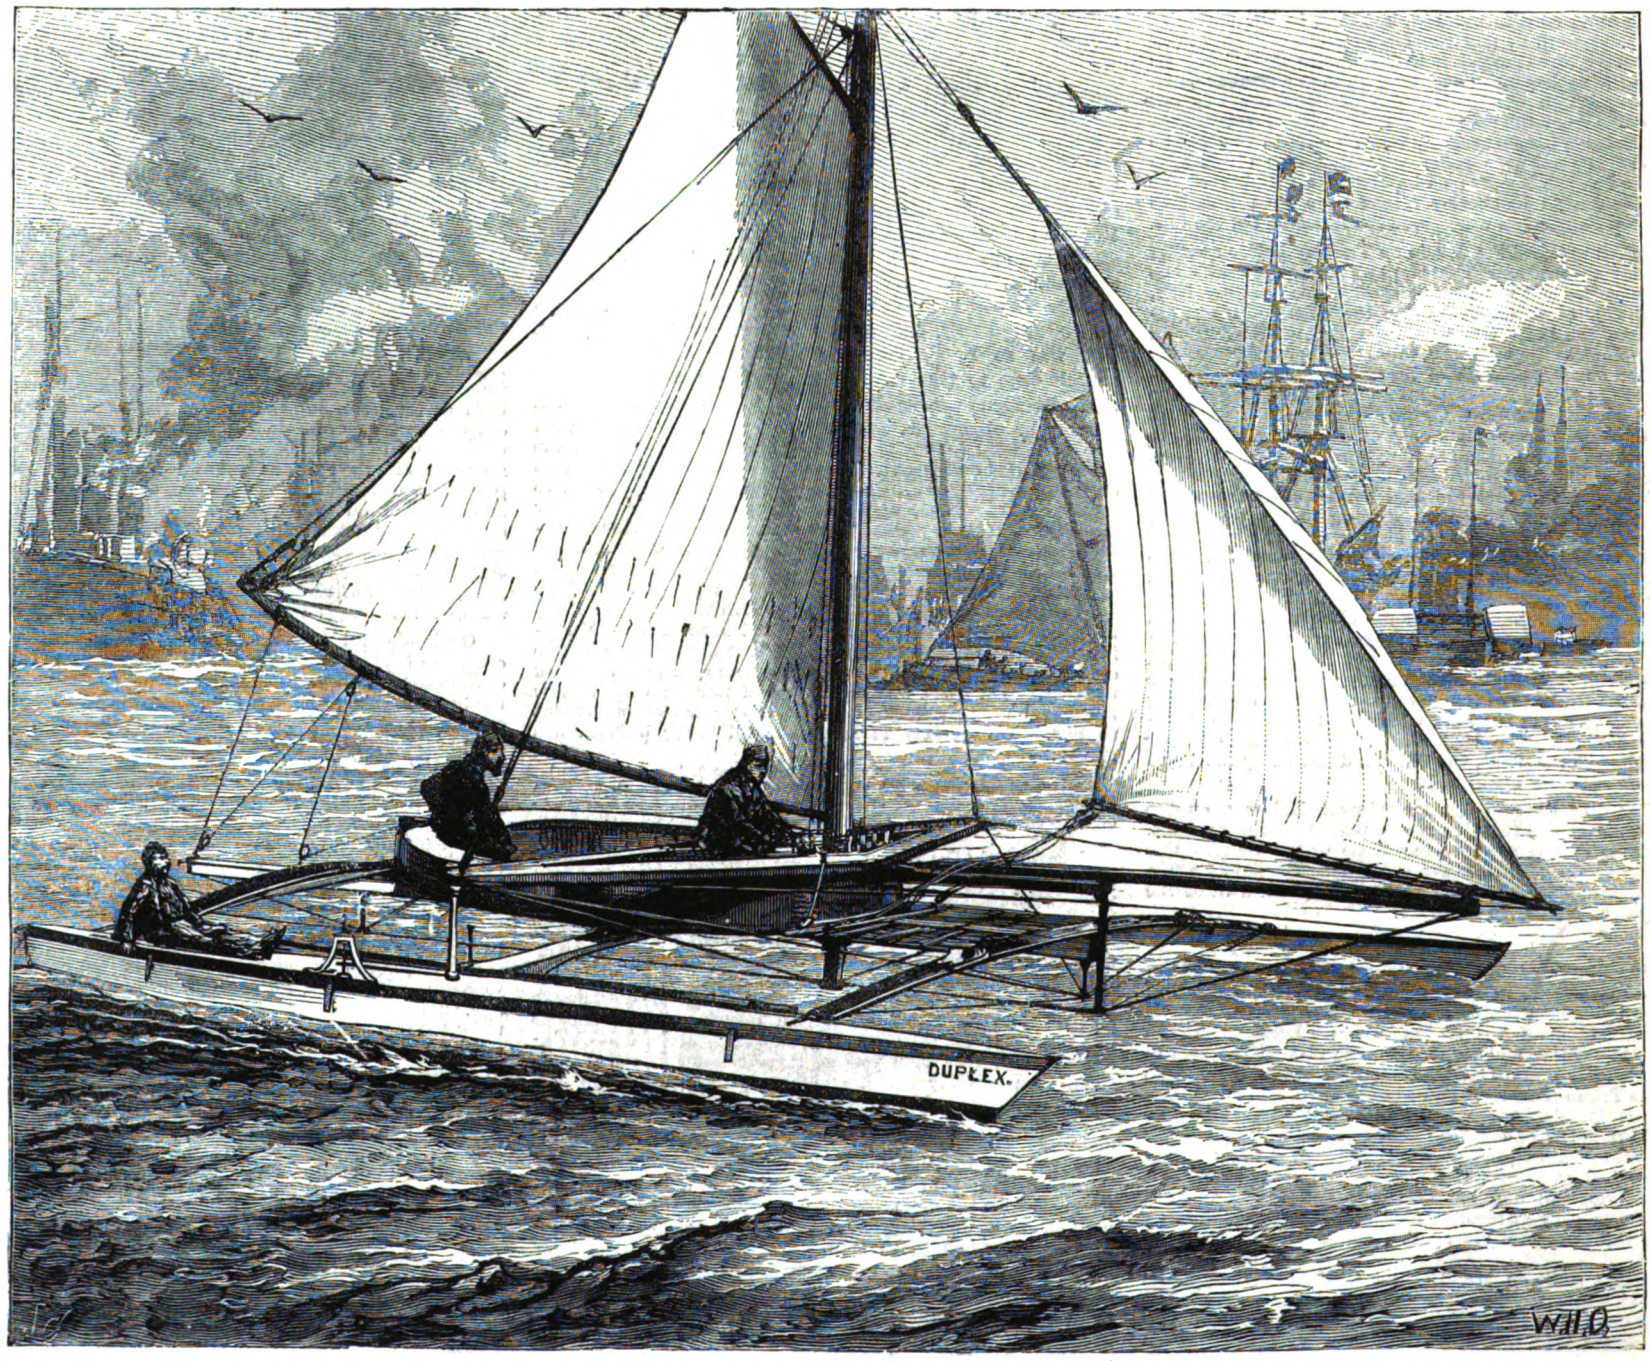
The Newbury Horticultural Society held its annual fête on Monday, in grounds near the railway station. The entries were more numerous than usual, and the exhibits in all departments were of a first-class character. The prize-takers included the gardeners to the Marquis of Donegall, Lord Carnarvon, Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, M.P., Sir Richard Sutton, and other well-known cultivators.

The annual gathering of miners of the county of Durham was held on Durham Racecourse last Saturday, and was attended by from 40,000 to 50,000 persons. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Burt, M.P., Mr. Bradlaugh, M.P., Mr. Lloyd Jones, and others, and resolutions were passed in favour of united action amongst working men for the protection of their interests, of the Employers' Liability Bill, of the assimilation of the borough and county franchise, and of the thorough revision of the land laws.



The annual meeting of the Medico-Psychological Society was held yesterday week at the Royal College of Physicians—Dr. Mould, of Cheadle, presiding. There was a full attendance of members from all parts of the United Kingdom. Dr. Lusk resigned the presidency, and was succeeded by the chairman. The chief subject of discussion related to the question of private lunatic asylums and the simplifying of formalities connected with the admission of patients. Later the members and friends dined together; and there were present the Earl of Shaftesbury (representing the Lunacy Commission), Mr. J. T. Hibbert, M.P., Dr. Lush, Dr. Tuke, Dr. Rayner, Dr. Savage, Dr. Sutherland, and other well-known members of the profession. In the course of the speeches Lord Shaftesbury favourably compared the existing state of things as regarded lunacy treatment with that which existed fifty years ago. Mr. Hibbert replied on behalf of the House of Commons.

The annual meeting of the governors and subscribers of the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest, Golden-square, was held on Tuesday. The president (Lord Calthorpe) took the chair. The report for the past year stated that there was a considerable increase in the number of patients both at the main hospital and at the branch institution or outpost at Newington-butts; and this circumstance showed the great importance of rebuilding the hospital, which has now been established for nearly twenty years, and quite outgrown its capabilities. Dr. Roose, of Brighton, has offered £50 on condition that thirty-nine other gentlemen will give or collect a similar sum, and ten subscribers have already given in their names. The Rev. H. R. Haweis made an appeal on behalf of the Newington-butts outpost, which he said was situated in one of the poorest districts in London, and for the successful carrying on of which funds were greatly required.



Ornithological observers in Scotland and the northern counties of England have for some time past been complaining of the enormous decrease in the number of skylarks during the last few years. In many districts this year they have disappeared altogether. Mr. Edwards, the Banffshire naturalist, has published a short paper on the subject, in which he condemns the popular theory that starlings, which have increased in corresponding ratio to the decrease of skylarks, cause the mischief by breaking the eggs in the nest and by killing the young. That the bill of the starling is capable of destroying the egg he admits, but he ridicules the idea of its destroying the young, and he does not believe that the starlings are to blame. He attributes the evil chiefly to the increase in cattle and the taking in of waste ground for agricultural purposes. "As a rule," he says, "larks do not breed among hay, corn, or barley. For one nest I have known in such places, I have, I may safely say, found a dozen in meadows, on pasture lands, and on waste ground. Now, for one cow or ox that there were years ago, there are about a score at present. Is it not possible that the great increase of these animals may have had something to do with the decrease of the lark by trampling on their nests or maltreating them? I have myself, while searching in clover fields for moths and in grazing grounds for beetles, come across numbers in recent years so destroyed. Pheasants, partridges, and other ground-breeding birds also suffer severely. Besides, we have cattle and sheep now, but more particularly the latter, put into woods and plantations to eat down the herbage there." In conclusion, Mr. Edwards protests very earnestly against the destruction of birds' nests and the trapping of song birds by men and boys, by which thousands of birds are destroyed every year.

Tuesday's Gazette announces that the Queen has appointed Mr. George William Des Vœux, C.M.G., to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Bahama Islands.

THE NEW GREEK FRONTIER: THE ROCKS AND CONVENTS OF METEORA, THESSALY.

THE DUPLEX CATAMARAN.

Digitized by Google

THE NEW FRONTIER OF GREECE.

A map of Thessaly and Epirus, with the adjacent parts of the Greek Kingdom and of the Turkish Empire, showing the new frontier decreed by the Conference of the Great Powers at Berlin, was given by us in a recent publication. We have also given a View of Jannina, the capital of Epirus, and one of Mount Olympus, in Thessaly, to which we now add those of the singular monastic dwellings of Meteora and Mount Pindus, from Sketches furnished by a travelled correspondent. The following account of these curious places is taken from Murray's "Handbook of Greece":—

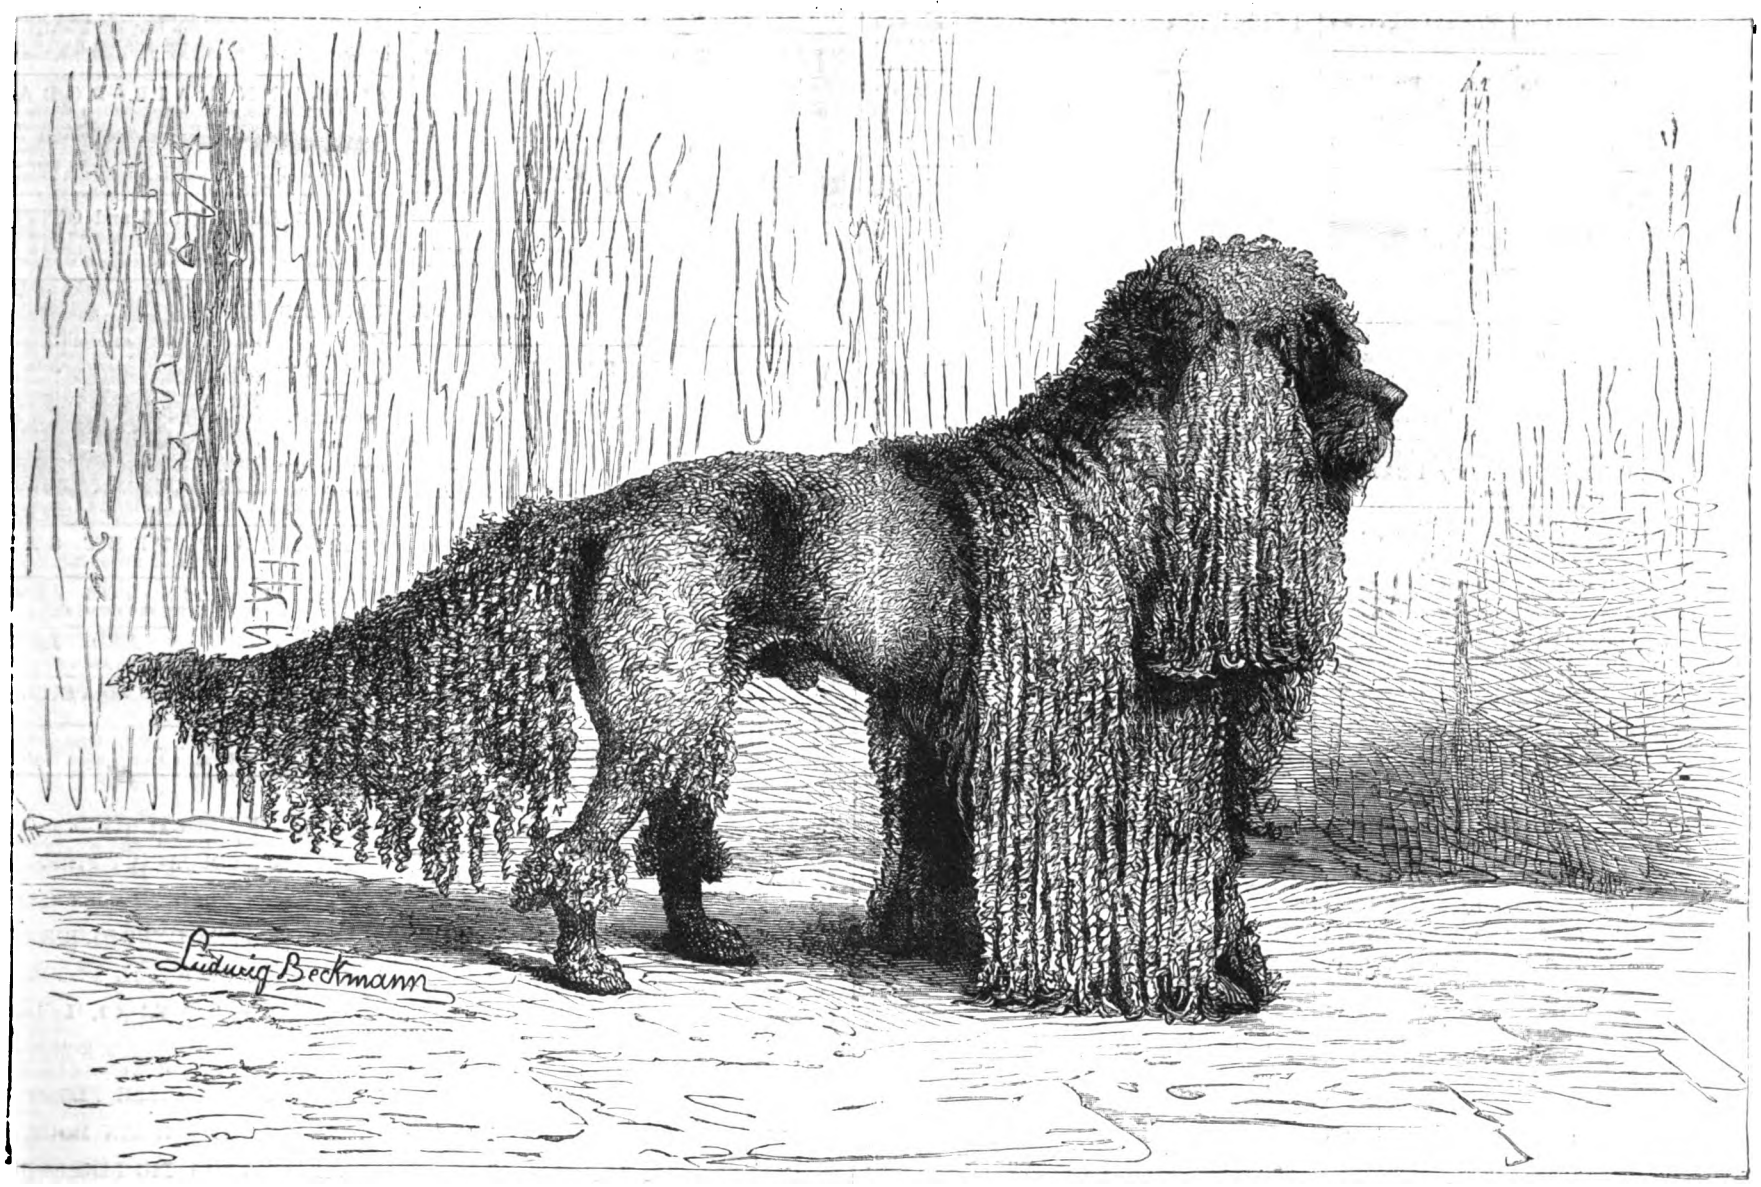
"From Metzovo to the Khan of Malakassi is four hours' journey. The road ascends the central ridge of Pindus, immediately opposite to Metzovo. It first follows the course of a mountain torrent, and thence is very steep, winding along a precipitous promontory of rock to the summit of the pass, which is attained after two hours' travelling, and is 4500 ft. above the sea. Here are presented to the view the wide plains of Thessaly, with the Peneus of Tempe (Salemvria) issuing from the rocks below; and far beyond appear Olympus, Ossa, and Pelion, bounding the eastern horizon. Pindus is the backbone of Northern Greece. Its successive vertebræ have different names. Mount Zygos was of old called Lacmos. From its foot diverged the five chief rivers of Northern Greece, connecting it with the Ionian and Ægean Seas.

"The singular rocks of Meteora are seen from a great distance in descending the valley of the Peneus. They rise about a mile distant from the river; a group of insulated massive cones and pillars of rock of great height, and for the most part perpendicular. The deep recesses between these pinnacles are thickly clothed with trees. On a nearer approach the outlines of several Greek monasteries are seen on these heights, seeming as if entirely separated from the rest of the world. The small town of Kalabak or Stagi is situated below the most lofty of these pinnacles.

"The situation of these Monasteries of Meteora, or 'Convents high up in the air,' is most remarkable. A short walk from the village of Stagi leads the traveller among the strange pinnacles crowned by these convents. They form a cluster of detached rocks, separated by deep chasms, and each has a little level space on its summit, where the buildings are placed, looking like incrustations on the cliff. A colony of monks settled on these rocks, for the sake of the security they afford at a very early period. The six convents still tenanted by the fathers possess wells and cisterns, some goats and sheep, and a store of meal; but they depend for their support chiefly on charitable contributions.

"The convents are accessible by nets drawn up and also by ladders of wood and rope, made in several separate joints, and let down over the face of the cliff from the mouths of artificial tunnels in the rock, which communicate with the lower parts of the buildings. At night, and when not required, these ladders are pulled up. The ladders are the most hazardous mode of ascent or descent, as they are perfectly perpendicular, and swing backwards and forwards in the air with the least breath of wind. The traveller is recommended to trust himself to the net, as the safest and most singular method of ascent. The rope which hauls you up is worked from above by a pulley and windlass. Of course, as you begin to ascend, your weight draws the net close until your knees are forced up to your chin, and you are rolled into a ball like a hedgehog. On arriving at the monastery above, you lie on the floor a perfectly helpless man, until the monks unroll you from the net and help you to your feet. There is no real danger in the ascent." The writer of Murray's "Handbook of Greece," from whom this description is borrowed, observes that "these aerial fathers are literally fishers of men," drawing them up in their net from the world below.

DR. TANNER, AS HE APPEARED IN THE SECOND WEEK OF HIS ATTEMPTED FAST OF FORTY DAYS.—SEE NEXT PAGE.



A GERMAN CORDED POODLE.

We give an Illustration of the famous blood poodle Nero, which was distinguished with the first prize of this class at the Berlin International Dog Show. It is drawn from life by L. Beckmann, of Düsseldorf, who acted also as judge of this class. Nero is, perhaps, the finest and most perfect specimen of the German corded-coated poodle that was ever bred. The ringlets of his woolly and glossy coat form long pendulous strings or cords, which are twisted as regularly as if done by aid of artificial means. On the shoulders these ringlets are of the length of more than twenty-six inches, and when the dog is moving about his long, waving coat gives him the appearance of walking under a black mourning drapery. The shaven parts of the body show that the frame of a good poodle of this breed is beautiful and well made, like that of a high-bred sporting-dog.

THE DUPLEX CATAMARAN.

This vessel, of a singularly novel design, was built in Rhode Island, United States of America, to the order of Mr. Henry N. Custance, who is honorary treasurer of the Corinthian Yacht Club. She may be seen in the Thames, at her moorings off Erith.

The "Duplex," as she is called, is constructed with two hulls, each thirty-three feet long by two feet beam, and three feet deep, with a centre board or sliding keel to each hull. They are fixed at a distance of twelve feet apart, and are joined together by truss-girder-beams, fore and aft, terminating in ball-and-socket shoulder-joints bolted to the inside covering-boards of each hull. On the top of the girder-beams, which thus connect the extremities of the two hulls, rests a longitudinal truss-girder, on which is supported the car, an oval platform in which the crew work the ship. From the longitudinal girder the mast rises through the car, and is stayed to it by a single shroud on either side, spreading to the extreme end of a frame made for the purpose, and bolted very strongly to the top of the car. Underneath the car are two stout lever beams, shackled to the longitudinal girder, and bolted very strongly to each hull. These levers keep each of the hulls in an upright position, whatever the strain may be on the rigging. The vessel is sloop-rigged, and does not appear overburdened with sail. The steering is effected by a tiller fitted to work two rudders, one on each hull, simultaneously, and is so ingeniously contrived that whilst rounding a curve the inside rudder is always drawn over to a somewhat larger angle than the outside rudder. The highest rate of recorded speed that the Duplex has been able to make is at the rate of 23·1 miles per hour, with the tide, over the measured mile in the Lower Hope, during a fresh breeze and in calm water.

DR. TANNER'S FAST.

On Saturday, at noon, if his vital strength holds out so long, this singular man will have completed his self-imposed penance in the way of starvation, and we shall be glad to hear that he has lived to enjoy the "bully good old water-melon," which he means to "go for" when his time is up. Popular interest has continually grown stronger, both in America and in Europe, in watching the daily bulletins of Dr. Tanner's condition, and the reports of his temper and behaviour, during the past five weeks. But there is a certain degree of monotony in this curious affair. We shall not, therefore, now trouble our readers with particulars which may have lost their significance, as possible symptoms of the final result, by the time this Number of our Journal comes into general circulation. It is to be expected that a telegram from New York on Saturday afternoon, unless the heroic abstainer should have "caved in" before that period, will convey to all nations of both the eastern and the western Continent some decisive intelligence of the fate of Dr. Tanner. We don't at all believe that he is going to die this week; he and the medical attendant, "regular and eclectic," may be trusted to forbear proceeding to the risk of such a disastrous consummation. The latest news of him we have got at the present writing was that of Wednesday morning, when "his stomach appeared in a better condition, from drinking less water, and not mineral water, but filtered water." He took his last drive in the open air on Tuesday, and will not go out again till the end of his fasting ordeal. We are told that he slept soundly on Tuesday night, well wrapped up in blankets, as he had felt chilly, and that four doctors were constantly watching him. Our Illustration shows Dr. Tanner in the second week of his fast, or nearly a month since, but the arrangement of his bed, and of the room which he inhabits, has not been altered. It is to be presumed that we shall next week be furnished with a complete and methodical report of the whole affair.

TONIC SOL-FA TEACHING IN SCHOOLS.

A deputation from the Tonic Sol-Fa College had an interview yesterday week with Earl Spencer, Mr. Mundella, M.P., and Sir Francis Sanford, at the Privy Council-Office, Whitehall, to present a memorial upon the subject of an intimation received from the Education Department that the Lords in Council on Education intended in elementary schools and training colleges to accept the tonic sol-fa method and notation upon the same terms as were from time to time applicable to the ordinary method and notation.

The memorialists stated that they had heard with great concern that it was the intention of their Lordships, should singing from notes become part of the code, to withdraw the tonic sol-fa method and notation from the position of equality in which they were placed by the intimation received from the Educational Department.

Sir Charles Reed, M.P., accompanied by Mr. Goodhall, M.P., Mr. Middleton, M.P., Mr. J. S. Curwen, Mr. Brinley Richards, Dr. Cameron, M.P., and others urged that the tonic sol-fa was the simplest and best method in the world for children, and should be encouraged, and the system of notation disregarded as much as possible.

Earl Spencer, in reply, said the Government attached the greatest importance to the course of education in music, and to its being widely spread among the population of the country. When Government came to the consideration of the subject of the payment out of the Parliamentary grant for music teaching in schools they would consider it as an important part of the question of revising the whole method of payment. The Government were in no way committed to any change in the instruction given in elementary schools. The late Government introduced some proposals, and all they now had done was to commit themselves to consider carefully the subject. This year they would not do so, however. The matter would have his Lordship's best consideration. He valued much the interesting information that had been furnished by gentlemen competent to give an opinion on the subject.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely rearranged, revised, re-written, annotated, and brought down to the present time, with a copious introduction, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The present edition contains many important new chapters and sections, with new features and matter pertaining thereto, including the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of women and children. Diseases of Tropical Climates are fully considered, and the volume may be pronounced of the greatest value to families, emigrants, and missionaries.

Of this work a Physician of high standing writes:—

"I have gone pretty well through your Edition of Laurie's Domestic Homœopathic Medicine, and I can truly say that it is the most perfect work of its kind ever published; in fact, it is, to my mind, too good for the general public, as it enlightens them too much in the art and mystery of medicine and surgery. For young medical beginners such a work is invaluable, as it would save them a great amount of reading. It is really superior to any Domestic yet published. I have the First and Second Editions of Laurie, and your Edition only shows what the work has developed into."

Just out, Thirtieth Edition, post 8vo, cloth, price 5s.,

EPITOME OF THE ABOVE WORK. By R. S. GUTTERIDGE, M.D.

This edition contains notices of most of the new medicines, and is brought down to the present time.

FANCY DRESSES.—ENGLISH AND FOREIGN MANUFACTURE.
The popularity of Printed Cotton Fabrics has almost OBLITERATED the sale of Woollen Dress Goods this season. I find the Department clogged with an immense Surplus Stock that must be cleared before Stocktaking. To effect this, the whole has been re-marked, with the view of a complete clearance. The absurdly low prices must attract the most sceptical; for instance, beautiful materials that cost me 10d., 12d., and 14d. per yard will be sold for 6½d., 8½d., and 11½d. per yard. Wonderful Bargains.

EAU DE SUEZ.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore a cure for this evil, not only immediate but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which, although so perfectly innocuous that it may taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris "Figaro" and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath, will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M Suez recommends his Orange Tooth-Paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of Tooth-Brush made from the finest badger-hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by this great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336, Oxford-street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s.; Yellow Thread, 2s. 9d.; Red Thread, 3s.; Orange Paste, 4s. 6d.; Tooth Brush, 1s. 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage-free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name Suez stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of Wilcox and Co. on the labels.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark, "Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.

is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 219 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly,
"GEORGE BOYD."

THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.

"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 20, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Snedeker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 219 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."

Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Nov. 4, 1878.
"I have attentively examined the beautiful pianos of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons that are exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. I consider them to be exceptional in the ease with which gradations of sound can be produced, from the softest to the most powerful tones. These excellent pianos merit the approbation of all artists, as the tone is full as well as sustained, and the touch is of perfect evenness throughout its entire range, answering to every requirement of the pianist.
"CH. GOUNOD."

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Sept. 8, 1878.
"We, the undersigned, certify that, after having been and most conscientiously examined the English Pianos at the Universal Exhibition of 1878, we find that the palm belongs to the Grand Pianos of the house of Brinsmead."
NICOLAS RUBINSTEIN,
D. MAGNUS,
Chevalier ANTOINE DE KONTSKI, Court Pianist to the Emperor of Germany.

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"I have pleasure in expressing my opinion that the Paris Exhibition Model Grand Pianofortes of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons are unsurpassed. The tone is deliciously sweet, sustained, and extraordinarily powerful; the touch responds to the faintest and to the most trying strains on it, and the workmanship is simply perfect. W. KUHE."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Illustrated London News."
"The French papers have been unanimous in their expressions of admiration of these splendid instruments. The grands especially have enchanted the Parisian professors and amateurs of music by their noble sonority, their enormous power, and the sympathetically voice-like quality of tone. The touch is so beautifully light, elastic, and certain, that many pianists of every nation, from the Abbé Liszt downwards, who have tried these instruments, have highly complimented the enterprising manufacturers on their success."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Daily Chronicle."
"In tone the instrument is exceedingly rich and sweet, and in touch the very perfection of lightness. Messrs. Brinsmead may certainly be congratulated upon their success."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Morning Advertiser."
"The Legion of Honour, in addition to the other distinctions awarded to Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the founder of the firm has been created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Daily News."
"A new Pianoforte, recently manufactured by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, claims notice, not only on account of its beauty and richness of tone, but specially for some ingenious mechanical novelties, the most important being the addition of a third pedal, by means of which the sound of any note or notes may be almost indefinitely prolonged at the will of the player. Thus bass notes may be sustained after being struck by the left hand, which may then be taken away, and, with the right hand, may execute the most brilliant staccato passages, thus giving almost the effect of four hands. The patent 'check-repeater action,' a speciality of Messrs. Brinsmead, enables the performer to command with ease the most rapid reiteration of the same note; the facility of the key movement in general being such that glissando passages can be executed with such perfect ease as to render them practicable with the lightest touch. The volume of tone is intensified by a peculiar construction of the sounding-board, another improvement being the system of bridging, by which the vibrations are increased and rendered sympathetic. The Pianoforte is capable of all degrees of delicacy and power, its massive structure rendering it less liable to get out of tune than usual; and the instrument is altogether calculated to extend the reputation of its makers."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PIANOS
may be obtained of all the principal Musicsellers.
Prices from 35 guineas to 350 guineas.

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

We present this week a fresh series of Illustrations of the Afghan war, more especially designed to show the aspects of the places and character of the agents and forces concerned in the most recent turn of military and political affairs in that country. The city of Candahar, with its fortress, into which the British garrison has now withdrawn from the adjacent cantonments, is the subject of three different Views, besides a Plan of the city and a Map of the surrounding territories. This Map, including all that lies in the way of the British advance with reinforcements from Cabul and from the Punjaub, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, to the westward, the valleys and plains of the Argandab and the Helmund, where General Burrows has encountered a severe check from the Herat army led by Ayoub Khan, is accompanied with a topographical explanation on the same page. It is taken from the paper contributed by Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph to the United Service Institution two months ago; and we are indebted to the same gallant officer, who commanded in the advance from the Indus to the Helmund at an earlier period of the Afghan War, for two sketches of the Valley of the Helmund, north and south of the position occupied by our troops at Abbaza, which will be regarded with especial interest since the news of the recent disastrous experiences in that direction. Abbaza, not marked on our map, is a ford and ferry and riverside village on the Helmund opposite Girishk, on the road from Herat to Candahar, or Kandahar, as the name of that city is written by our map-maker. Khushk-i-Nakhud, or Kishki Nakhud, on a small tributary of the Argandab, some forty miles from Girishk on the road from Candahar, is another place to be frequently mentioned in the accounts we may expect of General Burrows's defeat by Ayoub Khan. The reader will do well to keep, for reference hereafter, such descriptions and Illustrations as we now present of places between the Argandab and the Helmund, as well as those relating to the important town and citadel of Candahar, the capital of Western Afghanistan. That city, with its adjacent province, has been confided by the British Government to the rule of a certain Shere Ali, a namesake and relative of the late Ameer Shere Ali of Cabul, bearing the title of Wali, and supported by the friendly presence of a British garrison. It is in order to depose the Wali Shere Ali and to expel the British troops, that Ayoub Khan has approached Candahar from Herat, which city does not appear in our Map, but is situated on the Hari Rud, to the north-west, in a locality that would lie beyond the upper part of the left-hand side margin of the map we have engraved. General Burrows, having been sent forward from Candahar, with his brigade, accompanied by the native Afghan forces of Shere Ali, in the second week of July, was suddenly deserted by the whole body of the Wali's infantry, near the banks of the Helmund. He was obliged consequently to fall back on Khushk-i-Nakhud, standing on the defensive, against the advancing army of Ayoub Khan; and this condition of affairs has since been aggravated by Ayoub Khan's victory in a conflict fought on the 27th ult. (Tuesday week), breaking up and almost destroying the brigade of General Burrows, the remnant of which was driven back to Candahar.

We now learn that the battle took place on the morning of the 27th, and that General Burrows was the assailant. This is quite in harmony with the native statement that the cavalry and artillery were enticed into an ambuscade. According to our latest intelligence, Ayoub's force consisted of 12,000 men and twenty guns. The scene of the action was, as previously stated, fifty miles westward from Candahar. The fight lasted four hours, and was stoutly contested. At the end of that time the brigade was "forced to retreat on Candahar." Our loss, out of about 800 Europeans and 1600 natives, was twenty officers, 400 Europeans, and 800 natives killed and missing, "mostly in the retreat." Of our six guns, two were abandoned, the horses being killed. When the latest message left Candahar, preparations were being made for a siege. This is very bad news in every respect. The worst of it is, that the necessity of renewed efforts to assert British military supremacy in Afghanistan will again delay the pacific settlement of that country, and the withdrawal of our troops, which had been announced, and was earnestly desired and intended, by her Majesty's present Liberal Government. The Afghans, we cannot deny, are now at length beginning to fight bravely, under the able leadership of Ayoub Khan, for the independence of their native country and its hereditary rulers, and for the sanctities of their religion, which are held to be violated by a Christian Government subjugating or conquering a free Mussulman people. It is easy to call them "fanatics;" but these Ghazis, or soldiers of the Moslem faith, are inspired by a patriotic motive, and they are waging a desperate warfare against foreign aggression.

THE BRITISH DEFEAT.

Particulars of the battle in which General Burrows was defeated on Tuesday, the 27th ult., are now made known to us by the subjoined telegram received last Tuesday night at the India Office from the Viceroy, dated Simla, Aug. 3:—

Following from Colonel St. John, dated Candahar, July 29:—

"Arrived here yesterday afternoon, with General Burrows and Nuttall, and remnant of force.

"Burrows marched from Khushki-i-Nakhud on the morning of the 27th, having heard from me that Ayoub's advanced guard had occupied Mainwaud, about three miles from the former place. Enemy's cavalry appeared advancing from direction of Hyderabad. Their camp at Helmund, ten miles above Girishk. Artillery and cavalry engaged them about 9 a.m. Shortly afterwards the whole force of the enemy appeared and formed line of battle—seven regiments, regulars in centre; three others in reserve; about 2000 cavalry on right; 400 mounted men and 2000 Ghazis and irregular infantry on left; other cavalry and irregulars in reserve; five or six batteries of guns, including one of breechloaders, distributed at intervals. Estimated total force 12,000. Ground slightly undulating, enemy being best posted.

"Till one p.m. action confined to artillery fire, which was so well sustained and directed by enemy, that our superior quality of armament failed to compensate for inferior number of guns. After development of rifle fire, our breechloaders told, but vigorous advance of cavalry against our left and Ghazis along the front caused Native Infantry to fall back in confusion on 66th, abandoning two guns, formation being lost. Infantry retreated slowly, and, in spite of the efforts of General Burrows to rally them, were cut off from cavalry and artillery.

"This was at three p.m., and followers and baggage were streaming away towards Candahar. After a severe fight in inclosed ground, General Burrows succeeded in extricating infantry, and brought them into line of retreat. Unfortunately, no efforts would turn fugitives from main road, waterless at this season. Thus majority of casualties appear to have occurred from men falling from thirst and exhaustion.

"Enemy's pursuit continued to ten miles from Candahar, but was not vigorous. Cavalry, artillery, and a few infantry reached banks of Argandab, forty miles from scene of action, at seven a.m., many not having tasted water since previous morning. Nearly all ammunition lost, with 400 Martinis, 700 Sniders, and two 9-pounder guns.

"Estimated loss killed and missing—66th, 400; Grenadiers, 350; Jacob's Rifles, 350; Artillery, 40; Sappers, 21; Cavalry, 60.

"Wounded—Powell, Artillery; Lynch, Preston, 66th; Anderson, Grant, Grenadiers; Irlett, Jacob's Rifles.

"Preparations now being made for siege. Durani inhabitants expelled. Provisions and ammunition plentiful. Wali was with us during action, and is now with us assisting actively."

A telegram from the Marquis of Ripon, Viceroy of India, gives Colonel St. John's list of killed, missing, and wounded:—

Artillery, killed and missing—Major Blackwood; Lieutenants Osborne and Maclaine. Wounded—Lieutenant Fowell.

3rd Light Cavalry, killed—Lieutenant Owen.

1st Native Infantry, killed and missing—Lieutenants Hinde, Whitby. Wounded—Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson, Captain Grant.

30th Native Infantry, killed and missing—Captain Smith; Lieutenants Justice and Cole. Wounded—Major Iredell.

Staff, killed and missing—Brigade Majors Captain P. Heath, Lieutenant Henn, Royal Engineers.

Estimated casualties other ranks—66th Foot, 400; Artillery, 40; Cavalry, 60; Sappers, 40; 1st Native Infantry, 350; 30th Native Infantry, 350.

There is very little hope that those missing will have escaped.

Aslett, 1st Native Infantry, reported killed in telegram of July 29, is not named in this list.

TROOPS ENGAGED IN THE ACTION.

General Burrows's brigade was the 1st Infantry Brigade of the 1st Bombay Division (Candahar Field Force), and consisted of one British regiment (her Majesty's 66th Foot) and two Bombay Native Infantry regiments (the 1st Grenadier and 19th Native Infantry).

Brigadier-General George Reynolds Scott Burrows, Bombay Native Infantry, is a well-known officer in his presidency, and was until recently Quartermaster-General of the Bombay Army, which he joined as an Ensign in January, 1844. He had served for many years in the Quartermaster-General's department, and was formerly Assistant-Quartermaster-General of the Sind Division, subsequently commanding the 15th Native Infantry from 1867 to 1872, when he was appointed to the head-quarters staff at Bombay as Deputy-Quartermaster-General of the Army. General Burrows had seen no active service until dispatched to Afghanistan, but had the reputation in his own Presidency of being a first-rate staff officer.

Captain Percy Heath, Bombay Staff Corps, was Brigade Major to General Burrows' brigade. He was in Abyssinia with the 45th Foot, and is son of the late Major-General Percy Heath.

The 66th Berkshire Regiment was sent on active service to Afghanistan in January last, and went from its quarters at Kurrachee to Sibi in February last. It arrived at Quetta on March 9, and, after encamping for a few days, was ordered on to Candahar. The two Bombay regiments, which completed the strength of the brigade, have been in Afghanistan since last autumn, and were originally in General Stewart's division.

The 66th is a Berkshire regiment, attached to the sub-district and Brigade Dépôt at Reading, and having for its linked battalion the 49th (Hertfordshire), now at Dover. The 66th, which was the only British corps in General Burrows's brigade, embarked for India in February, 1870. The regiment was commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel James Galbraith, who has been in the regiment since December, 1851, and is a member of an old Irish family—the Galbraiths, of Clanabogan, in the county of Tyrone. The following officers accompanied the regiment to Afghanistan in February last—namely, Lieut.-Col. James Galbraith; Majors Charles Valentine Oliver and John Tobin Ready; Captain Ernest Stephen Garratt (this officer was severely wounded on May 7 while on transport duty, and has since been invalided), Captains John Quarry, William Hamilton M'Math, William A. D. Mackinnon, Francis James Cullen, Walter Roberts (late Adjutant), Adolphus James Price, and W. J. de la Beresford Peirse (just promoted); Lieutenants Maurice Rayner (just appointed Adjutant), Farquhar M'Crae Bruce, Granville de la Motte Faunce, James W. H. Fitzgerald, Richard Trevor Chute, Manus O'Donel, Charles Mackenzie Edwards, and Hyacinth Lynch; Second Lieutenants William Lonergan, George Lawrence Mellis, and Arthur Honywood. Second Lieutenants Reginald Bray, Walter Olivey, Harry J. Barr, and Frank Bunny went out last March to join head-quarters.

The 1st Bombay Grenadiers, an old Bombay regiment, raised as far back as 1796, was under the command of Colonel Charles Heathcote, who served on the staff in the Central Indian campaign. The other officers with the Grenadiers were Lieutenant-Colonel C. M. Griffith, Captain John Grant, Lieutenants C. W. Hinde, W. C. Aslett, A. H. Daunt, and C. G. Whitby, and Surgeon A. H. Dane.

The 19th Bombay Native Infantry was under the acting command of Major Walter Jacob, who went out to India last winter from furlough. Major R. J. Trench, Lieutenants F. Stevenson, Henry Melvill, and F. C. Stayner were also on duty with the corps. Lieutenant G. E. Walter and Surgeon-Major Cates were recently sent home on sick certificates.

The E Battery of B Brigade, Royal Horse Artillery, was, prior to the reorganisation, E of C Brigade, and in that capacity went out to India in January, 1873, to relieve E of D Brigade. Major G. F. Blackwood, the officer commanding the battery, and all the other officers belonging to it, have been attached to it for only a comparatively short time. Captain J. R. Slade, the second in command took part in the recent Zulu war, and proceeded to India direct from the Cape. The other officers of the battery—Lieutenants H. Maclaine, E. G. Osborne, and N. P. Powell—have been seven or eight years in the service. The war strength of a Horse Artillery Battery on field service is rather over 200 men, corresponding approximately to the number of horses.

SCENE OF THE BATTLE.

The following is a description of the actual ground on which the battle at Khushk-i-Nakhud was fought, from a correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, who knows the locality well:—

"From Girishk the road crosses the Helmund river, and follows a direction almost true east, right up to Candahar. For some miles after leaving the river the ground on either side is an extensive stony plain, bounded on the north by a considerable chain of hills running parallel to the road, from which several spurs trend outwards, approaching more and more to the road until at last two of these spurs close in the valley of Khushk-i-Nakhud on the west and east, while the parent chain bounds the north. The western spur retires a little from the road, but the eastern spur comes out so much that the road is forced to make a detour round it. From this point to Hauz-i-Madad, a distance of twenty-three miles, the mountains begin to recede, till at the latter place they fall back to form the eastern side of the Argandab Valley. Beginning again at the Helmund, and looking towards the south, the plain as far as Khushk-i-Nakhud becomes more and more undulating, and, culminating at this point, forms elevations which bound the southern part of the Khushk-i-Nakhud valley. The elevations are abrupt and difficult, and though not actually impassable for any arm, yet are sufficient to prevent cavalry and horse artillery passing at anything but a slow walk. From here to Hauz-i-Madad the ground smooths down gradually, patches of cultivation appear, and at last cover the whole country about, leaving nothing bare but the rocky mountain sides and the desert, like a line of red sand. There is a good deal of grape cultivation, especially on the lower slopes of the hills, and, as these vineyards are generally inclosed by a low wall, and the vines are grown in parallel ditches seven to eight feet apart, each ditch three feet wide and four feet deep, the excavated earth being heaped on the middle between the two rows, they form serious impediments to an advance, while at the same time giving excellent cover to skirmishers. The soil of the valley is soft loam, so that the Afghans, who have an excellent system for distributing water, would be able in a few hours to make the whole valley almost impassable for cavalry. Towards the right centre of the valley and 800 yards from the road is a kind of Musjid, marking the tomb of a Mussulman pir, or saint. It stands at the corner of a large vineyard, cultivated by the fakir, who looks after the tomb. The spot is a well-known landmark, on account of three large cypress-trees which grow close by, and can be distinguished for many a mile by their dark massive foliage. On the slopes of the eastern spur, and overshadowed by its last high hill, is situated an old castle. A little less to the east, and a hundred yards south of the road, is a square walled inclosure, of about eighty yards side, and with walls twenty feet high, along the inner side of which, and abutting against them is a row of native round-topped huts, showing that it was probably an old Afghan outpost. It was here that Colonel Malcolmson and Colonel Tanner, of the 2nd Beloochees, took up their position for the night when, last year, they repulsed the attack made upon them by the turbulent tribes of Zemindawar. One more curious feature of the scene yet remains untold—it is that, as the hills are approached, the ground is so sharply and deeply undulating, that in any of the hollows thus formed several thousand men might be hid and lie there quite concealed until those approaching had actually mounted the side of the undulation. Taking all this into consideration, and seeing that there was never sufficient cavalry to feel the enemy, there can be no doubt that Ayoub Khan crossed the Helmund north of the line of hills above mentioned; then it is most probable that he followed the northern slopes until he met the road coming across from Khushk-i-Nakhud, and that would be just by the junction of the eastern spur. By turning to his right at this place he might easily get his infantry along the hollows and sides of the hills almost right up to the old castle. If such was the case, and General Burrows's cavalry and artillery were drawn off to the north of the valley by a feigned attack and flight, then it is easy to see how open it left the British infantry, who must have been drawn up somewhere near the old Afghan outpost."

NARRATIVE OF THE LATE MOVEMENTS.

The following, supplied by the Daily Telegraph, gives the complete narrative of events from the dates of the march of Ayoub Khan from Herat, and General Burrows from Candahar:—

About June 19, Ayoub Khan marched from Herat with the existing Herat force—namely, 4000 regular infantry, 1000 cavalry, and thirty guns, besides a force of 3000 irregular horse, which formed his advance guard, and marched one day's length before the main army. The artillery was of all kinds—large and small—chiefly of Afghan make, but nevertheless, as Ali Musjid proved to us, excellent weapons—and one battery of European-made mountain-guns, four-pounders. To this force Ayoub Khan held out as encouragement the plunder of Candahar, which, since our occupation, has very materially increased in wealth, and so sincere was the belief of success on the part of his soldiery that numbers of the married men brought their families with them to the scene of battle and anticipated victory. The news of this advance reached Candahar in due time, and the Wali, or native Governor, was sent forward to the Helmund with a force of nearly 4000 men, all Afghans, and most of them levies from the district of Candahar. He, however, becoming doubtful of the temper of the troops under his command, and anxious, therefore, as the interval between himself and Ayoub Khan gradually decreased, sent word to Candahar for reinforcements. About June 20 Ayoub Khan reached Farah—the farthest point, by-the-way, attained by our reconnaissances in the campaign of 1878-9—and about the same date the reinforcements asked for by the Wali started from Candahar, under General Burrows. This officer came up to the Wali on July 9, having therefore made the march from Candahar to Girishk by easy marches. Meanwhile, Ayoub Khan, advancing on the same point, and with twice the distance to traverse—for Farah is twice as far from Girishk as Candahar is—was marching with much greater rapidity, for on July 9 his outposts were already annoying those which the Wali had thrown out to Washin.

The artillery and cavalry of the reinforcing brigade, under General Burrows, passed Khushk-i-Nakhud on Wednesday, July 7, and, as said above, joined the Wali on the 9th, Colonel St. John being with the advance. The Helmund river was found to be fordable nearly everywhere, in consequence of the past hot weather and the severe drain made upon the stream by the innumerable irrigation channels which all along the valley draw off its waters for the use of the adjoining crops. General Burrows detached outposts north and south, up and down the river respectively, and each about four miles distant from his own central camp outside Girishk, and awaited Ayoub Khan.

The position for the next four days, from July 10 to 14, was as follows:—The Wali, with his levies, was on the west bank, that nearest to Candahar, with General Burrows on the other, the Girishk side, and an outpost north and south. On the 14th, however, everything was changed, for Colonel St. John, the political officer with the force, having assured himself that the rumours of mutinous intentions among the Wali's levies were well founded, advised their being ordered to cross over to the same side as the British force. This was done, but immediately the order was received a Cabul regiment, which was among the Candahar levies—and which, having been in Cabul last autumn, was probably one of those that murdered our Envoy, Cavagnari, and his suite—gave the signal for mutiny. Their comrades of the infantry and artillery at once responded, and, limbering up the guns and seizing the reserve ammunition, marched off with their waggons and other materials of war along the bank of the river, in the direction of Ayoub Khan's advance, threatening to massacre the Wali, his staff, and cavalry, if he dared to hinder their departure. Day had already broken, and news was sent up the river to our advanced camp to intercept the mutineers. This was successfully accomplished, for a force, crossing the river, came upon them at ten o'clock, and held them in check for two hours till our artillery came up, when the mutineers were rapidly dispersed. St. John telegraphed next day that the punishment inflicted was severe, but admits that the cavalry were recalled from pursuit in consequence of the General's anxiety to get the stolen guns and material back safely into camp. The same officer also reported that the mutineers, disheartened, had "dispersed to their homes;" but, as Ayoub Khan was then at Lar, within two days of Girishk, it was, from the first, far more probable that the majority of these 2000 men, all well armed and fully acquainted with the details and disposition of our troops, joined Ayoub Khan, and they assisted him in inflicting upon us the terrible disaster of Tuesday, the 27th ult.

Their opportune junction, with the consequent accession of strength and confidence, does not, however, appear to have unduly encouraged Ayoub Khan and his Generals, for they advanced with caution, feeling their way, as is evident from the numerous points at which our scouts and patrols met them, with great deliberation. From Bakwa, and other places on the direct road from Farah to Girishk, their arrival was duly announced, always, however, with their advance so covered by their irregular cavalry, thickly thrown out ahead, that when at last, on the 16th, their vedettes were seen from the walls of Girishk, they were also reported from Daman, Lar, and Zarak, many miles to the north.

If, however, the mutiny of the 14th did not encourage the enemy, it would seem to have altered the plans of General Burrows, for on the 15th we find him commencing to fall back from his position on the Helmund to Khushk-i-Nakhud, about thirty miles nearer Candahar, a retrogressive step which, considering that the enemy were actually within two days' march when the retirement commenced, would almost appear to require some more urgent cause in explanation than that given by the Viceroy—namely, the superior abundance of supplies at Khushk-i-Nakhud and the open nature of the ground. Supplies were sufficiently abundant, according to latest news, at Girishk itself, and as a strategic point that town has always been accepted as important and formidable.

However, the fact remains that General Burrows commenced his retreat upon Khushk-i-Nakhud on the 15th of this month, and was in his new position on the 18th, and that between those dates Ayoub Khan reached Girishk, and, passing up the river northwards a short distance, gave the British officers the idea that he was avoiding an engagement, and really directing his march upon Ghuzni. General Burrows appears himself to have believed this, for on the 19th he again struck his camp, and advanced three miles towards the enemy. But Ayoub Khan had never thought of Ghuzni. On the contrary, he was acting with a caution very foreign to the usual character of Afghan war. He halted his army on the banks of the Helmund on the 20th, and, after three days' preparation, crossed the river twelve miles north of Girishk on the 23rd, and taking up his position at the village of Hyderabad, allowed time to his followers and the discontented portion of the population to swell his numbers, while his cavalry patrols, gradually pushing forward, occupied various points of 'vantage so near our front that more than one affair of outposts occurred last week. Thus, on the 22nd, some of the Sind Horse when on outpost duty were surprised by Ayoub's cavalry and two of their number killed; on the 23rd the enemy's horse were seen foraging in all directions close to our camp; on the 24th a body of four hundred of Ayoub's cavalry were dispersed by a detachment of ours while out reconnoitring.

This judicious delay on the part of the enemy was amply justified by results, for during the week that elapsed between their arrival on the Helmund and the fight of Tuesday, the 27th, telegrams from the Viceroy informed us that "a considerable number" of mutineers, besides contingents of "tribal horse and foot," had joined the ranks of the Herat Prince, while it is also admitted in despatches from the same source that the position and object of the main body of the enemy was kept a matter of doubt. As usual, however, whenever a disaster is immediately impending, "the chief Sirdars" were all punctually present in the British camp. And thus passed the eventful week. Ayoub Khan, in his positions at Hyderabad, gradually increasing his strength, and creeping up nearer to our camp behind the masking cover of his numerous cavalry outposts—General Burrows gradually becoming aware of the imminence of an engagement by the larger numbers daily touched by his vedettes and the increasing excitement in the district behind him.

On the 22nd inst. the enemy's number had been swelled to at least 13,000 men by the addition of some 5000 of the people of the district to the original force of 8000, and their cavalry on the following day pushed up to Sunghur, within fourteen miles of our camp. The numbers of these horsemen were so great that General Burrows, apprehending they might venture upon a night raid upon his camp, went into laager—to use the Zulu phrase—shifting his camp a short distance, so as to take advantage of an inclosure for his baggage animals, stores, and sick. The next day, however, the 23rd, the enemy's cavalry again withdrew, and Colonel St. John reported "the main body" as being still at Hyderabad. Ayoub Khan, however, was then preparing for the final march. A distance of twenty-three miles separated him, according to Colonel St. John's last telegram, from our camp on the 23rd, and if it is not altogether futile to guess as to the course of events after that date, we should surmise that, marching all the 24th, the enemy reached Sunghur on that day. On the 25th they would be in sight of our camp, and moving up during that night probably delivered at daybreak on the 26th, last Monday, the disastrous attack which resulted, as we are now informed, in the total defeat and rout of our force.

Hyderabad, now again prominent, is a village twelve miles from Girishk, and it was here, in April, 1879, that a party of the Alizais fell upon our native commissariat officers, killing or wounding several and seizing our supplies and some money, escaping, moreover, without any punishment.

Khushk-i-Nakhud, it should be mentioned, is, in a way, in Afghan eyes, the key of Candahar; for though of no strength, it has twice in recent history really proved the last obstacle to an invader from the Herat direction—Nadir Shah and Kohundil Khan. We ourselves, moreover, in 1842, commenced fortifications at this spot, considering it the best strategic point for defending the great City of the South from attack from the west, and it was here, in 1879, that General Biddulph, retiring from Girishk, was attacked by some 2000 of the Alizai Duranis, one of the most desperate and fanatical tribes of this barbarous region of Zamindawar. In this engagement the enemy fought with all their traditional courage, but, though dearly ten to one, were routed and chased till nightfall by the 3rd Sind Horse.

THE APPROACH TO CANDAHAR.

The following graphic description of the road leading to Candahar from the southward, by which reinforcements will be sent to help the beleaguered garrison under command of General Primrose, is written by a special military correspondent of the Daily Telegraph:—

"Just about half-way between Quetta and Candahar there is a high range, the Khoja, lying right across the line of all advance from one point to the other. The chief route across this is the Khojak pass, which connects the Pishin valley, lying on the Quetta side of it, with the Chaman plain, which lies on the Candahar side. On each slope of the pass we have a camp. That is to say, as you go up the pass from the Pishin side, you come, at a dangerously ugly point of the road, where two ways join, upon a camp, and at the crest of the pass you find there are outposts from this camp perched as sentinels on the two most commanding points. This is 'the Khojak' post. Proceeding on your way, you cross over the crest of the pass, and descend the other slope of it, and, just where it debouches upon the Chaman plain, you find, on the right hand, a very respectable little fort. This is the much-talked-of 'Chaman Chauki,' or Chaman post. It is a nut which the hillmen will find very hard indeed to crack, for not only is the little place a citadel in miniature, but its site is one of natural strength. It is to this point, the Chaman Fort, that the outposts on the road between it and Candahar were called in by General Phayre on Wednesday, the 28th ult., the day after the defeat of General Burrows, by Ayoub Khan, at Khush-i-Nakhud. These posts, going from Chaman to Candahar, are as follows:—Gatai, Dubrai, Mel Mandi, Abdul Rahman, and, I think, Deh-i-Haji and Khushab. At any rate, they were so distributed when I rode back from Candahar in January, 1879. A few brief notes of this interval of country may be of interest. Standing on the ramparts of the Chaman Fort, you look across a plain that stretches to right and left almost indefinitely, and lies spread out flat and bare before you for over twenty miles. At any rate, they told me, when I rode in, that I had been in view of the fort glasses for nearly five hours. Descending on to the plain, you first find yourself in a belt of low scrub-jungle, nowhere higher than your saddle, which runs along the foot of the range, and crossing this, enter upon the real plain. And such a plain! It would be a paradise for golf-players. They could hit their ball into infinity, and watch it travelling the whole way. Here and there patches of grey-leaved southernwood give a woolly appearance to the ground, but otherwise the soil is absolutely bald and bare. The sand of which it is made hardens in places, suggesting a subterranean flow of water, but generally is so friable that you cannot move without an attendant pillar of dust. In the daytime nothing can stir a step on all the vast space without at once betraying itself, and the longer it continues in motion the larger becomes the tell-tale cloud. At ten or a dozen miles off you cannot tell a dog from an escort of cavalry. You see a pillar of sand moving in a certain direction, but that is all. It may only be a runaway camel, or it may be a party of roving Khakurs, but the sand-pillar tells you nothing. It is not, however, the fact that the country is absolutely flat, for here and there, exactly like rocks standing up in the sea, sharp-pointed hills thrust their peaks up out of the level waste. But they do not break the monotony of the level; they only emphasise it. Each hill is separate and by itself; you can ride all round it; and, if you walk your horse up a slope, and look about you, you will see the sand stretching away over the tops of the other eminences just as level as before. At the foot of the first of these hills, on the right of your road, you will come to the white tents of the Gatai camp. Here there was some fighting on Friday. General Phayre had called in the outposts at Mel Mandi, Abdul Rahman, and Dubrai to Gatai, intending to concentrate them at Chaman; but the hillmen of the Khoja spurs, who from their eyries can see across this immense plain, and are always on the watch for the chance of plunder, came down from the hills and intercepted them at Gatai. The Chaman Fort however was on the look-out too. They had watched the long column of dust moving along the road from Dubrai to Gatai—which is within easy telescope range of the fort—and had seen another cloud of sand, which had no regular connection with the day's proceedings, moving at right angles across the plain towards the same point. They knew what it meant well enough, for many a time before word had come to the mess from the signal hill—'Khakurs moving about on the plain'—and in a twinkling the squadron on duty was in the saddle and off, galloping as if for life across the flat expanse, and from the fort the glasses would watch the two big puffs of sand scudding across the plain, as the Sind and Poona Horse, as gallant a cavalry as ever drew sabre for the Queen, chased the Khakurs off the board. So when, on Friday, they saw that suspicious sand-cloud moving across the line of advance of our withdrawing outposts, they knew at once what it was, and away across the flat would dash the green uniforms of the Poona Horse. The fight had commenced by the time they got there, and the outpost was gallantly holding its own; but the hillmen, no doubt, caught sight of the sand rising in a long line between them and the fort, and, further away still, saw the sun glinting from mountain-gun and bayonet, and made off to the hills again.

"Beyond Gatai, towards Candahar, the same dismal level continues for many miles, and then the hills begin to throw out spurs and to close up in line, till the road looks dangerous, lying in some places between overhanging hills, at others traversing steep inclines, thickly strewn with large awkward shingle. Dubrai is a spot where the surprise of a force would be easy, and between that Mel Mandi, in approach and departure, would be a difficult interval for an army to traverse in the face of an enemy bent upon molesting its advance. A little later, towards Abdul Rahman, it becomes worse, and if the Heratis mean serious fighting, they could not select a better spot than this for their first defence of Candahar against General Phayre's reinforcements. Beyond Abdul Rahman it improves, for cultivable land succeeds to this waste of rock and shingle—a veritable waste, for be it remembered that perhaps for forty miles, straight on end, there is not a wild thing growing higher than a man could jump over, and not a blade of grass—and then we pass Deh-i-Haji, and arrive at the cultivated levels of the Khushab plain. These levels can easily be made most formidable to an advancing army, for water abounds, and a single morning's inundation sufficed, in 1879, to impede an army for twenty-four hours. A week of inundation would make the plain quite impassable for guns, or waggons, or cavalry, and the army would have to turn off to the right and creep along the steep slope of the hills. These hills sweep round herein a semicircle (on the right) and suddenly break out at a gap where a neck of elevated land, the slope on each side being tolerably steep, leads into the Candahar Valley. To reach this gap, over which is the only approach to Candahar, our reinforcements—supposing an enemy in position, and the Khushab plains flooded—would have to turn off, as I have said, to the right, and creep round along the foot of the hills, first of all carrying the village at their feet, and then having to clear the heights. Reaching the neck, they would look down upon a plain, and there, lying flat in the middle of it, with its head set against a row of imposing cliffs, they would see the City of Candahar, and, standing up nobly from the northern end, would mark the citadel to which so much interest attaches to-day. The first sight of this city realises all one's dreams of the East, for the surrounding verdure and the glitter of water give it the appearance of great fertility and luxury, while the noble-looking citadel and stately mosque close by impart a striking grandeur to the scene. But all the beauty vanishes on approach. The houses are on a dead level of insignificance, half-ruined and huddled together in irregular masses, the mosque is wretchedly dilapidated, and the citadel itself disappointing. Fortunately, however, for us to-day, its strength is no illusion."

THE GARRISON OF CANDAHAR.

General Primrose has about 3000 men with him in the citadel, and there can be little doubt as to his holding his own till relieved, even in the very probable event of the city rising. His force consists of four guns of the C Battery, 2nd Brigade, and the whole of the 5th Battery, 11th Brigade, Royal Artillery, the Poona Horse, the 7th Royal Fusiliers, the 19th and the 29th Bombay Native Infantry. The Fusilier battalion is commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Alfred Daubeny, who, as a subaltern, took part with the 90th Light Infantry in fighting before Sebastopol, and was in one of the storming parties at the taking of the Redan. He had with him on June last the following officers:—Major Vandeleur, Captains Keyser, Groube, Manning, Conolly, and Adderley; Lieutenants Rodick, Thunder, Anderson, Galt, Porter, Graham, and Drummond Wolff, just promoted; De Trafford, Moss, Wood, Marsh, Barttelot, and Forbes; Paymaster Major F. G. Moore, and Quartermaster Henry Clowes. The two artillery batteries have attached to them (C-2nd) Major Grey, Captain Law, Lieutenants Barry and Smith; (5-11) Major Clennell Collingwood, Captain Hornsby, Lieutenants Fowke, Bell, Irving, and Fox. The 19th Bombay Native Infantry, commanded by Colonel Creagh, Bombay Staff Corps, has Majors Jacob and Trench, Lieutenants Stevenson, Melvill, and Strayner.

The position of a small force under Colonel Tanner at Khelat-i-Ghilzai is precarious, and the anxiety is increased by the knowledge that some weeks ago an attack was threatened by the neighbouring tribes. The troops at that place consist of the 4th Bombay Native Infantry, a company of the 26th, two companies of the 66th, and two guns of a field battery. Khelat-i-Ghilzai, on the road from Candahar northward to Ghuzni and Cabul, is an important fortress of Eastern Afghanistan. We gave an Illustration of Khelat-i-Ghilzai on June 21 last year.

There is a considerable force on the line of communications under General Phayre. Portions of it were much scattered in detachments at small posts, but they are being concentrated, and those at Gatai have already arrived safely at Chaman. The force at Phayre's disposal at Quetta, Sibi, Thal, Chotiali, and other posts consists of the 2nd Light Cavalry, the 1st and 2nd Scinde Horse, three companies of Sappers, the 14th Battery, 9th Brigade, Royal Artillery; No. 2 Mountain Battery, and the 5th, 10th, 16th, 23rd, 27th, and 28th Regiments of Bombay Native Infantry. These are being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, and it is hoped that some of them have already reached Candahar.

BRITISH FORCES IN AFGHANISTAN.

At Cabul the total strength of the British troops is 20,000, and a strong division is ready to move southwards.

In April last General Stewart left Candahar for Cabul with his brigade of Bengal troops, and General Primrose assumed command of the brigade of Bombay regiments which took their place, General Phayre at the same taking over command of the military district of Candahar and the communications with India.

General Phayre holds the country from Chaman to Quetta with more than 3000 men. He is ordered to move forward immediately, to relieve General Primrose at Candahar, while large reinforcements are sent from Bombay and Bengal. To relieve the consequent drain of soldiers upon India, the reliefs from this country, 4500 men, sail at once.

The British regiments in Afghanistan are:—

Cavalry: 6th Dragoon Guards and 9th Lancers. Infantry: 1st battalion of the 6th Foot; 2nd battalion 7th Foot; 2nd battalion 8th Foot; 2nd battalion 9th Foot; 1st battalion 12th Foot; 2nd battalion 14th Foot; 1st battalion 25th Foot; 51st Regiment; 59th Regiment; 2nd battalion 60th Rifles; and the 66th, 67th, 72nd, 85th, and 92nd Regiments. This is exclusive of the native regiments.

The following shows the approximate strength of the entire forces in Afghanistan during the past month:—Cabul field force, first and second division, 12,668; third division, 6907; Khyber line force, 16,006; Khoorum force, 8576; Candahar force, 11,363: total strength of forces, 55,520.

The Bombay reserve is thus composed:—The D Battery, B Brigade, Artillery, at Kurrachee; F Battery, 2nd Brigade, at Hyderabad; 5th Battery, 8th Brigade, at Kirkee; the 1st Madras Cavalry, at Jacobabad; the 11th Foot, en route from Bombay; the 15th Foot at Kurrachee; the 3rd, 9th, and 24th Native Infantry, en route to the front. It is believed that, in addition to these, two strong Bengal Brigades will be sent to join the relieving force, and it is stated that the 2nd Foot have received orders to proceed at once from Bareilly to Sukkur.

The reinforcements proceeding from Bombay and Bengal by the Bolan line for Candahar and the communications are—From Bombay, H Royal Artillery and another battery not named, 15th Hussars, 8th Bengal Cavalry, 63rd Foot, 3rd and 4th Native Infantry; from Bombay, 5-8th Royal Artillery, Mountain Battery (just started from Poona), 78th Foot, 13th and 15th Native Infantry.

Orders have been given to General Roberts to proceed from Cabul to Candahar with a force of 10,000 troops.

THE NEW AMEER OF CABUL.

Abdulrahman or Abdurrahman Khan, who was recently acknowledged by the British Indian Government as Ameer of Cabul, has long been an exile in Turkestan; but he is the lineal representative of Dost Mohammed, the founder of the Barukzai dynasty. He is the eldest son of Afzul Khan, who was in his turn the eldest son of the Dost, and he is thus nephew to the late Ameer Shere Ali. It is believed that Abdurrahman was born about 1830, so that he is now fifty years of age.

When Dost Mohammed died, in 1863, only twelve days after he had crowned his victorious career by taking the city of Herat, his favourite son and nominated heir, Shere Ali, succeeded at first quietly to the throne. Afzul Khan, the

THE MAGAZINES.

"Washington Square" supplies the readers of the Cornhill with nearly the same intellectual stimulus for which in days past they used to be indebted to Mr. Thackeray. Light, lively, graceful, yet blended with serious interest, and appealing forcibly to the sympathies, it belongs essentially to the class of comedy in narrative, yet is not without the suggestion of tragic power. The most remarkable of the miscellaneous contributions is "Vernon Lee's" essay on Faustus and Helena as types of the supernatural. The brilliancy and copiousness of the diction are so great as sometimes almost to obscure the drift of the argument, which is in general that the supernatural must of necessity part with its essential character of weirdness and vagueness in accommodating itself to artistic treatment. Marlowe is consequently a better exponent of the supernatural than Goethe, although he does not understand it nearly so well. A thoughtful paper on English sculpture in 1880 takes a more favourable view of the present position of the art in this country than is usually entertained. "Why did Shakspeare write tragedies?" is a protest against the idea that his personal experience is frequently embodied in his works. "Foreign Titles" is a pleasant sketch of some of the distinctive features of Continental aristocracy, and "The Ship of Fools" is a curious account of Sebastian Brant's quaint old poem, of which, however, the woodcuts would seem to be the most valuable portion.

The leading contribution to Macmillan is a most amusing sketch by a writer, who jocularly objects to the publication of his name after having rendered it quite unmistakable, of an incident of life in a small French provincial town, under the present uneasy relations which political differences have brought about. Our countryman was nearly entrapped in a duel got up to rehabilitate a discredited journalist who, if this article comes to his knowledge, may catch him yet. In an able analysis of the successive enactments on the subject of oaths, Mr. F. Pollock shows that the religious tests they contain were imposed from political motives. There is little else of interest, except General Hutchinson's discussion of the question of naval ordnance, and Mr. Stanley Poole's criticism on the novels of the late Miss Keary.

Blackwood has an interesting review of the history of Central Asia, the "meeting place of empires," a severe scrutiny of the alleged distress in the West of Ireland, a pleasant "talk about sonnets," and a continuation of the amusing sketches of bush life in Queensland. The most entertaining contribution, however, is "Hans Preller," a satire on the extortions of Swiss hotel-keepers in the form of a mediæval legend.

Cardinal Manning's protest against Mr. Bradlaugh's admission to Parliament will attract some attention to an otherwise uninteresting number of the Nineteenth Century, and may carry some weight with those who fail to notice that the Cardinal is employing the self-same arguments with which, if he lived in Spain, he would resist the admission of a Protestant to the Legislature. The unquestionable smartness of Mr. Traill's dialogue on "Political Optimism" will hardly convince any statesman that the doctrine of nationalities is one which he can afford to ignore at this time of day; and Mr. Justin M'Carthy's remonstrance with the Irish landowners on their alleged "panic" is more likely than not to satisfy them that it is well founded. Mr. Tuke's sketch of the bright side of Irish peasant proprietorship is a much more valuable contribution to the subject. The only other noticeable feature in the number is Mr. Ruskin's strange incapacity to appreciate Wordsworth.

The most important article in a rather inferior number of the Fortnightly is one on Irish landed tenure, by Mr. Justice Longfield, whose long experience as a Judge in the Landed Estates Court lends especial weight to his opinions. His general bias is in favour of the landlords, who, he says, are rarely guilty of oppressive or vexatious conduct. He doubts the feasibility of establishing a peasant proprietary in Ireland, and advocates a modification of the Ulster tenant-right custom as the measure best adapted to reconcile all interests. A kindred question is treated in Sir D. Wedderburn's paper on the alarming impoverishment of the Deccan. Here, again, the claims of the landlord—the State in this instance—are by no means exorbitant; but the customs of the people, especially the expense of weddings and the habit of locking up money in personal ornaments, place formidable obstacles in the way of the best-intentioned Government. With reference to the admitted unpopularity of the present Government in the metropolis, Mr. Wemyss Reid justly and forcibly admonishes Londoners that the provinces have long ago ceased to take their cue from London clubs and newspapers. When, however, he twits them with their inability to foresee the result of the late General Election, he should remember that his own party were equally aghast at the election of 1874. Mr. Fiske expands the reasons of the American revolt from Great Britain, and Mr. Leslie Stephen, in no mincing phrase, denounces the hypocrisy which he attributes to the Parliamentary opponents of Mr. Bradlaugh.

Among a number of excellent contributions to the Atlantic Monthly may be especially mentioned the continuation of Mr. Aldrich's "Stillwater Tragedy," a picturesque sketch of "Sicilian Hospitality," a favourable estimate of General Garfield's chances for the Presidency, a capital sketch by Mr. Grant White of English equestrian habits, and one of Mark Twain's peculiar pieces of half-mournful humour.

Scribner's Monthly, as usual, is full of articles equally excellent for their literary treatment and copiousness of illustration. Among these the papers on Canada, Mr. Haden's etchings, and England as described by Dickens, may especially be named. The Victorian Review has more about Victoria than is always the case with it. Señor Castelar contributes an article on the affairs of Europe which certainly entitles him to the credit of a clearer prevision of the result of the late general election than most Englishmen possessed. The Church Quarterly improves decidedly under its present editor. One article, that on Cassiodorus, is of the highest literary merit, and nearly all the rest are distinguished by learning, or scholarship, or philosophical acuteness. The most interesting contribution to the Month is one on George IV. and Queen Caroline, which contains some curious passages from unpublished MSS.

Besides the sequel of Mr. Francillon's "Queen Cophetua," the Gentleman's Magazine has several excellent minor contributions, among which the palm perhaps belongs to Mr. Forfar's sketch of the picturesque Court of a very commonplace Sovereign, the Empress Anne of Russia. Another picture of Court intrigue is portrayed in Mr. Ewald's account, quaintly entitled "A Perished Kernel," of the trial of Lord and Lady Somerset for the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury. Mr. Ewald thinks that James I. himself was concerned in this flagitious business; but there seems an absence of any adequate motive. Mr. Dyer collects the folk-lore of the moon, Mr. Dutton Cook contributes a memoir of Rachel, and Mr. Fitzgerald sketches the Thames between Cremorne and Westminster. Miss Hardy's account of Salt Lake City contains the penetrating remark that those women really adapt themselves to Mormon usages who are more fitted to be mothers than wives. The most remarkable papers in Temple Bar are an excellent sketch of Queen Elizabeth's peril in the reign of her sister, some pleasant specimens of the correspondence of the naïve and egotistic Andersen, and a romantic collection of the numerous instances in which books, sometimes as invaluable as Luther's "Table Talk," have escaped destruction by a hair's breadth. "The Return of Aphrodite" is a spirited poem. "The Violin-Player" continues to be the chief attraction of London Society, "Sophy" of Time, and "A Confidential Agent" of Belgravia, which also has one of Dr. Andrew Wilson's excellent natural-history papers, the subject this time being jelly-fish.

The excellent serials published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin comprise the Magazine of Art, Family Magazine, Quiver, Old and New London, Technical Educator; Longfellow's Poetical Works, Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates; and an Illustrated Book of the Dog.

We have received Tinsley's Magazine, and the Summer Number thereof, entitled "Seaside Maidens," containing ten stirring tales of as many seaside places by G. A. Henty, illustrated by ten page illustrations from the facile pencil of Harry Furniss; the Shilling Serial Issue of Mr. Heath's Fern Paradise, London Society, St. James's Magazine, Argosy, Good Words, Churchman's Magazine, Victoria Magazine, Colburn's New Monthly, St. Nicholas, Science Gossip, Men of Mark, Examples of Works of Art in the South Kensington Museum, Covent-Garden Magazine, Welcome Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Social Notes, Children's Advocate, Animal World, Mission Life, and Chatterbox. Among the Fashion Books are Le Follet, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Myra's Journal, Myra's Mid-Monthly, and Illustrated Household Journal. We have also received Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardeners' Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Day of Rest, Welcome, Social Notes, Boy's Own Paper, Girl's Own Paper, Young England, Union Jack, the Daisy, and the Christian Age.

THE CITY COMPANIES' COMMISSION.

The London Gazette states that the Queen has appointed the Earl of Derby, the Duke of Bedford, Viscount Sherbrooke, Lord Coleridge, Sir R. A. Cross, Sir Nathaniel Mayer de Rothschild, Sir Sydney H. Waterlow, Mr. Alderman Cotton, Mr. Albert Pell, Mr. W. H. James, M.P., Mr. J. F. B. Firth, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P., to inquire into the City companies. Mr. H. D. Warr is appointed secretary. The terms of the Commission are as follows:—

We do hereby require and command you, or any three or more of you, to inquire into all the companies to which these presents apply, and into the circumstances and dates of their foundation and the objects for which they were founded, and how far those objects are now being carried into effect, and into any Acts of Parliament, charters, trust deeds, decrees of Court, or other documents founding, regulating, or affecting the said companies, or any of them:

And we do hereby require and command you, or any three or more of you, to inquire into and ascertain the constitution and powers of the governing bodies of the said companies, and the mode of admission of freemen, livery, and other members of the said companies, and the number of freemen, livery, or other persons constituting the said companies, and the gains, privileges, or emoluments to which all or any of such persons are entitled by reason of their being members of such companies:

And we do hereby require and command you, or any three or more of you, to inquire into and ascertain the officers and servants of such companies, and the salaries or other emoluments to which such officers and servants are entitled, and the mode of appointment of such officers and servants, and the duties which they perform:

And we do hereby require and command you, or any three or more of you, to inquire into and ascertain the property of, or held on trust for or by such companies, both real and personal, and where the same is situate, and of what it is composed, and the capital value of the several descriptions of such property, and the annual income of such property, and the mode in which the property is managed and the income is expended:

And we do hereby require and command you, or any three or more of you, to report to us, under your hands and seals, what you shall find touching or concerning the premisses upon such inquiry as aforesaid, and also to consider and report what measures (if any) are, in the judgment of you or any three or more of you, expedient and necessary for improving or altering the constitution of the said companies or the appropriation or administration of the property or revenues thereof:

And we do hereby empower you to make separate reports in relation to any matter concerning the premisses at such time and in such manner as you, or any three or more of you, may think expedient:

And we do hereby declare that the companies to which these presents apply are all the companies named in the second report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into Municipal Corporations in England and Wales:

And for the better enabling you to form a sound judgment on the premisses, we do hereby authorise and empower you, or any three or more of you, to call before you, or any three or more of you, all such persons as you may judge most competent by reason of their situation, knowledge, and experience, to afford you correct information on the subjects of this inquiry; also to cause all persons to bring and produce before you, or any three or more of you, all and singular records, books, papers, and other documents touching the premisses which may be in the custody or under the control of them, or any of them; also to inquire of the premisses, and every part thereof, by all lawful ways and means whatsoever And we will and command that this our Commission shall continue in full force and virtue, and that you, our Commissioners, or any three or more of you, may from time to time proceed in the execution thereof, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the fourth week in July was 83,116, of whom 46,274 were in workhouses and 36,842 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 721, of whom 487 were men, 187 women, and 47 children under sixteen.

LECTURE ON ASSYRIAN ANTIQUITIES.

Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., Principal of The College, Highbury New Park, gave on Saturday afternoon last, at the British Museum, a lecture on the antiquities in the Assyrian galleries. Among those present were the Bishop of London with his family circle, and the Persian Ambassador, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl of Mount Cashell, Lady Helena Newenham, Sir William and Lady Muir, Sir Thomas Chambers, Mr. Bond, the chief librarian, and a number of clergymen and ladies.

The object of Dr. Kinns was not only to convey views of life as it existed nearly 3000 years ago in the cities of Nineveh and Babylon, but to demonstrate the vast value of the Assyrian remains in the national collection. In a general survey of the collection, Dr. Kinns remarked that it was unique, and its value could not be estimated. It showed us the manners and customs of this very ancient and extinct people. By the pictures in stone and the writings we could see how they lived and how they made war; we could see them in their homes; we could observe their social customs; we could even study their religion. We could, moreover, obtain remarkable confirmation of the truth of Holy Writ by evidence traced out nearly 2000 years before the commencement of the Christian era. Dr. Kinns dwelt at length upon the vast dimensions of the destroyed cities, their magnificence, and the character of their palaces and temples, and pointed out the very great cruelties which were practised upon the captives that are too graphically depicted in many of the sculptures, where the victims are represented as being flayed alive, impaled on sharp stakes, or suffering other unmentionable tortures. In one of the rural scenes, the Assyrian king, Sardanapalus, who quaffs the goblet in an arbour, is gratified by the sight of the head of his enemy, Te-umman, king of Elam, hanging upon one of the trees. The Doctor showed the signet cylinder of Dungi, one of the earliest kings of Babylonia, some 4000 years ago, and the seal of Darius, which was probably attached to the decree which committed Daniel's enemies to the lions' den. The Royal game was the lion. Parks were kept entirely for the king to enjoy the lion-hunt. Lions are finely represented in all stages of the sport, pierced with arrows, being slain with spears, attacking the led horse of the king or his eunuchs. The Chaldean stone with the account of the Deluge was shown, and parallel passages were read from the Chaldean and from the Pentateuch, showing the wonderful agreement as to the relation of the occurrences before and after the Deluge in the two sources of information.

At the close the Bishop of London most cordially thanked Dr. Kinns in the name of the company for an exceedingly instructive and agreeable afternoon, and especially for the interesting confirmations he had given them of the truth of the historical Scriptures.

THE BANK HOLIDAY.

Intermittent showers fell during Monday; but, notwithstanding the weather, vast numbers of holiday-makers were abroad, and the various places of amusement, particularly such as afforded shelter from the rain, were thronged with visitors. The Crystal Palace was visited by 40,000 persons and the Alexandra Palace by the enormous number of 107,852. At the National Gallery the admissions numbered 24,160 against 13,000 last year; at the British Museum they were 9290 against 7600 last year. The Royal Academy had 5800 visitors up to five o'clock, and the Society of British Artists, which was opened free for the first time, had 1100 visitors. The Tower was visited by about 3000 persons, the Zoological Society's Gardens by 18,734, and Kew Gardens by 32,000, or a falling off of 21,000 as compared with last year. The total number of visitors to the gardens of the Royal Horticultural Society, South Kensington, on payment of 2d. each, was 11,370. Large numbers of people went to Hampstead-heath and Epping Forest; but here, of course, as at the other open-air resorts, the amusements were more or less spoilt by the rain. The State apartments at Windsor Castle were visited by 5678 persons.

Numerous excursion-trains carried large numbers of holiday-makers from the various railway termini to Brighton, Hastings, Ramsgate, Margate, Eastbourne, Portsmouth, and other places; and, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, the Thames steamers, both up and down the river, were largely patronised. There was, with few exceptions, an increase in the railway traffic as compared with last year. The chief falling off was on the Great Western line, which booked only 28,000 passengers at the London stations, against 33,000 last year.

The visitors to the Continent were more numerous than usual. The Flushing boat from Queenborough last Friday carried 400 passengers. The Great Eastern Railway had also a full train of passengers for the Continent on Saturday evening from Liverpool-street station. Their steamer the Claud Hamilton left Harwich with 286 passengers, and the Lady Tyler with 220 passengers, for Rotterdam.

It will interest those curious in such matters to know that at the Alexandra Palace there were consumed 720 dozen of spirits, 470 dozen of wine, 1600 dozen bottles of ale, 750 dozen bottles of stout, 9000 dozen of lemonade, ginger beer, soda water, and seltzer water, 350 barrels of draught ale, 30,000 cups of tea and coffee, 12,600 one-shilling teas, 22 tons of meat, 60,000 buns and cakes, 12 van loads of salad, 7 tons of potatoes, 7600 dinners, 42,000 loaves of bread. £440 worth of fruit was sold, and £175 was taken for sweetmeats alone. It is estimated that plate to the value of £100 was either broken or lost. The staff in the refreshment departments numbered 1140 persons. All the entertainments were free, and it is calculated that 8000 visitors attended the theatre; 20,000 saw the different performances of "Red Riding Hood; 12,000 listened to the concerts; and 9000 witnessed the wrestling tournaments.

A Board of Trade inquiry was held last Saturday into the loss of the sailing-ship Essex, with twenty-five lives. Her cargo consisted of rice, and the investigation was regarded as a representative one, owing to the frequent loss of rice-laden vessels. The Commissioners decided that she was too deeply laden, that the cargo was stowed so as to endanger her safety, and that she was too hurriedly loaded.

Lord Dunglass, says the Glasgow Herald, has in his possession seventy-nine coins recently recovered by the workmen engaged gutting out the foundation of the building in Main-street, Douglas, known as the "Old Lodge." The gold coins are very well preserved, most of them having been deposited in a jar. The following is a list of the coins briefly detailed:—Nine Elizabethan shillings and fourteen sixpences; four English gold coins called the unit, five English shillings, two sixpences, and two Irish shillings of James I.; four thistle marks of James VI., Scotland, dated 1601; two English half-crowns, fourteen shillings, and three sixpences of Charles I.'s reign; one small Scottish copper coin called a "turner;" six dollars of Albert and Elizabeth of Brabant, and seven quarter dollars; three dollars of Philip IV. of Spain, and one half-dollar; one small coin of Charles IX. of Sweden, 1607; one small defaced and illegible coin

NOVELS.

The autobiographical form of writing is a little awkward sometimes, as, for example, in the case of the three volumes entitled In Her Majesty's Keeping, by the Hon. Lewis Wingfield (Richard Bentley and Son); for the reader, especially just now, when so much literature is composed by ex-convicts and ticket-of-leave men, might not unreasonably conclude that the author is a murderer, a "lifer," and has to report himself at the end of every volume he writes, or oftener, to the police. The story, in fact, is, for the most part, a record of the experiences supposed to have been undergone by an unfortunate gentleman, an artist by profession, who, having Spanish as well as English blood in his veins, and a woman "with a waspish tongue" for a wife, is goaded, as the author seems to insinuate that it is quite natural for anybody to be, into rushing away from home, getting drunk "at a pothouse of questionable repute," felling "a man with a quart pot," falling upon him on the ground, and proceeding "to hammer in his skull with it" until he is dead. At any rate, this is what the cultivated artist is supposed to do; and having done it, having been tried and found guilty of wilful murder, he is sentenced to death, but respited through certain representations made to the Home Secretary. His sentence is commuted to penal servitude for life, with a chance that, if he should behave well for twenty years, he may, perhaps, have his case reconsidered, "and even be released on a ticket-of-leave." Meanwhile, by the assumption of a wrong name and by other means he keeps his fate a secret from his "waspish" wife and his angelic daughter; and in due time he is driven in "Black Maria" to Pentonville, and afterwards removed to Dartmoor. The idea of the book seems to have been suggested by the publications which have been issued pretty plentifully of late years, professedly written by gentlemen who have been "in trouble;" and the object of it seems to have been, on the one hand, to show how little dependence is to be placed upon certain statements contained in those publications, and, on the other hand, to present a truthful picture of what takes place in our penal establishments, to acknowledge what is good in them, to hold up to reprobation what is bad, and to offer suggestions for improvement. The way in which this is done is as follows:—The hot-blooded artist, who has wielded the quart-pot to such murderous effect, gives a series of sketches of various comrades in like condemnation with himself, as well as of a few warders and of a governor or two, a chaplain, a doctor, and a scripture-reader; and then the chief warder is permitted to discourse in his own peculiar language about criminals, or at any rate prisoners, their conduct and their treatment, from his own point of view. It will be clear, therefore, that to class such a work among novels is to take a little liberty, excusable on the ground of convenience; there is little or nothing in the narrative beyond a plain, graphic description of certain exceedingly repulsive characters and extremely disagreeable phases of life. Perhaps the most powerful and most remarkable part of the book is that in which attention is drawn to the means whereby, even in a prison, under the severest discipline, beneath the closest supervision, force of character may make one prisoner the slave of another, and even the custodian the slave of the creature in custody. Or if force of character seem to be too favourable a term to apply to the influence exercised by a brutal bully or an ingenious knave, let some more appropriate words be chosen to express what is intended. "I have tried," says the author, "by means of parable and exhortation, to point out sundry defects in certain branches of the penal system, as well as one or two serious blemishes with reference to other matters—notably, with regard to the probably well-meaning, but certainly abortive, action of the Prisoners' Aid Societies, and the outrageous treatment of military prisoners." That is the gist of his work; and the reader will now know what to expect—something very different from a merely pleasant, or even unpleasant, romance, having no object beyond amusement or beguilement. As regards military offences, however, it may be added, in conclusion, that the author, like so many other persons, does not appear to be sufficiently impressed with the enormity of some of the military offences he specifies. For a soldier to be insubordinate, or to strike or attempt to strike a superior, is an offence which it would be highly dangerous to regard as anything but vile; attach the least idea of heroic weakness to it, and, as a Roman would have said, "Actum est de exercitu."

Irresistible literary gentlemen, with their characteristic doubts about the existence of a Supreme Being, seem to come off second best, even in this world, according to the example presented in Grisel Romney, by M. E. Fraser-Tytler (Marcus Ward and Co.), which is the title of a very pleasantly written novel, in two slender volumes. The purpose of the story, if there be any particular purpose, is apparently to show how a judgment overtook an irresistible literary gentleman, who rejoices in the somewhat plebeian name of Jack Hunt, who captivates women with an ease which reminds one of the manner in which the great Cæsar used to come, see, and conquer, and who, nevertheless, lives to find each heroine married to the person popularly known as "another," after he has himself been engaged to both angels. Why he should meet with so humiliating a fate is hardly to be explained on any other ground than that the author desired to read a severe lesson to those clever paragons, not uncommon in the present day, who, though they are unimpeachable on the score of soberness, temperance, and chastity, have no sound religious convictions, and are all abroad on matters of faith. The worst of it is, as often happens in novels, we are obliged to take Mr. Hunt's stupendous abilities and attractiveness a great deal upon trust; although it must be acknowledged that, if he found "reviewing" so profitable a vocation as he seems to have found it, he was certainly a very wonderful man, a very alchemist indeed. To the ordinary reader it may appear that Mr. Hunt's great strength lay in an "ulster," which he was wont to wear, and upon which some unnecessary stress seems to be laid, unless it was endowed with certain properties similar to those which the cap of Fortunatus is fabled to have possessed. However all this may be, it is undeniable that the story is a very pretty story, though slight and barren of either remarkable incident or profound study of character. A paralytic stroke and a runaway carriage, the latter unattended by fatal consequences, so far as life and limb are concerned, comprise almost, if not quite, the whole of the more stirring occurrences; and novel-readers must by this time be perfectly callous in the presence of such ordinary calamities. On the other hand, there is a great deal of agreeable prattle, a vision of tableaux vivants, a sound of lively music, a patter of dancing feet, a scent of orange-blossoms, a pervading atmosphere of love, a gleam of bright eyes, an occasional duet of kissing. It is, in fact a picture of real life, as life is led among the comfortable classes, though the picture is but a trifling sketch, with the figures somewhat indistinct and the colour lightly laid on.

The 30th Hussars, a regiment which will probably be looked for in vain in Hart's "Army List," are giving a ball at the commencement of the second of the two volumes entitled Alan Dering, by the Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh (Richard Bentley and Son); and among the dancers at that ball the very happiest hearts are to be found in the bosoms of Alan Dering, a captain in the aforesaid regiment, and Rosabel Dumaresque, "the acknowledged beauty of the evening." Alan and Rosabel are engaged to be married; and in due time the marriage takes place. He is represented to be a dreamer, a poetical, or at any rate a romantic, thinker; she is a sweet, pink and white, pretty creature, with a soul which soars a very little way, if at all, above millinery. Now, in former days, as we have already learned from the first volume, Alan has fallen in with and fallen in love with a very superior young woman, with more than his own proportion of mental and spiritual depth and elevation; but she has been obliged to refuse him, because she has promised her eccentric old father, Lord Ercildoun, to marry her cousin, Sir Francis Ruthven. So Alan and Rosabel are married, and so are Sir Francis and Cecil, the lady with the unusually liberal allowance of soul. Lady Ruthven, as Cecil has now become, is very soon left a widow, her husband having died whilst they were abroad, and her reappearance in London society threatens to be a serious matter for the peace of the Derings' household. For Alan and Cecil have each been cherishing a certain "dream" from the very first day almost of their acquaintance, a dream in which each becomes the complement of the other's happiness. Indeed, Alan is so greatly exercised in mind that he, a married man too, shocking to relate, does not hesitate to tell his passionate tale of love to the charming widow, and profess his intention of refusing to follow his regiment to India so that he may remain within the magic circle of her immediate influence in England. Hereupon the noble widow speaks out nobly, and, though not concealing her favourable sentiments towards him, exacts from him a promise to be true to honour and duty, join his regiment, and discharge a faithful husband's functions towards his comparatively silly but certainly unoffending wife. He promises and fulfils his promise; but his steadfastness is not tried for very long: the novelist, all-powerful, comes to the rescue, removes the silly wife to a more distant and a better land than India, and brings the widow and her lover together again. This is really all the history of Alan Dering; though with it is loosely connected another, of a somewhat tragic and pathetic but hackneyed sort, the only object of which, one would say, is to put Alan Dering in possession of certain property. The portions of the story which exhibit the most indisputable signs of excellence are those in which Lord Ercildoun and his daughter, Cecil Ruthven, are introduced: the eccentric old nobleman, especially, is very well sketched, and it is almost a pity that there is so little of him.

Irresistible literary gentlemen, with "no very fixed belief in a God," appear destined to take a position as heroes, formerly occupied, in novels of more or less fashionable life, by rakish captains and wicked lords; and, in accordance with the growing practice, the hero of There's Rue for You, by Mrs. Arthur Kennard (Chapman and Hall) is a poet, whose works, strange to observe, have an enormous sale. He is also a diplomatist—that is to say, he seems to be attached in some capacity to the diplomatic profession. He is likewise a madman, which is the best explanation of his extraordinary proceedings; although to give extracts from the journal in which he jotted down his ravings is a little hard on the reader. However, such as he is, he is encountered very early in the narrative, having just written a poem, immensely successful and subversive of the whole moral and conventional code; a poem which, when we first make the heroine's acquaintance, she is on her way to demand at the circulating library. Now this heroine is a beautiful married woman, whose course of reading, both before and after marriage, is scarcely calculated to mould her into the simple, unsophisticated mother of children, such as her honest, manly, and, for all his wealth, unpretentious husband would like to see her. She has, evidently, restless, romantic, intellectually ambitious yearnings; she is, in fact, a dangerous woman to be brought in contact with the fascinating literary hero. Or, perhaps, such contact may be said to threaten danger to both. They, therefore, of course, become extremely intimate; he saves her darling child's life, and she gives him a locket containing her own hair. She even allows him to use language to her to which she ought not to have listened; and, having listened to it, having also shown some very singular emotion in his company and even at his presence, she certainly supplies him with some little, or by no means little, reason for supposing that the ardent love with which she inspires him is to a very considerable extent reciprocated by her. But he cannot be excused, save on the ground of insanity, for the incredible baseness of his conduct in betraying what he unquestionably was justified in suspecting might possibly be the state of the lady's feelings towards him to her own husband, under especially critical circumstances, and treacherously contriving to prevent an explanation between the husband and wife. Happily, the husband knocks him down; but that is a mere trivial detail. The wife is estranged from her husband, debarred from seeing her children, and flies to Italy—a course which gives the author an opportunity of airing a little easy Italian, just as a few equally easy lessons in French and German have already been impressed upon the reader. What is the end of it all may be left for others to divine or to discover from the book itself, which consists of but two volumes; it must be doubted, however, whether much sympathy will be felt for the heroine, who acts, to say the least of it, with most censurable imprudence. The story is of particularly slight texture, and not remarkable for originality in plot, characters, or incidents; it contains little to instruct or exercise the mind, and little or nothing to call forth emotion; but it is distinguished for the power of reproducing in a lively style, with abundant detail, the scenes and the gossip which are supposed to make up the daily social life of well-connected and well-to-do people, and there are thousands of readers over whom this power has an influence more potent than any other.

The autobiographical method is adopted in the first chapter of the story contained in the three volumes entitled Lady Laura, by Mary Elizabeth Christie (Strahan and Company), which commences with an account of a picture-gallery and certain wonderful portraits contained therein; but at the beginning of the second chapter the first person is dropped, and it appears that the story which is to come will have little or nothing to do with the person who narrates it; and we are warned that it is to be "a quiet story of modern days, in which is no mystery but such as is revealed in every unfolding of human character; no horror but that which attends the passage of pure spirits from dreamland into life; no dramatic movement but the play of passion and principle among the shifting motives of the heart; no outcome but the time-worn passage through error and repentance into the open spaces of forgiveness and atonement." The impatient reader, therefore, may be inclined to growl out that, if it be so, then fifty good pages have been wasted in unnecessary verbiage, and that the look-out is not encouraging for lovers of thrilling incident. But connection is kept up with the introductory chapter by an occasional allusion; and a reader's senses may be pleasantly affected by something more wholesome than thrilling incidents, by vivid descriptions of natural scenery and by an interesting analysis of natural feelings and natural proceedings. Those excellent substitutes for causes which produce a questionable excitement are not altogether absent from the novel under consideration; but, on the other hand, they are not present in such quantity and force as so relieve the story from a certain oppressiveness arising from the too great prevalence of mere talk and sentiment over real business and brisk movement. The writing is very good throughout, and very powerful in parts; and there is, from first to last, a current of strong feeling, and a tone of moral and intellectual superiority, real superiority, without any airs and pretences. There are few readers, however, who can keep their attention fixed through page after page of moralising, philosophising, speculating, and rhapsodising, however admirable the ideas and the language may be. The tale is, on the whole, a painful one; and the main source of the pain is that which is so commonly drawn upon, and will probably never be exhausted by novelists. A highly-gifted gentleman belonging to the literary heroes just now in vogue marries the wrong lady, and the consequences are such as may be easily imagined. The right lady, being an intimate friend of the wrong lady, is, of course, constantly crossing the path of the married couple, and the complications become not only serious, but dangerous. But these complications are managed by the author with great delicacy and discretion, although the reins of passion are by no means tightly held; and the seventh commandment, which is at times, apparently, in imminent peril of irremediable breakage, receives no infringement of which human laws or society can take cognisance. Of course, this result cannot be attained without the cost of at least one embittered life, and, perhaps, of one broken heart; and it may be a question whether the penalty exacted be not too severe and be not inflicted upon the wrong person. At any rate, the chief sufferer, whom a lenient author might easily have let off with a lighter sentence, will probably be considered to have deserved the extreme severity, if at all, for unreasonable adoration of a being whose transcendent merits will not be conspicuous to everybody.

The publication of such tales as that which is contained in the single volume entitled The Rival Doctors: by A. Lapointe, translated from the French by Henri Van Laun (J. C. Nimmo and Bain), is highly commendable for many reasons, and especially because it tends to correct the erroneous ideas which prevail among many, if not most, English people, who, misled by a peculiar sort of Parisian literature, are full of apprehension concerning the moral, or rather immoral, atmosphere to which readers of French stories may be exposed. It would be difficult to mention any English work of fiction pervaded by a healthier moral tone than that of "The Rival Doctors;" though, certainly, there is just one scene in which, without the slightest suspicion of pruriency, the details of a scandalous plot to ruin the character of sundry persons of both sexes are described with somewhat startling bluntness. That is the only scene to which the most sensitive reader could object; and the objection would not be on the score of immorality, of which there is not a tittle, but on the ground of plain speaking. The story is particularly pleasant reading; perfectly simple, to the verge of crudeness occasionally; with plenty of character and incident, and without any tedious digressions; and it presents a charmingly novel spectacle of French village life, as well as a very instructive and interesting exposition of the French marriage-laws. The rival doctors form, of course, a contrast between the good and the bad, the learned and the ignorant; and if the good one makes love after an effusive and a high-flown style which may make an English reader smile, allowance must be made for Gallic nature and Gallic modes of expression. The translator is well known as one to whom the French language is as familiar as, even if it cannot be exactly considered, his own; and it may, therefore, be taken for granted that he is never at fault in his appreciation, though he is sometimes evidently a little astray in his rendering. He is, perhaps, not more un-English than a Scotchman or an Irishman in his management of "shall" and "will" or "would" and "should," but when he persistently translates "ignorer" by "ignore," he shows, as in some other instances, that he has not complete command of the English language. The incompleteness, however, is scarcely sufficient to call for notice, and certainly does not interfere with the enjoyment of perusal.

The translation, by Miss Bertha Ness, of Edmond About's Story of an Honest Man (3 vols., Sampson Low and Co.), will bring to many English readers an improved acquaintance with French middle-class social life and character. There are, it is to be hoped, as well in that country as in our own, not a few "honest men" of the intelligent and high-spirited bourgeois type shown in Pierre Dumont, the hero of this fictitious autobiography. He is the son of a brave working carpenter at the little town of Courcy, in Touraine, and grandson of a retired veteran soldier of the Republic and the Empire. The death of his father, in gallantly doing his duty as a sapeur-pompier in the fire at M. Simonnot's earthenware factory, is the first important event of Pierre Dumont's experiences. He becomes an artisan of that establishment, and rises to a post of confidence in its commercial department, which sends him to the London Great Exhibition, and all round Europe, and by which he gains wealth and an influential position in the world. But his heart remains true to early friendships, and the wife he chooses to wed, after all, is Mdlle. Barbe-Luce Bonafigue, the arch little Southern girl, who seems to make him as happy as he deserves. Among the comrades of Pierre Dumont is one Basset, a stern Republican, whose character is a truthful portraiture of the disposition of some of those concerned in the Revolution of 1848, and in resistance to the Napoleonic coup d'état of 1851. The narrative extends farther to the German invasion of 1870, and to the siege of Belfort, in Alsace, where the "honest man," being a true patriot though no politician, serves among the defenders of that fortress. It is an interesting, animated, and characteristic story of real French life, not of Parisian, but of provincial society, in which there are elements of moral worth to a considerable amount.

Vice-Chancellor Malins had before him, in the Chancery Division on Saturday, an application on behalf of Sir Henry Havelock to obtain an order for the annual payment of a sum of £2700 out of an estate bequeathed to him and his heirs in tail under the will of his cousin, named Allan. The will of the testator directs that the income of his estate shall be accumulated at compound interest for twenty-one years, and then invested in land, and that a dispute of the provision of the will shall entail a forfeiture. According to these provisions Sir Henry Havelock will have attained the age of seventy years before he can derive advantage under the will, and he sought to obtain payment of the sum specified in order properly to bring up his children. Vice-Chancellor Malins regretted that at present he saw no means of granting so reasonable an application. He directed that the question should be more fully argued, and in the meantime authorised the immediate payment of £1500 without prejudice to his future decision.

OBITUARY.

THE HON. GREVILLE T. HOWARD.

The Hon. Greville Theophilus Howard died on the 28th ult., at his seat, Castle Rising, King's Lynn, Norfolk. He was born Dec. 22, 1836, the second son of Charles John, seventeenth Earl of Suffolk and tenth Earl of Berkshire, by Isabella, his wife, second daughter of the late Lord Henry Thomas Molyneux Howard (brother of the twelfth Duke of Norfolk), and was next brother of the present Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire. He received his education at Christ Church, Oxford, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1863, and was formerly a Commissioner in Lunacy. He inherited the estate of Castle Rising in 1876, under the will of his aunt, the Hon. Mrs. Howard. The Hon. Mr. Howard married, Sept. 18, 1873, Lady Audrey Townshend, youngest daughter of the late Marquis Townshend, and leaves a young family of two sons and two daughters.

MR. WILSON, OF RIGMADEN.

William Wilson, Esq., of Rigmaden Park, Kirkby Lonsdale, and Lunesdale, Torquay, J.P. and D.L. for Westmorland, died on the 26th ult., aged seventy. He was second son of Christopher Wilson, Esq., of Rigmaden, by Catherine, his wife, daughter of James Wilson, Esq., J.P., of Kendal, and succeeded his brother in 1870. Mr. Wilson, whose death we record, was educated at Haileybury College, was formerly in the Indian Civil Service, and served as High Sheriff for the county of Westmorland in 1863. He married, first, in 1843, Maria Letitia, daughter of Richard P. Hulme, Esq., of Maisonnette, Devon, which lady died in 1873; and secondly, in 1875, Elizabeth, daughter of John Morland, Esq., formerly of Capplethwaite Hall, Westmorland. By his first wife he leaves, with other issue, a son, Christopher Wyndham Wilson, Esq., J.P., of High Park, Kendal.

GENERAL SIR M. STACK.

General Sir Maurice Stack, K.C.B., late 3rd (Queen's Own) Bombay Cavalry, died on the 20th ult. at the Hayes, Prestbury, near Cheltenham. He was born 1796, the second son of the late Rev. John Stack, Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, by Eliza, his wife, daughter of Captain Barker, R.N., and entered the Army in 1815. Besides various minor affairs, he served in the campaign in Scinde under Sir Charles Napier, and at the Battle of Hyderabad. He attained the rank of General in 1873, and was placed on the retired list in 1877. The General was nominated C.B. in 1843, and K.C.B. in 1867. He married, in 1824, Cecilia, daughter of Hugh Spottiswoode, Esq., of the Madras Civil Service, and leaves a son, Major Charles Edward Stack, of the Bombay Army.

VICE-ADMIRAL BARNARD.

Vice-Admiral Frederick Lamport Barnard, of Furzebrook, Axminster, died suddenly on the 28th ult., aged sixty-seven. He was eldest son of the late Rear-Admiral Edward Barnard, entered the Royal Navy in 1827, and served successively on the home station, at the Cape of Good Hope, Lisbon, and in troop-ships to North America and the West Indies. He was for a time Senior Officer at Buenos Ayres. He attained the rank of Rear-Admiral retired list in 1874, and Vice-Admiral last year.

The deaths are also announced of:—

John Marcus Barron, Esq., of Georgestown, County Waterford, J.P., on July 19, at Turret House, Tramore.

Colonel Henry Zouch Darrah, late of the Bengal Staff Corps, on the 6th ult., at Genoa, aged forty-nine.

Major Quintin Shaw Awdry Jamieson, Madras Staff Corps, on June 20, at Rajahmundry, aged forty-four.

The Rev. Edward Banister, for twenty-one years Vicar of Besthorpe, Norfolk, on the 24th ult., aged sixty-one.

Lieutenant-Colonel Septimus Lyster, late 94th Foot, and late of The Firs, Brentwood, Essex, on the 20th ult., in his sixty-fourth year.

Captain Henry Maynard Bingham, R.N., on the 28th ult., aged fifty-one. He was second son of the late Rev. Richard Bingham, Vicar of Queenborough, Kent.

The Rev. Samuel Brodrib Bergne, for many years one of the secretaries of the British and Foreign Bible Society, on the 19th ult., aged seventy-four.

James L. Hammond, Esq., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and an Assistant Charity Commissioner for England and Wales, on the 23rd ult., at Clyde Villa Hammersmith, aged fifty-one.

Thurlow Hovell Godfrey, late Captain H.E.I.C.S., on June 25, at Coimbatore; and William Haley Godfrey, Retired Lieutenant-Colonel H.E.I.C.S., on April 12, at Ootacamund. They were sons of the late Major Charles Godfrey, R.H.A., and grandsons of the Right Rev. Thomas Thurlow, Bishop of Durham.

The Hon. Harriet Anne Waldegrave, on the 26th ult., in her eighty-seventh year. She was the third daughter of William, first Lord Radstock, G.C.B., who was elevated to the Peerage for his distinguished naval services, by Cornelia, his wife, second daughter of David Van Lennap, Esq., of Smyrna, and was sister of Vice-Admiral Lord Radstock, father of the present peer.

The Hon. Mrs. Monckton (Arabella Martha), of Southwell Manor, Notts, suddenly, on the 25th ult., at Schwalbach, Germany. She was daughter of the Rev. John Robinson, Rector of Widmerpool, Notts; was married, June 10, 1845, to Colonel the Hon. Edmund Gambier Monckton, brother of the sixth Viscount Galway, and was left a widow, Oct. 7, 1872, with four sons and three daughters. Her eldest son is heir-presumptive to the viscounty of Galway.

Lieutenant-Colonel Alexander William Adair, 2nd Somersetshire Militia, J.P., of Heatherton, Somerset, and of Colhays, Devon, from a fall from his horse. Colonel Adair was eldest son of the late Alexander Adair, Esq., of Heatherton; received his education at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford (where he graduated M.A. 1856); and was formerly Captain in the Coldstream Guards. He married, 1860, Caroline, daughter of J. G. Turnbull, Esq., late Accountant-General at Madras, and leaves issue.

The Hon. Arthur Lascelles, J.P. and D.L., on the 19th ult., at Norley, Cheshire, aged seventy-three. He was the youngest son of Henry, second Earl of Harewood, by Henrietta, his wife, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-General Sir John Saunders Sebright, Bart., and was educated at Christ Church, Oxford. He married, Nov. 18, 1834, Caroline Frances, fourth daughter of the late Sir Richard Brooke, Bart., and had three sons and seven daughters. His eldest son is Major Walter Richard Lascelles, of the Rifle Brigade.

The Hon. Chichester Thomas Skeffington, on the 18th ult., at Charlemont-terrace, Kingstown, near Dublin. He was the second son of Thomas Henry, Viscount Ferrard (only son of the Right Hon. John Foster, afterwards Lord Oriel, last Speaker of the Irish House of Commons), by Harriet, his wife, in her own right Viscountess Massereene, only daughter of the last Earl of Massereene. Mr. Skeffington married, Dec. 20, 1845, Amelia, second daughter of the late Arthur Blennerhasset, Esq., of Ballyseedy, County Kerry, and had four sons and six daughters. His third daughter is Lady Muskerry.

CHESS.

E J M (Jamaica).—The game is well played by A F M, but so poorly by his adversary as to deprive it of all interest. If found correct, the problem shall have a diagram.

H H (Broadmoor).—Thanks; it shall be examined.

Senex.—The key move of the solution of No. 1891 is 1. K to Kt 7th.

Dr F St (Blandford-square).—The correction is noted, and the problem as amended shall be re-examined.

Leonce B (Liverpool).—There were fourteen competitors in the Grand Tourney of 1862 and six prizes. The gentleman mentioned gained the third prize, value £30.

T W N (Fulham).—The problem is by Herr Bayer, and has been already published in London and elsewhere.

W S V (Paddington).—It is unsuitable. There are not a dozen persons in the world who would attempt the solution of a problem in forty-one moves, although we agree with you that such compositions are frequently simpler than those in fewer moves.

H F A (New York).—The paper comes regularly to hand. Thanks.

Knight Errant.—There is only one solution of No. 1898, and that is the author's.

H L (Reading).—If White touched the adverse Pawn he is bound to capture it.

11. Castles	Castles
12. Kt to K sq

Such an early retreat bodes ill to the White forces. If, however, he had played 12. Kt to K 5th, Black would probably have continued with 12. Q to B 2nd, followed, on the retreat of the Knight to B 4th, by 13. B to K Kt 5th.

12.	R to K sq
13. P to Q B 3rd	P to Q R 3rd

A very fine conception. He now threatens to win the Queen by 14. B to K Kt 5th, a move that would be ineffective while this square is unguarded.

WHITE (Mr. A.)	BLACK (Mr. E.)
14. P to Q Kt 4th

Overlooking the object of Black's last move. His best resource here appears to be 14. P to Q 4th.

14.	B to K Kt 5th
15. Q takes B	Kt takes Q
16. P takes Kt

It does not matter in such a position what course he takes, but, on general principles, it would have been better to capture the Bishop.

16.	Q to Q 3rd

Obviously, 16. Q to B 5th is stronger.

17. P to K Kt 3rd	Kt takes K B P
18. R takes Kt	Q to B 3rd
19. P to Q 4th	P takes P en pas.
20. Kt takes P	R to K 8th (ch)
21. K to Kt 2nd

Mate in two moves would have followed the capture of the Rook.

21.	B takes R
22. B to B 4th	Q R to K sq

The shortest road to the end in view.

23. Kt takes B	P to K Kt 4th
24. B to B 7th	Q R to K 6th
25. B to Kt 6th	Q to B 6th (ch)
26. K to R 3rd	R to K Kt 8th

Mate.

The judges of the American Congress Problem Tourney (Messrs. Carpenter, Cook, and Waterbury) have awarded the prizes as follows:—First prize, 100 dols., to the set, "Per aspera, ad astra;" second prize, 50 dols., to the set, "Sub hoc signo vinces;" third prize, 25 dols., to the set, "Varieties;" fourth prize, a valuable collection of mineralogical specimens, to the set, "Summer is over." The Turf, Field, and Farm prize of 25 dols for the best problem in the tourney has been awarded to the four-move position in the set bearing the motto, "Honour to whom honour is due."

The first prize in the tourney at Brunswick, organised by the West German Chess Association, was won by Herr Louis Paulsen. Messrs. Blackburne and Mason, having learned at Wiesbaden that this tourney was not intended by the promoters to be of an international character, did not claim to enter the lists, and, consequently, no representative of English or American chess engaged in it. Both players would very probably have received a cordial welcome, but they showed good taste in not intruding upon a number of amateurs who had elected to spend their brief holiday in the exercise of their favourite pastime.

The Chessplayer's Chronicle for August opens with a continuation of "W. W.'s" remarkably clear and concise review of the openings, which is followed by a selection of games, with original annotations. The news of the month is noted by the editor, and the problem world is comprehensively reviewed by Mr. Andrews. A good selection of chess stratagems completes a capital number. In the news of the month is a note of Mr. H. F. Gastineau's annual garden-party, which was attended by most of the leading metropolitan chessplayers, and which, we are glad to learn, was favoured with fine weather. In that respect Peckham was superior to the Strand, where we can bear witness a thunderstorm raged throughout the afternoon of the festival. Mr. Andrews notes that a problem under the motto, "Tamajo Caros Nipomi Kotos," competing in a tourney organised by a Leghorn journal, is a copy of one published in this column on July 18, 1868, and appends this comment. "The Illustrated London News seems a favourite hunting ground for dealers in coincidence and adapters of old problems. The above makes the sixth abstraction from its columns that has come under my observation during the last five years. Of this number four were absolute reproductions and two extensions by the addition of an extra move." "Dealers in coincidence" will please observe that their chance of escaping detection is very remote when their pretensions spread beyond the obscure circles they were designed to entertain. In common with some of Mr. Andrews's correspondents, we believe the companion problem to this fraud to be an old acquaintance, and reproduce it in the hope that some of our readers may fully recognise, and inform us of the name of the author.

White: K at Q B square, Q at K 5th, Kt at K Kt 7th; Pawns at K Kt 2nd and K B 6th.

Black: K at K R 5th, B at K Kt 8th, Kt at K 6th; Pawns at K Kt 4th, K Kt 5th, and Q B 7th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated April 2, 1879) with a codicil (dated April 8, 1880) of Mr. John Robert Thomson, late of No. 26, Sussex-square, Hyde Park, and of Blackstones, Redhill, who died on June 27 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by James Duncan Thomson and Charles William Thomson, the sons, the Rev. Richard Wood, Henry Cazenove, and Henry Moules, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £200,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Yda Margaretta Thomson £1000 and all his household furniture, plate, effects, horses and carriages, at his residence, Sussex-square; he also leaves her his said residence for life; to his three sons, James Duncan, John Robert, and Charles William, £10,000 each; upon trust for his six daughters, Mrs. Anna Maria Wood, Mrs. Letitia Georgiana Cazenove, Mrs. Barbara Constantia Cazenove, Mrs. Yda Margaretta Lobb, Mrs. Rosa Alexandrina Schrieber, and Mrs. Emily Caroline Perring, £10,000 each; upon trust for his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Frances Louisa Thomson (the widow of his late son, Harrison Prince Thomson), and at her death for her daughter, Rosa Margaretta, £5000; to his granddaughter, the said Rosa Margaretta Thomson, £5000; and legacies to his nieces, executors, and others. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be divided between his said sons, daughters, and daughter-in-law, their respective shares being held upon the same trusts as their original legacies.

The will (dated Aug. 23, 1879) with a codicil (dated May 25, 1880) of Mr. John Harborow, late of No. 15, Cockspur-street, Charing-cross, hosier and glover, and of Vine Cottage, Barnes-common, who died on May 27 last, has been proved by Mrs. Betsy Harborow, the widow, and Samuel John Southey, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator gives to his wife his furniture, horses, and carriages, and the sum of £20,000 is to be held upon trust for her for life; his house at Boston, Lincolnshire, he leaves to his brother Thomas for life, and then to his said brother's son John; upon trust for his cousin, Miss Jane Harborow for life, £3000; to Mrs. Sarah Paul Ortner, £1000; and some other legacies. As to the residue of his property, real and personal, he gives one seventh to his brother Thomas; one seventh to his sister, Mrs. Harriet Turtle; one seventh to his nephew John, the son of his brother William; and the remaining four sevenths between four of the children of his late brother George.

The will (dated Nov. 22, 1875) of Mrs. Anna Maria Dawson Jackson, late of No. 41, Belgrave-square, who died on Oct. 6 last, was proved on the 7th ult. by Washington Jackson, the son, and George Martin, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testatrix directs her furniture, jewellery, and personal effects to be divided between her children; and leaves all her real and personal estate, except her immovable property in the State of Louisiana, upon trust for all her children in equal shares.

The will (dated Sept. 25, 1878) with a codicil (dated May 11, 1880) of Mr. Henry Crawter, formerly of No. 5, Bedford-row, Holborn, land agent and auctioneer, but late of No. 11, Cunningham-place, St. John's-wood, who died on May 26 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by Thomas Crawter and John Crawter, the brothers, Henry Thomas Crawter, the nephew, and Uriah Collyer, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths £200 each to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, and the Institution of Surveyors, and £100 to the Auctioneers' Benevolent Fund. All his freehold and leasehold properties at or near Cobham or elsewhere in the county of Surrey he leaves to his said nephew Henry Thomas Crawter, charged with the payment of some annuities; and there are numerous annuities and legacies to his brothers, nephews, nieces, and others. The residue of his real and personal property is to be divided between Elizabeth Crawter and Mary Jane Marvin, the daughters of his brother Thomas, and all the children of his brother John.

The will (dated Feb. 2, 1867) with two codicils (dated June 10, 1873, and Feb. 15, 1875) of the Rev. William Gould, formerly of Hatch Beauchamp, Somersetshire, afterwards of Twyford, Berks, but late of Teddington, who died on May 30 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by Mrs. Elizabeth Gould, the widow, and Nathan Wetherell, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator gives to his daughter, Mrs. Fanny Jane Rabin, an annuity of £100 during the life of her mother; and the residue of his personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his said daughter.

The will (dated July 17, 1877) of Mr. James Robinson Planché, late of No. 10, St. Leonard's-terrace, Chelsea, and of H.M.S. College of Arms, Somerset Herald, who died on May 30 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by Stephen Tucker, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £1000. The testator, by the generous desire of his daughter Katharine Frances, devises and bequeaths all his property to his daughter Mrs. Mackarness.

A new life-boat, called the Oliver Goldsmith, was launched at Ballycotton on Thursday week. The boat was purchased by subscriptions collected by an English lady, Miss Ada Goldsmith Tullow, a collateral descendant of the poet whose name the boat bears. The cost has been about £800.

The twenty-ninth annual report on the district, criminal, and private lunatic asylums in Ireland has been issued. The inspectors of lunatic asylums report that there has been a registered increase of 234 inmates in the twelve months ending Dec. 31, 1879. The inspectors do not, however, think that lunacy is on the increase in Ireland; various causes tend to bring its existence into light, notably the establishment of well-organised receptacles for the treatment of mental affections. There are various appendices following the report, which give all the statistics of insanity in Ireland for the year.

A Seamen's Institute and Mission Church has recently been erected at Bristol, just opposite the entrance to the shipping-offices, where all seamen from the docks and harbours of that port must attend to receive their wages on paying-off, and to meet the captains of outward-bound vessels seeking crews. It has been built at a cost of £4500 by Mr. W. F. Lavington, a Bristol merchant. The mission church or chapel is above the hall of the Institute, which is capable of seating 300 men, and is cheerfully decorated and well supplied with pictures and literature. Here the seamen sit daily waiting for captains to hire them. Every morning at 10.30 the bell tolls for a few minutes, when the seamen in waiting go up stairs to the well-appointed and handsome little church forming the first floor. There are daily prayers, with a brief address by the Chaplain. Besides the clergyman, there are two scripture-readers attached to the church; whilst the Mission to Seamen has also a yacht with a scripture-reader at the entrance to the Avon to board the ships anchoring in King road or at Avonmouth, whether outward or inward bound from or to Bristol. The public-houses and sailors' boarding-houses are systematically visited, and, at last, some headway is being made against the system of crimping sailors, for which Bristol has long had a disgraceful notoriety.

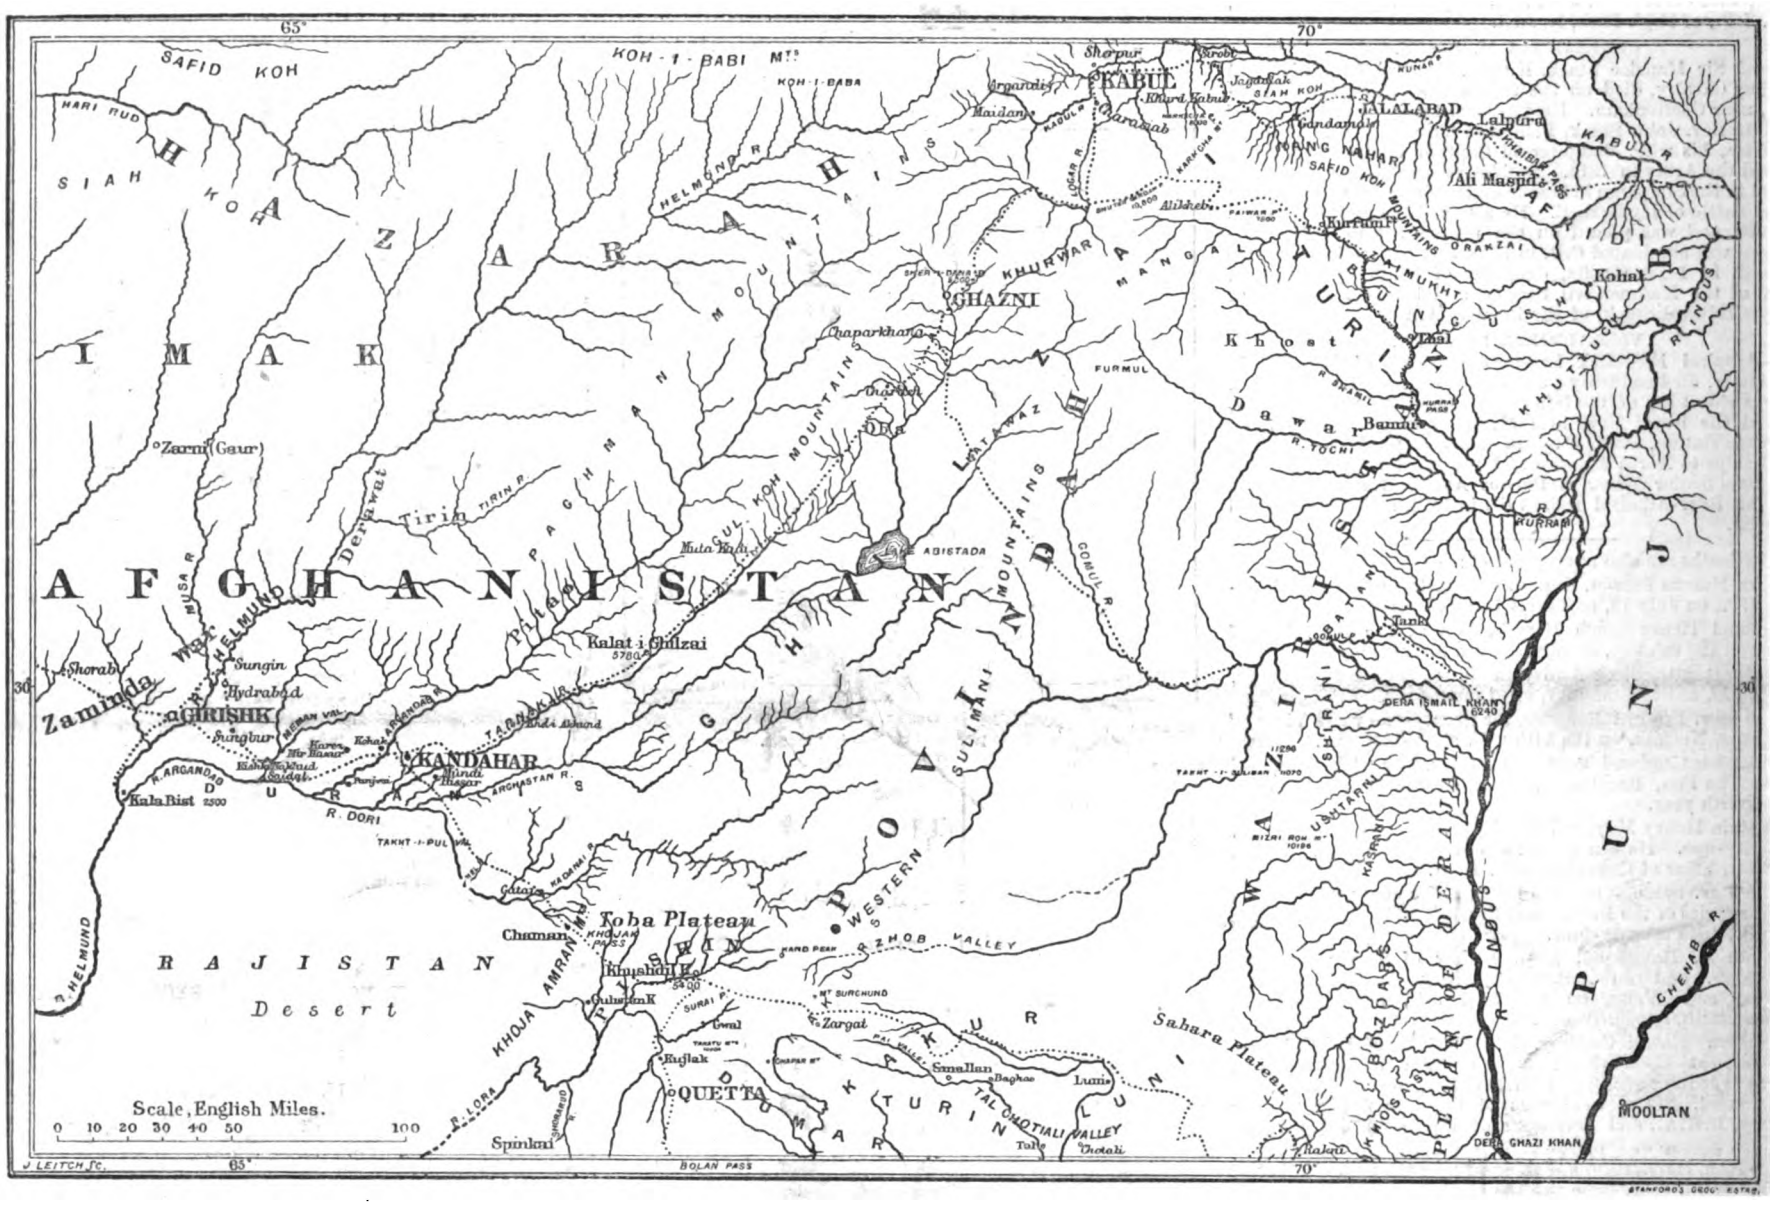
THE COUNTRY ROUND CANDAHAR.

The recent disastrous reverse to the progress of British arms in Afghanistan imparts a special interest to the topography of this region. In a paper read before the members of the Royal United Service Institution upon the 16th ult. Major-General Sir Michael A. Biddulph, K.C.B., gave an account of the march of an expeditionary force under his command from the Indus to the Helmund and back, furnishing many details as to character and strategical conditions of the territory between Candahar and Girishk, where General Burrows lately encountered the forces of Ayoub Khan from Herat. After describing the nature of the country between the plains of the Punjaub and Candahar, General Biddulph said of that important city:—

"Candahar stands on the western side of the plain which was originally a barren skirt of the mountain. Exactly opposite the city, and two miles to the westward, there is a wide break in the dividing range through which the road to Herat leads, and by which are conducted the many canals and watercourses taken from the Argandab to supply the town and fertilise its environs. Villages cluster around the city on three sides. Corn-fields, orchards, gardens, and vineyards are seen in luxurious succession, presenting a veritable oasis within the girdle of rugged hills and desert wastes all round.



"Candahar having to the south the boundary of an impassable desert, and on the north the terminal spurs of the offshoots of the great range, it follows that the main communications with the outside world lie along the strip of country between the desert and the mountains, westward with Herat, and to the south-eastward with India. A third road to the interior of the country leads up the Turnuk Valley to Ghazni. Beyond these three roads there are no others fit for the march of armies or for trade communications. The position of Candahar near to the slopes of the range to the westward of the city renders it impossible to construct works close at hand to cover the road from Herat. The high ridge and outlying hills dividing Candahar and its suburbs from the Argandab Valley completely command all the level ground between the city and the pass. Beyond the gap a group of detached mountains extends overlooking the approaches and follows the left bank of the Argandab, as far down as Panjwai, fifteen miles distant. Positions for defensive works must be sought, therefore, in front of that place, on the right bank of the river. To the north-east of Candahar the open plain affords situations for forts well removed from the hills at a short distance from the town, and at Akhund Ziarut, thirty miles on the road to Ghazni, there is a gorge which would, if held, add to the security on that quarter.

"The country between Candahar and the Helmund has the same general characteristics; there is a strip of plains and skirts of the mountains, bounded on the south by the desert, and on the north by successive spurs of the main range.

"At Sinjuri, about eleven miles west of Candahar on the right bank of the Argandab, there commences a system of mountain skirts, for the most part sterile, which extend in a great curve round the ends of the promontories of the hills to the left bank of the Helmund. This wide stretch of country is, for certain seasons, a grazing ground; but, except where fertilised with karezes in some good positions, it is unfit for cultivation. To the left of this sterile plain lies the fertile tract along the banks of the Argandab, presenting a strange and charming contrast to the waste around. The limb which forms the western limit of the Argandab Valley is here seen bounding the great plain on the right hand and forming an impassable barrier. From Sinjuri there are, however, paths leading into the next valley of Khakrez, passable for footmen and lightly-laden camels. This rugged barrier opposite Atta Karez approaches the desert to within about ten miles, so that the traversible open plain is reduced to that narrow limit. On the whole road from Herat to Candahar this is the narrowest gateway, and this remarkable feature and the concentration of roads here gives to Atta Karez a strategic importance unequalled by any other spot between India and Central Asia.

"The roads which meet at Atta Karez are as follow:—The great Herat highway passes through Kokeran and crosses the Argandab opposite Sinjuri, whence it lies along the open plain all the way to Atta Karez; second, the road which crosses the Argandab at Panjwai, and afterwards traverses the many watercourses on the left bank of the river; third, the road from Taktipul towards Herat, which follows the edge of the desert, and leaves Candahar to the north.

"The roads which strike off to the westward towards Herat are—the one along the skirt of the mountains through

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN: MAP OF THE COUNTRY ROUND CANDAHAR.

Kishk-i-Nakhud direct to Girishk, and a more circuitous one to Bala Khana. From Bala Khana a road branches off to Kala Bist by the Doab, and another strikes over the waste to Abbaza, a village opposite the ford and ferry, to Girishk. Kishk-i-Nakhud is situated at the foot of the range before mentioned. The abundance of water here supplied by karezes and watercourses creates an oasis in the sterile waste, and the cultivation follows the course of the water down a depression in the plain towards Kala Saidal, there being a line of villages in that direction. Kala Saidal is equidistant from the end of the hill with Atta Karez, and thus the three villages form a triangle and support one another. The importance which was formerly attached to these points is attested by the remains of forts, some of which are of extreme antiquity.

"At Sung Hissar there are the ruins of a very important work on an isolated hill. I have examined the ground in front of Atta Karez, and discovered a site for a work which would command the valley of the Argandab, and sweep the elevated open plain towards the west and north-west, and Sung Hissar might again be used as a fortified post of support. To the westward of this trilateral the open country expands in a triangular form, of which the north side is bounded by the line of hills, the south by the Argandab and the desert, and the base by the Helmund. In a direct line to Abbaza from Atta Karez the distance is about forty-six miles, and the open country along the left bank of the Helmund from the mountains down to the junction of this river with the Argandab is about seventy-five miles in extent. The whole of this tract of country is an undulating, and at the same time inclined, plain sloping from the hills. Opposite Girishk, the plateau is elevated 175 feet above the river, while, at the same time, it gradually slopes away towards Bost in gentle undulations. Throughout the whole distance, from some miles above Abbaza, down to the ancient city, the left bank maintains a decided command over the river and the alluvial tract on its right bank, and affords positions for defence and observation of its passages.

"To the westward beyond the Helmund a vast expanse of sterile and slightly undulating plain extends, bounded on the north by the hills, and without limits to the south and west. A road viâ Washir strikes off from Girishk partly through the hills towards Herat, which is said to be the best supplied with water and is cooler, and passes through a more cultivated country than the road to the south of it. This latter road, leading west by north, is directed on Farrah; it has less physical difficulties, but is not so well supplied with water, fodder, or cultivation. It is, however, quite passable with proper precautions and arrangements. To the north the roads lead to Zamindawar, and terminate in the mountains. In the great arc from west by north to the course of the Helmund no intermediate passable track exists. The road by Bost, Rudbar, and Lash, along the course of the river, passes through tracts more or less cultivated and productive of fodder and grazing. This road has been frequently used by armies in their march to and from Candahar.

"Besides the three roads above-mentioned, there are no others between the Helmund and Herat. The river Helmund being about four feet deep at the fords, and from 90 to 120 yards wide, and having several separate channels, presents a considerable obstacle to the passage of an army; the river is subject to floods, when it would be quite impassable without a bridge. It follows, therefore, that any army intending to pass the Helmund must be provided with bridge material. Although the fords in the dry season are numerous, the principal passage for the two northern roads is at Girishk. The castle of that name stands at a point where the road leaves the valley to gain the plain as stretching to the westward.

"The configuration of the country from the hills down the course of the Helmund is that of a seam of verdure and cultivation set within two boundaries of sterile plains. There are no mountains, as indicated in the maps, in the neighbourhood of Girishk. This alluvial tract is diversified with woods, grass lands, and cultivation. Villages are grouped in the wider positions of the valley, and there is an elaborate system of irrigation canals. In all Khorassan there is not a more productive country, and nowhere is there so much grass and wood to be found. In the great bend of the Helmund, where it coasts along the desert, the valley is equally productive. The cultivated lands lie alternately on either bank. Sterile wastes and sandy deserts bound the streak of verdure on both sides. The position of Bost, once a fortified city, is a most important one, as it commands the entrance from the Gurmsir and valley of the Helmund into the Doab on the road to Candahar. The junction of the two rivers takes place about three miles below the citadel, and we find on the desert cliff at that point the remains of a watch-tower. It is to be noted that at Kishki Nakhud, Kila Saidal, all along the course of the Helmund, and at Bost, remains of fortifications and buildings seem to attest the high estimation in which all these strategic points were held. Throughout all this part of Khorassan ruins mark every point of interest; whether this importance was due to the fertility of the neighbouring lands or to the spot being of military importance."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1880.

A settled policy, Foreign and Domestic, plainly stated and firmly adhered to, is of great advantage in conducting the public business of a nation. It is in itself a force which transcends many more obvious forces. It inspires those who believe in it with confidence and determination. It nips in the bud not a few projects of obstruction. It appeals to the common sense and right feeling of the people at large. Nothing is more potent than vacillation in palsying resolution at the moment when resolution is most needed. Nothing breeds more fanciful, or more multitudinous, objections. It is matter for congratulation that, since the last General Election, the chief aims of those who are intrusted with executive power are well known to the country, and that those aims are steadily pursued. Of course, the means employed must, sometimes in reason, sometimes in policy, be modified, and here and there disappointment will seize the minds, we will not say of narrow partisans, but of men who are apt to confine their views within a limited range of judgment. But no one can mistake, we think, the general drift of English policy under the existing Admistration. To some it may appear over-cautious; to others over-bold and hazardous. But, at any rate, it is intelligible; and, although change of methods may occasionally suggest hostile criticism, nothing has yet transpired indicating, even to suspicious minds, change of purpose.

Our Home Affairs, as managed in Parliament, are, perhaps, most subject to an appearance of shiftiness. We are not so certain of the course which will be taken with regard to them as we are in reference to the Foreign Policy of the Empire. This is natural enough. But, on the whole, there would seem to be impressed upon the steps taken with regard to them somewhat of that energy of will which is characteristic of Mr. Gladstone, and which tells even in his absence. His colleagues have caught his spirit. It will be well if they do not carry it to an imprudent excess. It is clear from Lord Hartington's statements, on Monday night, that they do not intend to let this Session (supplementary as it must be considered) turn out a wasted one. There is no precise day fixed for the prorogation of Parliament. In their view, it seems, "business is business, and must be attended to." Extraneous objects, desirable enough in themselves, are treated as extraneous. They mean to carry into their destined haven, not only the ship of which they have command, but as much as possible of the cargo it contains. They are disinclined to throw overboard any of the measures which they have announced, and if, in order to carry them—or at least such of them as they deem of urgent importance—they have to keep Parliament sitting until the end of the month, they have intimated their intention of doing so. Whether they will succeed in fully accomplishing the task which they have imposed upon themselves remains to be seen. But it is highly probable that when the force of their will has been unmistakably exemplified, artificial obstructions, and discussions which can serve no useful purpose, will be given up, and real business will proceed at a more rapid rate. Difficulties will vanish as they are approached, and what, at first sight, seemed impossible, will almost imperceptibly resolve itself into fact.

In Foreign Affairs there is beginning to be visible the same firmness of touch—firmness combined with delicacy. The Afghan trouble is a trouble still; the danger remains a danger. But the determination to withdraw from that country, so far as human foresight goes, is fixed, and not to be disturbed by the accidents of the day. General Roberts has set out from Cabul towards Candahar for the purpose of relieving General Primrose, if not previously reinforced by General Phayre. But the larger moiety of British troops stationed at Cabul is to be withdrawn to Gundamuk, and remain there as an army of observation until it is possible to vacate the entire territory, South as well as North. There is not much room for doubt that this object will be realised, and, it is to be hoped, without further serious bloodshed. We shall leave Candahar behind us. We have, as far as we could, transferred our responsibility for the government of that nation to the Afghans themselves. General Stewart, supreme in command, political as well as military, has telegraphed to the Viceroy of India to the effect that "all our objects have been attained, and nothing remains to be done but to hand over Cabul to the Ameer, who is naturally anxious to establish himself in his capital, and to bring his government into working order." Lord Ripon has assured the Secretary of State for India, "I believe the withdrawal to Gundamuk of the troops, and Roberts's march to Candahar, will be without any opposition whatever." So far, good. But we cannot expect, even if the present policy should be entirely successful, that the original aggression upon Afghanistan will not bear bitter fruit, both for India and for the United Kingdom. It is beyond the reach of human wisdom to undo what has been done, and the seeds of disturbance sown by wrong-doing will be sure to spring up, even after the wrong has been reversed.

There is even a hope—it would, perhaps, be premature to describe it as a clear prospect—that the Government of Turkey will eventually submit to the will of Europe in giving effect to the stipulations of the Berlin Treaty. "The concerted action of Europe," we are told by Lord Granville, "is directed to this end;" and hitherto "it has been thoroughly maintained." "We do not intend to act alone," says the noble Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, "as policemen in a European question which interests other European Powers equally with ourselves. But, on the other hand, we are prepared to take our full share of responsibility with others, in order to prevent a state of things which must end in a catastrophe most dangerous to the peace of Europe." Well, what is the result of this consistent and persistent diplomacy. We learn from Berlin that the chances of the Sultan coming to an agreement with the Powers increase day by day. He has already given orders to his Minister of War to leave for Dulcigno with 2000 Troops, and that Minister has promised to transfer the district to Montenegro within the time stipulated for its surrender, and the Town itself a few days later. The Turco-Greek question is under the consideration of the Cabinet at Constantinople, and an amicable solution of the frontier dispute is anticipated. Mr. Goschen gives hopes even of "an agreement being speedily arrived at by the Foreign Ambassadors as to the demands to be presented on the Armenian question, and Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice "reports on the cordial unanimity of the European Members of the International Commission, which has enabled them almost to complete the important work they have had in hand with regard to Administrative Reform in the European Provinces of Turkey." These authoritative announcements would be satisfactory in any other case; but even in regard to the Cabinet of the Sultan they show what can be done by a fixed policy and a settled resolution to translate it into action.

The Sandwich election inquiry has resulted in the unseating of Mr. Crompton Roberts, the Conservative member. Mr. Justice Lush said every provision of the Corrrupt Practices Prevention Act had been totally disregarded. Both sides had acted in the same illegal and corrupt manner, and each party must, therefore, pay his own costs. The Judges decided to report that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed.

Jean Luie, a Dane, who was convicted of perjury at the trial of the Tichborne Claimant and sentenced to penal servitude, was on Tuesday discharged from Portland Convict Prison, on the completion of his term of imprisonment. The evidence of this man was regarded as furnishing the missing link in the case, he having represented himself as one of the crew of the Osprey at the time when the defendent alleged that he had been picked up by that vessel after being wrecked in the Bella. He was put in the witness-box on the 115th day of the trial, was examined by Dr. Kenealy, the Claimant's counsel, and made a statement in which he averred that he was on board the ship that picked up Roger Tichborne on board the Bella, and took him to Melbourne. He entered into the most minute details of his personal appearance, and swore that the Claimant was the man. On the ground of this declaration he was prosecuted for perjury, and convicted, sufficient evidence having been forthcoming to prove his identity with a person convicted of fraud under the names of Sorensen and Lundgren, who was in prison at the date of the alleged rescue of the Claimant from the Bella.

The 73rd session of the New Church (Swedenborgian) was begun on Monday evening in the church in Bedford-street North, Liverpool. The signing of the roll by ministers and representatives was the main feature of the proceedings. On Tuesday morning the Conference continued to constitute itself, and on its completion it proceeded to appoint its officers. The Rev. John Presland, of Argyle-square, King's-cross, was appointed president; the Rev. Dr. Bayley, of Palace-gardens Church, Kensington, vice-president; and the Rev. Eli Whitehead, of Dalton, secretary. The minutes having been read, the Conference proceeded to appoint its ordinary committees on finance, on applications, statistics, and other departments, which sat during the afternoon. The president's, secretary's, and treasurer's reports were read and received. The president's report contained a review of the progress of the New Church in the colonies and foreign lands, and placed on record a number of events of interest to the denomination during the past year. In the evening the preacher appointed by the last Conference, the Rev. W. Westall, of Middleton, discoursed on "Why the Lord led the children of Israel by the longest way to the land of Canaan." The celebration of the Holy Supper followed, which was dispensed to a large number of communicants by the president, the Rev. J. Presland, and the evening preacher, the Rev. W. Westall. As usual, a collection was made on behalf of the pension fund.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

These many years past have I been a patient and persistent collector of Curiosities; and I have gotten together some oddities from most parts of the world. Possibly they will not fetch much at Christie's, after I am gone; but their contemplation is pleasant to those whom I love, and efforts to recall where and when and how I picked them up help to keep my memory green. I declare that in my whole store of "curios"—cracked china, worm-eaten books, Mexican wax dolls, Algerine coffee-pots, Moorish prayer-carpets, American oyster-shells, broken ginger-beer bottles, and uncut diamonds (I possess one: I had it from a glazier, relinquishing business)—I know of no richer and (I hope) rarer "curio" than the accompanying extract from Tuesday night's debate on the Hares and Rabbits Bill, which (the "curio," not the bill) I at once, with joy and pride, transcribed in my common-place book. The insertion of the following clause was moved by an honourable member:—

"It shall not be lawful for any one to sell eggs of game except the keeper of a registered mew or breeding-place.

The keeper of a mew or breeding-place intending to sell eggs shall register the premises with the clerk of the peace for the county or borough; he shall keep a register of the number of eggs laid each day—(Laughter)—and the name and address of every person to whom he or she shall sell eggs, and the number of eggs so sold in each case, with the date of sale; and he shall not buy or receive eggs of game from any other person.

Any person acting in contravention of this section shall incur a fine not exceeding £20 and costs for each offence.

It shall not be lawful to buy eggs of game except of the keeper of a registered mew or breeding-place, and any one acting in contravention of this section shall incur a fine not exceeding £20 and costs for the first offence, and not exceeding £50 and costs for the second offence.

In the name of the Prophet—Figs! No; not Figs. Eggs. Sir William Harcourt lost his temper (unwisely as I think) over this clause. The Right Honourable Home Secretary held that the proposal was an unwarrantable waste of the time of a great deliberative assembly. But I rather look upon it as a sweet boon to curiosity-hunters.

But I am in luck this week. Here is another curiosity, and one of the choicest. I cull it from the speech of Mr. Bright in this self-same Hares and Rabbits debate:—

What can more excite sympathy than the sufferings of the farming population during the last two years? The farmer rises early and toils during the day; he eats the bread of carefulness; and there is hardly anything certain in his condition except the rent day. He is subject to many trials and difficulties from which other trades to a large extent are exempt. The trader by his carelessness may make, by injudicious confidence, a bad bargain, and may diminish his substance. He is responsible for that. The farmer may do everything that man can do; everything that industry and intelligence can do he may do. He may plough, and sow, and clear the land. He may do everything it is possible for man to do, yet there may come a season which blights his crops and blights his hopes. If there be an important national industry which has a fair demand on this House for just and generous consideration, I say it is that of the tenant farmer.

I do not know whether that which I have quoted be quite an accurate report, and the most accurately reported speech must lose something by its transference to print; but I look upon the passage about the farmer as a curiosity, exceeding rare, inasmuch as it seems to me a racy example of simple, vigorous English. There are only thirty words of Latin or Franco-Latin derivation in the whole paragraph, which, from first to last, reminds one of William Cobbett.

It was a notable debate, that Hares and Rabbits one (including the eggs), throughout. Mr. Labouchere (although he was, as he calmly expected to be, badly beaten on a division) made a distinct mark—a most palpable hit—in the trenchant, sensible, and witty speech in which he proposed to include winged as well as ground game in this much-wrangled-over measure. What an excellent thing it would be if the senior member for Northampton would cease from fighting with wild beasts at Ephesus, and girding at all and sundry, and making his enemies' lives a torment to them, in print, and give himself up to that for which by education, experience, and natural gifts he is so eminently suited—the business of politics. Digging and delving as I do among files of long-forgotten newspapers, it is less pleasant than distressing to meet with the name of another Henry Labouchere who won well-deserved fame as an English statesman. And that such fame might be earned by the extant H. L. (if he only chose to earn it) I am satisfied. He is a scholar of extensive and well-digested reading, a travelled linguist, a diplomatist of nearly twenty years' training, a shrewd financier, a brilliant conversationalist, a ready, incisive public speaker, a man of wit, a man of sense, and a man of business; and I say that it is a shame that such endowments and such attainments should be wasted in miserable journalistic squabbles. And if anybody be offended by what I (a very old journalist, who has made blunders enough in his time to fill the crater of Mount Vesuvius, but who has tried never to do harm to Anybody) have said—well, tant pis pour eux, or for me.

Mem.: I hate soap, and butter, and flummery; but as one grows older, don't you think that the very best kitchen to be patronised is the cuisine à l'huile? And if you have a few flasks of right Florence oil left, don't you think that the best thing you can do with your oil is to try to pour it on troubled waters? Is life long enough for us to fight and scratch and hate one another? These are a few of the questions which I have been asking myself on the first day of the Long Vacation.

Talking of blunders, I made an almost inexcusable one last week in saying that the late Morgan John O'Connell was one of the sons of the illustrious Daniel O'Connell. Of course, Morgan John was his nephew. I qualify the slip of the pen as almost inexcusable, because it happens that I knew M. J. intimately. A keen remembrance of the deliciously unctuous brogue with which he used to recite Thackeray's "Battle of Limerick," popularly known as the "Shannon Shore," reminds me of a conversation in which I lately participated, in the course of which a very shrewd observer of humanity maintained that, with the exception of Mr. Dion Boucicault, he had never met with an Irishman who could imitate an Irishman in the way of acting or recitation. The best "stage" Irishmen, he asserted, were Americans. This may be, so far as the present epoch is concerned; but surely I can remember to have seen one Tyrone Power (Haymarket Theatre, A.D. 1840) in "The Irish Tutor." Was not Tyrone Power an Irishman? Quien sabe? We can never be certain about anything; and I hope that Dr. Charles Mackay will not challenge me to mortal combat with claymores, Lochabar axes, skene-dhus, cairngorms, doch-an-dorrocks, Mulls of Cantyre, and other lethal weapons, if I hint that I was told that the late Mr. McIan, the artist, to whom we owe a magnificently illustrated work on the Highland Clans, and who was so enthusiastic an ally that (they say) he used to paint in a kilt, was by birth a clannish Welshman.

"Atlas," you knew poor Morgan John as well as I did. Why, when giving another version of Wyndham Smith and the "Assassination" story (for which I refer my readers to the current number of the World), did you fail to reproach me for the commission of that blunder for which I have just apologised? Homer nods sometimes, my "Atlas." Have you been wandering with Mr. Joseph Hatton in the Valley of Poppies?

In the matter of the Monks of Medmenham. I mentioned nine members; and information respecting other friars of the Order of St. Francis has flowed in on me. One obliging correspondent, "Frank," reminds me that Mr. Walford, in his "Tales of our Great Families" (vol. ii. 191-2), suggests that the Earl of March, afterwards Duke of Queensberry (the "Old Q." who lived opposite the Piccadilly hackney-coach stand) and George Selwyn were Monks of Medmenham. Another correspondent says that the poet Lloyd was a member of the fraternity. "A. L. F." cites from a rare book of "Wilkestana" (that is not its real title, but it is too long for textual quotation) the name of Sir Thomas Stapleton. But that would bring the number up to thirteen; and it has been stated, over and over again, that there were only a dozen Monks of Medmenham.

A number of correspondents, including my very old and esteemed friend Mr. Edward Draper (who probably knows more about the social aspect of the Hogarth and Wilkes period than any living scholar), refer me to that queer little old work "Chrysal; or, The Adventures of a Guinea," for a more correct version than I was able to give of the story of the monkey coming down the chimney. I have not seen "Chrysal" for twenty years. I had it once, but (like Dogberry) I have had losses; and I am in the painful condition (I scarcely know one more painful) of the man who has once sold his library. You accumulate another one; you strive to replace all the books which you possessed in the bygone; but, alas! there are gaps which can never be refilled. Once upon a time I had the "Dictionnaire des Girouettes." I had the whole of Rétif de la Bretonne. I had Ruskin's "Modern Painters" and the "Stones of Venice"—the first, eheu! the first editions. I shall not have them any more.

Finally, Mr. Henry Graves is so kind as to write me from Pall Mall that among the pictures of the Dilettante Society or Club at Willis's Rooms is a portrait of Lord Le Despencer, painted by G. Knapton in 1742, and that the noble Lord is in the habit of a monk.

Do we really want another Omnibus Company in London? I have the prospectus of a new one before me, which proposes to supply the acknowledged public want of an improved class of vehicles, to provide for the ever increasing requirements of the immense passenger traffic, and to secure punctual and rapid service to and from the City and the great suburban extensions. But is not all this, and more, very efficiently done by the London General Omnibus Company? Less than a quarter of a century since the omnibus traffic of the metropolis was served by a wretched assemblage of boxes on wheels—"festive hearses" they used to be called—of the original and incomplete "Shillibeer" pattern, as a rule badly horsed and fiercely competing with each other. I remember, some twenty years ago, going to an exhibition of model omnibuses, for which the London General Omnibus Company, then a nascent enterprise, which had been promoted by a body of capitalists in Paris, had offered prizes. The vehicles which at present ply in our main thoroughfares seem to me twenty times handsomer, roomier, and better horsed than the omnibuses of the past; and the fares are, all things considered, wonderfully cheap.

Among the raisons d'être given for the formation of a new and necessarily antagonistic organisation is that the London General Omnibus Company pays regular dividends of twelve and a half per cent per annum, besides transferring many thousands annually to its reserve fund, and that it now carries more passengers and pays a much higher dividend than before the Metropolitan railways were constructed and the (to me detestable) Tramway system introduced. I am a poor hand at statistics; but when I read that the new Company propose to run "improved" omnibuses for two and three horses on a number of routes, among which is the normally overcrowded and frequently blocked line of thoroughfare between the Mansion House and Charing-cross, my heart sinks within me. And when I read yesterday that a delegation from the City Lands Committee had laid the first stone of a new stone structure, in the middle of the roadway between the New Law Courts and Messrs. Child's new banking-house, I simply shuddered. The structure is to mark the civic boundary, and to serve besides, I presume, as an elegiac memorial of Temple Bar. But the roadway is only thirty-seven feet wide at this point, and the elegiac memorial will diminish the available space by five feet.

We used to say in bygone days that, even without the obstructive nuisance of the Bar, a man delivering ginger-beer from a chaise-cart at the shell-fish shop, and an old lady in her brougham, and unable to find her cheque-book, outside Childs' Bank, were quite sufficient to block up Fleet-street during the best part of an afternoon. But how would it be when a further contingent of immense three-horse omnibuses come pounding along? An additional cause of obstruction in the Strand at eventide is the enormous increase within the last dozen years of popular theatres in or close to that thoroughfare. Where, formerly, there were only the Strand, the Lyceum, and the Adelphi, there are now the Opéra Comique, the Globe, the Gaiety, the Vaudeville, and the Folly. All these places of entertainments are largely patronised by "carriage people;" and the tohubohu late at night of broughams, cabs, and "the last omnibus" multiplied by many, is almost indescribably disorderly. The foot-pavement, moreover, is infested by hordes of touts rushing about to snap up cabs and extort coppers; and from these saturnalia the British pickpocket, you may be sure, is not absent. Really, it would be a good thing if an Act of Parliament were passed forbidding the building of any more new theatres, save on the Thames Embankment.

Mem.: Our cabs continue still unreformed. A week before I wandered to the States I was present at the "inaugural" banquet of a new (and, of course, "improved") Cab Company at the Alexandra Palace; and I remember a very excellent speech made on the occasion by the Chief Commissioner of Police, Sir Edmund Henderson, who, while admitting the necessity for the introduction of improved cabs, spoke up manfully for the old "growler" or four-wheeled cab—in its capacity, at least, for conveying a quartet of passengers and an indefinite quantity of luggage. When I returned I asked how the new (and "improved") Cab Company was progressing. Alas! it had been long since engulfed in the waters of "liquidation." I think that it was the ninth or tenth Cab Company that I had known. Surely we urgently need a really improved "growler," yet more improved Hansoms, and a hackney Victoria, or open cab, with a hood in case of a shower.

Punch comes along bravely under the new editorship of Mr. Frank Burnand (the best possibly fitted man for the post), and who is a great deal more than a mere joker of jokes, and has much more sound, solid scholarly stuff in him than many of the thousands who have been tickled by his "Happy Thoughts," who have shrieked over the sorrows of "Strapmore," have been moved by the vicissitudes of "Mokanna," and are laughing, now, over "The Beadle" may be apt to imagine. The instant number of Punch contains a short article which is not only waggish, but wise. It deals with and denounces that standing nuisance and scandal to metropolitan civilisation, Covent-garden Market. Ah! if Parliament would only re-enfranchise Gatton or Old Sarum, or Grampound or Sudbury, and the resuscitated "pot-walloppers" thereof would only send me to the Commons for a month or six weeks! How deeply would I bury the rhetorical knife in the reeking bosom of Covent-garden Market! Attack it with your pen, you may say. My dear Madam, I have been so attacking it these five-and-twenty years without avail; and if you deem that it does not deserve to be attacked, the next time you favour the market with your presence, when you have finished your shopping in the Central Avenue, instead of at once re-entering your brougham and driving home to South Kensington, just try to pick your way through the hillocks of putrescent vegetable matter which from morning until late in the afternoon litter the purlieus of the market and the immediately contiguous thoroughfares.

In the matter of Purcell's "Mad Tom," Mr. John Boosey politely forwards me the "Book of the Words" of the Nineteenth Ballad Concert given under his direction at St. James's Hall on Wednesday, April 2, 1879. On that occasion, Mr. Henry Cross sang "Mad Tom":—

Cold and comfortless I lie.
Help! Oh, help! or else I die!
Hark! I hear Apollo's team
The carman 'gins to whistle;
Chaste Diana bends her bow
And the boar begins to bristle.

But who wrote the words of "Mad Tom"? Tom D'Urfey? 'Tis the merest conjecture on my part.

His Worship the Mayor and the Aldermen, Town Councillors, and other members of the Corporation of Brighton must have had a "high old time" of it on Tuesday at the Alexandra Palace, whither they were conveyed in saloon-carriages per London, Brighton, and South Coast and South-Eastern Railways, to be sumptuously entertained by the energetic lessee of the palace, Mr. Willing. For the municipal visitors from Brighton, and for the general public "in their thousands"—and a great many thousands—a host of attractions were provided. There was the Rose Show and flower-market—a most delightful and, in England, an original spectacle, pleasantly reminding you of the marché aux fleurs under the lee of the Madeleine, in Paris. There was a Ballad Concert and the Grand Circus, Mdlle. Palladino and her fair compeers in their national dresses, the Hanlon Voltas, Miss Litton and her Old English Comedy Troupe (of whom a notice will be found in "another place") were a source of great delight; and the Grove and the two lakes were brilliantly illuminated at night. Then the Mayor and Corporation, laden with tributes of fruit and flowers—the gifts of Pomona, Flora, and Mr. Willing—went back to Brighton. "Wonderful thing, Sir, this Steam!—and only in its infancy." You may have heard that remark before; yet I found myself reiterating it last Saturday, when, having a few hours' "leisure," I ran down to Brighton by the Pullman 10 a.m. from Victoria, lunched at the Grand Hotel; drove by Stanmore Park and across the Downs to Lewes Races; lost my money in a sweepstake (I always lose my money; but 'twas only ten shillings that "broke" me); came back to Victoria by the 5.45 p.m. Pullman from Brighton, stopped at the Club to write letters, drove to Muswell-hill; saw two acts of "She Stoops to Conquer," a ballet, and a circus performance; dined at ten p.m., and was back at Lamb's Conduit (my workshop is directly over Lamb's Conduit) before midnight.

MR. F. C. BURNAND.

The blue ribbon of English comic literature, as we may esteem the Editorship of Punch, which has been held within the past twenty years by Mark Lemon, Shirley Brooks, and Tom Taylor, is now transferred to Mr. Burnand, long known as one of the liveliest contributors to that famous journal during the period just named, as well as a writer for the stage. Mr. Francis Cowley Burnand, who is about forty-three years of age, was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the University degree. He also won special distinction there, from and after the October term of 1854, till the Lent term of 1858, as founder and leading member of the University A.D.C., or Amateur Dramatic Club, which has continued to flourish. Its history, in the form of "Personal Reminiscences," has been pleasantly related by Mr. Burnand in a volume published last Christmas by Chapman and Hall, which has gone through two or three editions. We are informed that his first dramatic composition was of a little earlier date, being a farce written by him at Eton, probably in 1852, and performed by himself and other boys in the house of their tutor, the Rev. W. G. Cookesley. The great Dons of the University were not quite so facile and condescending; and there is much real humour in Mr. Burnand's report of his interview with the Vice-Chancellor of that time, when he asked permission to act a play. It needed all the tact of the youthful diplomatist, then an inexperienced undergraduate, to avoid shocking the Vice-Chancellor's primness by telling him what the proposed dramatic entertainment was. It was neither a play of Sophocles, or Euripides, or Aristophanes, nor one of Plautus or Terence, nor even one of Shakspeare's; the author was a Mr. Madison Morton, unhappily not a Fellow of Trinity, and its title was "Box and Cox!" The Vice-Chancellor had never heard of either, which may well have been the case; for we know that when Thackeray, about the same time, visited Cambridge to give his "Lectures on the English Humourists," there was an academical dignitary of the same rank who had never heard of the author of "Vanity Fair," whether it were Thackeray or Bunyan.

The Cambridge reminiscences of Mr. Burnand must not detain us; there is the volume for all readers who would like plenty of that sort. He came to London, and was called to the Bar in 1862, but we do not know that he ever wore a wig except in eating hall dinners at his Inn of Court. He soon began writing extravaganzas or burlesques, and domestic popular comedies, for several of our theatres. Among these were "Ixion," at the St. James's; "Black-eyed Susan," at the Soho; "The Turn of the Tide," "Family Ties," "The Club," "Diplomacy," "Robbing Roy," and "Betsy." He also converted "Box and Cox" into a farcical operetta, for which Mr. Arthur Sullivan provided the music.

It was in 1863 that Mr. Burnand was accepted by Mark Lemon, then editor of Punch, as a contributor to that Hebdomadal; which could not, of course, be named along with the august "Hebdomadal" at the other University, but which has far greater influence, pace the Vice-Chancellor, on the minds of ingenuous youth. It is remarkable, by-the-way, that Mark Lemon's pæne-proximate successor and Burnand's immediate predecessor, the late accomplished Tom Taylor, was a Fellow of Trinity; so that the Vice-Chancellor might have recognised him. In the meantime, the young literary aspirant from Cambridge began to make his mark with the broadest grotesque parodies of the sensational romances that appeared in some penny magazines for boys and girls of the less educated class. "Mokeanna!" was the first of these sham-dreadful stories, which, we suppose, had been provoked by a silly prose version of the hideous fantasy in "Lalla Rookh," but which must have had something to do with a "moke" or costermonger's donkey.

There were some imitations of fashionable novelists by Mr. Burnand, such as "Strapmore," which had a higher degree of finish, but Thackeray had done that sort of trick, with inimitable humour, many years before. We do not think, indeed, that Mr. Burnand is at his best in literary parodies; and some readers of Punch at this day will be relieved when they have seen the last of a current series of similar attempts on the works of Anthony Trollope. The most valuable of Mr. Burnand's writings, in our judgment, are those in the vein of autobiographic half-conscious self-exposure, as in "Happy Thoughts," expressing the sense of awkwardness that besets a man dropping into social or domestic relations for which he is not quite prepared. It is pure comedy, and of a refined sort, not unworthy of the authors of the Spectator and its school, or of Smollett or Goldsmith, that lends itself to subjects of this kind. Here lies the direction in which we should rather hope for the best fruits of Mr. Burnand's undeniable talent, if he can still find leisure for original authorship. Among the contributions from his pen not yet mentioned are "The New Sandford and Merton," capitally illustrated by Linley Sambourne; "How, When, and Where," a comic handbook of Continental travel, with Charles Keene's illustrations; and other diverting papers, which had the advantage of designs by Messrs. Du Maurier, Keene, Millais, "Phiz," and Sir John Gilbert to aid in their presentment, according to the Horatian maxim, "oculis subjecta fidelibus." Some of these writings of Mr. Burnand were promptly seized upon in America for reprinting and publishing, at least in thin paper covers, up and down the United States. Of his parodies and the like, we will not forget that with which he transfigured the African exploits of Mr. H. M. Stanley, under the title of "Across the Keep-it-Dark Continent." But we expect from Mr. Burnand a great many far better things.

THE CASTLE OF SULI, EPIRUS.

In a recent article describing the provinces of Epirus and Thessaly, which it is proposed that the Sultan of Turkey should cede to the Greek Kingdom, agreeably to the resolutions of the Berlin Conference, we mentioned the Suliotes, a warlike tribe or clan of Albanians professing adherence to the Greek Christian Church. It will be remembered that these Suliotes, who took part with the Greek insurrection against the Turkish Empire nearly sixty years ago, are spoken of by Lord Byron in "Childe Harold," as he saw them when he visited the camp and residence of their conqueror and subsequent commander, Ali Pasha, the great Albanian vassal who rebelled against the Sultan, not long afterwards, with results fatal to himself. The Suliote war-song, which they chanted in their wild dance, as the poet describes and reports it, is exceedingly characteristic of that fierce and restless people. We now present a view of the Castle of Suli, in Epirus, their principal stronghold, or the seat of their feudal chieftain. It is built in a romantic situation, on an insulated hill, near the ruined village of Kako-Suli, which stands 1200 feet above the River Acheron. The mountain on which the fortress of Suli has been erected is of a singular semi-lunar form, terminating in such a narrow ridge as barely to admit of a path from one detached fort to the other. The prodigies of valour displayed by the Suliotes in the defence of their liberty, the vigorous resistance they offered during ten years to the powerful Ali Pasha, and the important part they took in the Greek War created for some time a general feeling of interest in their race. They numbered at that time about 4000 warriors.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Aug. 10.

The official visit of the three Presidents to Cherbourg reminds one in its outer details of the old Imperial progresses. The very train in which MM. Grévy, Léon Say, and Gambetta were conveyed to Cherbourg is the same as that used by Napoleon III. The railway employés still call it "the Imperial train," and the engine-driver is the same to whose care the precious life of the Emperor was intrusted. At the various stopping places along the line the authorities presented addresses, and the rustic crowds cried "Vive la République!" and "Vive le Président!" instead of crying "Vive l'Empereur!" Originally the town of Cherbourg invited only M. Gambetta to be present at the launch of a second-class ironclad, the Magon. M. Gambetta accepted; but, as there is at present very much talk in the opposition Press, both Radical and reactionary, against the too great ascendency of M. Gambetta in political affairs, M. Grévy was advised to go. So the town of Cherbourg was invited to send an invitation to M. Grévy. Then M. Léon Say, as President of the Senate, said that he should feel hurt if the President of the Chamber went to Cherbourg, while he, M. Léon Say, was left to pine away at Paris. The good town of Cherbourg was invited once more to send an invitation to M. Léon Say. The invitation was sent, but meanwhile the maritime prefect and the municipal authorities came to loggerheads, and the quarrel was with difficulty adjourned until after the fêtes. However, on Sunday morning the three Presidents started. M. Gambetta was radiant, M. Grévy was serious, and M. Léon Say was indifferent. They arrived at Cherbourg in the afternoon, and were welcomed by the Mayor and other authorities. In the evening M. Grévy took a walk in the town on foot, and was very warmly received by the inhabitants. M. Gambetta also visited the town, but in a carriage. On the Place du Château the crowd surrounded the carriage and begged M. Gambetta to make a speech. M. Gambetta graciously complied, and rendered a tribute of respect to the upright and venerated citizen who was at the head of the Republic. This was M. Gambetta's second triumph in the course of the day. Already, on the way from the station to the Prefecture, he had received an ovation from the crowd, and the cries of "Vive Gambetta!" were louder and more numerous than the cries of "Vive le Président!" On Monday the Presidential party visited the breakwater, the arsenal, and the fleet, and in the evening M. Grévy entertained the different authorities at a grand banquet at the Townhall. To-day the festivities were continued by regattas, dinners, a sham fight in the roads, experiments with the torpedo-boats, fireworks, illuminations, distribution of decorations to officials, &c. The three Presidents will return to Paris to-morrow. As regards the mere festivities, they appear to have been a complete success, and there can be no doubt that the good people of Cherbourg enjoyed themselves immensely; and, after all, that is the principal object of a fête. But the real hero, after all, has been M. Gambetta.

"Political life, in a country deprived of Democratic institutions, takes refuge entirely in the Parliament and the press. But soon the Parliament, with its long legislative procedure, exhausts itself, and falls under the domination of a chief. The people, the veritable sovereign, is forgotten. The embryo of a Dictatorship forms in the Parliament, and soon there remains only a powerful individuality before the press. When this situation is prolonged the press becomes disciplined. The greater part fall within the circle of attraction of the rising star. The personal government becomes reconstituted piece by piece, and absorbs the Parliament, the Administration, and the majority of the newspapers, which have become accomplices and auxiliaries in this evolution. France is so accustomed to this spectacle that she resists little, even when she does not help the advancement of the Dictator." Such is the summary of the present political situation from the point of view of the moderate Radicals; and although perhaps somewhat too positive in statement, it does really conveniently sum up the state of affairs. The growth of the political press at the present moment is very noticeable. There are now in Paris alone more than fifty daily political newspapers, and hardly a week passes without that number being increased. As regards the formation of a Dictatorship, the official visit to Cherbourg has once more confirmed the singular authority which M. Gambetta's name has over the masses.

A new volume of the correspondence of Sainte-Beuve has just been published by Calmann Lévy. The new letters relate to all the epochs of Sainte-Beuve's life; but the most interesting are those which he wrote to his old schoolmate and constant friend the Abbé Barbe. Sainte-Beuve opens his heart without reserve to the good Abbé, and confides to him the constant perplexities about religious matters which occupied him until his death. At last he confesses to the Abbé that he had never been able to form for himself an abiding opinion on belief and religion. The great critic was, indeed, buried, by his express wish, without any religious ceremony. In none of Sainte-Beuve's letters which have yet been published do we see more clearly the man Sainte-Beuve than in these letters to the Abbé Barbe. At the end of the volume is a curious letter from Jérôme Bonaparte to Sainte-Beuve, in which the latter draws up a complete political programme. Here is Sainte-Beuve's opinion of Academies, which I humbly lay at the feet of Matthew Arnold. "Between ourselves," he writes to his friend the Abbé, "all these Academies are mere child's play—at least, the French Academy is. The least quarter of an hour of reverie or of serious talk, tête-à-tête, in our youth was better employed; but as we grow old we become again subject to these nothings—only it is well to know that they are nothings."

Apropos of the Academy, there was a grand fête last Thursday in the amphitheatre of the Institute of France. M. Victorien Sardou, the dramatist, was charged with drawing up the annual report on the prizes which the regretted economist and philanthropist Montyon instituted for the encouragement and reward of virtue. M. Sardou read his speech with great success; I should rather say he acted his speech, which resembled, by-the-way, very closely the tirade of a certain doctor in "Rabagas." M. Sardou touched upon the great question of responsibility in crime, which he solved en gamin de Paris. In short, M. Sardou was profoundly commonplace and brilliantly witty; more than any living Frenchman, perhaps, he is a master of that purely French accomplishment of settling a problem of philosophy by a pirouette. Voltaire, at the age of sixty-six, said, "I have not that stiffness of mind which generally characterises old men; I am flexible as an eel and lively as a lizard, and I work all the time like a squirrel. As soon as I am shown a silly thing, I quickly put another silly thing in its place." There are plenty of sons of Voltaire in France.

Claret-drinkers, beware! Not one third of the wine now drunk in Paris is pure grape wine. The wine crop of 1879 produced only twenty-five million hectolitres, while the annual consumption in France is forty to forty-five million hectolitres. The deficit has been made up by wine manufactured out of raisins, until the price of raisins has risen from 12f. to 75f. the 100 kilogrammes. Now raisins have been replaced by glucose, molasses refuse, rotten apples, old prunes, dates, figs, and other refuse fruits. These abominable liquids are coupés with Spanish wines and artificially coloured. Manufactories for making this wine have sprung up all over the country. Near Paris alone there are seven large steam-power wine manufactories. The gigantic fraud has at length attained such proportions that the remedy cannot be far off. The leading wine-dealers are about to take joint action to resist the fraud.

The Government, availing itself of the discretionary power as regards strangers, which is granted by a law of 1849, has thought proper to expel from French territory Mr. Harden-Hickey, the editor of a paltry Legitimist comic journal called Le Triboulet. This journal, which has now reached its ninety-second number, has been condemned by the Police Court no less than twenty-one times for having published caricatures and drawings which the censorship had refused to authorise. In this way the journal has paid 30,000f. in fines to the Treasury; its gérant lives in the prison of Sainte-Pélagie; and the journal has become famous in a way. Last week's number was seized on account of the publication of an unauthorised design, representing the three Presidents, dressed as sailors, going down to Cherbourg. Yesterday afternoon the editor, Mr. Harden-Hickey, was ordered by the police, in conformity with a decree of the Minister of the Interior, to quit the country within twenty-four hours. This violation of the liberty of the press is being ardently discussed here, and the general opinion on the question of principle is against the action taken by M. Constans. M. Harden-Hickey, who is, by-the-way, a Baron by creation of the Pope, is the son of an Irish emigrant, who made a fortune in the gold-fields of California. He was born in San Francisco, and was admitted by influence as an élève Etranger to the military school of St. Cyr. He married an Italian lady, Mdlle. de Sampierri, who traces her descent back to Saint Peter, and he gives himself out as an English nobleman of ancient descent. He lived in great style at Paris, and obtained some literary reputation under the pseudonym of Saint-Patrice. The Government will gain nothing by expelling the "Baron;" he can edit his journal just as well at Brussels as at Paris. What, then, was the good of expelling him?

Paris mondain is to be found this week at Deauville. The race week lasts from Aug. 8 to Aug. 15, and during that brief period this unlovely seaside resort awakens from its usual aristocratic dulness. Deauville has passed through three epochs: In the first half of the present century it was unknown; in 1860 it was a little fishing village, the inhabitants of which lived on shrimps; in 1864 the Duc de Morny discovered the place, and a racecourse was opened there on Aug. 14 of that year. M. de Morny's idea was to make Deauville a combination of Goodwood and Brighton. But nature and fashion fought against Deauville, and, except during the race-week, the coast villages of Brittany are invaded by visitors, while Deauville is only invaded by sand.

At last the Government has determined to put a stop to the plague of indecent journals that has been gradually invading the boulevards of Paris.

The tyranny of concierges or door-porters is a domestic inconvenience happily unknown in Great Britain. Last Saturday a curious case occurred. A lady living in the Rue des Martyrs conceived a desire to eat some fish for her breakfast, and she had made signs to an ambulant fishmonger to bring a sole up stairs to the second floor where she lived. The fishmonger started up stairs, when the concierge intervened. The difference was finally referred to the Commissioner of Police of the quarter, who naturally decided in favour of the ichthyophagic tenant.

Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt will go to Copenhagen on Saturday to give a series of performances there with Dieudonné, of the Vaudeville.

The Republican successes in the elections for the Conseils Généraux were still further increased by the ballotages which took place in 133 cantons last Sunday. The Republicans gained in 97 cantons and the Conservatives in 35. One seat is contested. Added to the results of Aug. 1, these results give a net gain of 298 seats to the Republicans, who have won the majority in thirteen new departments.

A despatch has been received announcing the safe arrival at Segou of Captain Gallieni's exploring party, of which I gave some details in my letter last week.

Henri Rochefort will begin a republication of his Lanternes that were written under the Empire on Sunday next, Aug. 15, which used to be the Napoleonic fête-day. He will call the collection Le Dernier Napoléon, and it will be illustrated by the celebrated Republican caricaturist André Gill. T. C.

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

Public attention is still fixed upon the military position of the British Indian forces in Afghanistan, since the alarming news of the defeat of General Burrows, on the 27th ult., with very severe loss, by the Herat Afghans under Ayoub Khan, at Khushk-i-Nakhud, half-way between Candahar and the Helmund river. The last Number of our Journal contained, with several views of Candahar and of the Helmund, and with other Illustrations of campaigning in that country, very long and full descriptions of these subjects. A narrative, borrowed from one of our daily contemporaries, of the events preceding the recent military disaster, was added to such particulars as were reported of the unfortunate action at Khushk-i-Nakhud, with an exact list of the troops that were engaged in it; and the scene of the battle was also described. We gave, besides, a map of the country around Candahar, and an account of this supplied by Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph's lecture at the United Service Institution. The approach to Candahar from Quetta, by way of the Khojak Pass and the fortified post of Chaman, as described by a correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, also the town of Candahar and its citadel, and that of Ghuzni, which is situated on the road from Cabul to the former place, were the subjects of articles taken from different sources. Memoirs of Ayoub Khan, the ruler of Herat, who has boldly renewed the war against British supremacy in Afghanistan, and of Abdurrahman, the new Ameer of Cabul, to whom its possession is now freely accorded by the withdrawal of our troops this week, together with a portrait of Abdurrahman, will be found in our last publication.

CANDAHAR: THE CITADEL.

Several more Illustrations, both of Candahar and of the valley of the Helmund, which is about eighty miles to the westward of Candahar, as shown in our Sketch Plan of that region, are engraved for this week's paper. One shows the interior of the citadel at Candahar, now garrisoned by a force of three thousand men, under General Primrose. It is a square of about seventy yards, and has a circular bastion at each corner, with a diameter of from 20 ft. to 50 ft. In the southern face there is a castellated brick réduit or keep. The northern front is 220 yards within the city wall, with which it is connected by the prolongations of the eastern and western faces. The inclosure thus formed would enable the garrison to communicate with the country without going through the town. The eastern face has in front the commissariat yards and a garden, but at 250 yards from the wall, which is strengthened by a ditch, are the houses of the town. In front of the western face are houses and courtyards. The southern face has in its front an open parade-ground about 400 yards wide, and commands the principal street leading through the city to the Shikarpore-gate. All round this parade-ground the houses come close up. There are five entrances to the citadel—viz., one in the east, two in the north, and two in the south. A great want of ramps and banquettes exists, and it would be extremely difficult to man the ramparts quickly in the event of an alarm. Some improvements have been carried out, the drainage having been improved, and some of the huts inside cleared away. Sir Donald Stewart, before he left for Cabul, also recommended that a clear space should be made all around, and the closing of unnecessary openings. Whether these improvements have been carried out or not we cannot say. The most important question is the water supply; and we are in possession of authentic information on this point. A hundred yards or so outside the northern wall of the town—which wall is connected, as we have said, with the citadel—runs a canal. Through this northern wall run from the canal into the citadel two water cuts. The source of supply could, however, be easily cut off by besiegers. It is, moreover, we have it on high authority, very impure and unhealthy. The garrison would, therefore, have to depend—first, on the water stored in the tanks; secondly, on the wells. Of these the best is one in the garden outside the east front, is 34 feet deep, and in March had two feet of water in it. A second well is in the parade-ground outside the south front, 25 feet deep, with 14 inches of water. In the Commissariat yard there is a third well 30 feet deep, but with only six inches of water in it. Inside the citadel itself there are two wells, but both of them are bad. Probably, however, fresh wells could be sunk with good effect. If these failed, it might be necessary to establish covered communication with some wells inside the town or water-course outside the walls.

CANDAHAR: THE CHAR-SU.

It was mentioned in a description of the city which appeared last week that "the four principal bazaars, or streets, lead from the gateways and meet nearly in the centre of the town in a large circular building, covered with a dome about 120 ft. in diameter, called the Char-su. This place is surrounded by shops, and it is regarded as a public market-place. The streets which converge in it divide the town into four nearly equal districts." The plan of Candahar, given in our last, showed the Char-su in the centre of the town, which is of not quite regular square form, having its sides of the length of nearly one mile, more or less, with a high wall on each side, and with four gates, north, south, east, and west. The west and east sides are longer than the north and south. We now present a view of the Char-su, which is almost the sole conspicuous architectural feature of the city, except the octagonal tomb of Ahmed Shah, with its cupola and minarets, raised on a stone platform. Both this View and those of the Citadel are from a series of photographs of Candahar, which are the joint production of Dr. Whylock and Major A. G. Owen, 19th Bengal Lancers (late Fane's Horse) and of the Staff Corps, lately serving with Sir Donald Stewart's column at Candahar.

THE VALLEY OF THE HELMUND.

The following is a description of the localities represented in two Sketches by Major-General Sir Michael A. Biddulph, which were presented in last week's Number of our Journal, and that of the view looking over Sungbur, towards Hyderabad and Sungin, which he has supplied to this week's publication.

The Helmund, rising in the Hindu Khoosh, in the neighbourhood of Bamian, flows between the limbs of the great range, in a south-west direction, and escapes from the hills at Gurmab, about forty miles above Girishk. The Castle of Girishk marks the point where the direct road to Herat from Candahar crosses the Helmund. It lies about two miles from the river, on the right or west side, at the edge of the cultivated alluvial valley, and on the brink of the sterile plateau which stretches, in a great arc, to the north, west, and south-west. The country on the eastern or Candahar side is a rolling sterile plateau, extending in an inclined plain from the mountains down to Kala Bost, twenty-eight miles, to the junction of the Argandab and the Helmund.

At the point where the road from Candahar, viâ Khushk-i-Nakhud, crosses the river, the sterile plateau rises to 175 ft. above the water's edge, commanding the ford and ferry of Abbaza. Here, in 1879, General Biddulph pitched his head-quarters camp, and the first of our views given last week represents the scene looking over the valley towards Girishk. From this point Abbaza and the ferry are seen; behind them the river and valley, and then the castle and the cavalry camp; and beyond, the barren plateau forms a straight horizon. The tops of the distant Siah Koh are seen like islets in the extreme distance. The hills on the right are somewhere about Gurmab.

The point where the Sirdar Ayoub Khan crossed the Helmund at Hyderabad is about twelve miles above Girishk, in the direction of the valley. The march of Ayoub Khan from Lar, which place lies beyond the horizon, right over the castle of Girishk, must have been along the plateau which is seen, in last week's Illustration, stretching to the north. Beyond lies the country of Zamindawar, the home of the Alizais.

The recent events of the occupation of Girishk by the Wali of Candahar, the revolt of the Candahar infantry, who made off up the left bank from Abbaza, and their chastisement by General Burrows, besides the earlier incidents of the occupation of this place by Colonel Rawlinson, give particular interest to these Views. Ayoub was heard of at Washir, then at Lar, and it was afterwards reported that he had crossed the Helmund at Hyderabad. We then heard of him at Sungbur, and skirmishing took place between General Burrows's cavalry and detached bodies of Ayoub's horsemen, Burrows having taken up a position at Khushk-i-Nakhud. If one turns about on the edge of the plateau to look eastward one sees the rolling plain, bounded on the north by the spurs of the hills and on the south by the desert. Opposite the nearest spur lies Sungbur, which is a small hamlet where Ayoub halted previous to his movement on the 27th to attack Burrows at Khushk-i-Nakhud.

General Sir M. Biddulph, in his lecture, remarks upon this subject that "in the Argandab and Helmund Doab a considerable amount of cultivation exists on the right bank and in the angle above the junction of the rivers. The waters of both are led, for the irrigation of the low-lying sands, through extensive channels." The following is Sir M. Biddulph's account of some of the ruins extant in this locality:—"At the extremity of the angular plateau, on the right of the Doab and on the left bank of the Helmund, stands the remains of the ancient city of Bost. At the very south extremity of the high bank the citadel commands the ford over the Helmund. The ruins of the city are in a wonderful state of preservation. Palaces with extensive courtyards are found along the margin of the river, to which stairs descended from the several residences. The citadel itself seems to have been built on the débris of very ancient fortifications and buildings, and rises to a height of some 150 ft. above the bed of the river. The base of the fortifications is washed by a channel only; the main body of the river flows some little distance off. The outer fortifications consist of a rampart and ditch traced in the form of a rectangle, the citadel being placed at the south end, and cut off by an internal ditch and rampart. The position of Bost is a most important one, as it commands the entrance from the Gurmsir and valley of the Helmund into the Doab on the road to Candahar.

"The junction of the two rivers takes place about three miles below the citadel, and we find on the desert cliff at that point the remains of a watch-tower."

The view looking from over Sungbur towards Hyderabad and Sungin, and northward up the Helmund, shows the character of the country. Here Ayoub Khan halted while concentration was being made at Khak-i-Chopan to the south and at Mainwaud to the north. The country is dry and sterile, with no cultivation, but here and there, where water is nursed, and distributed to the suitable plots of land. We refer to our Sketch Plan of the entire region between the Helmund and Candahar, which is marked with lines showing the advance of Ayoub Khan and the retreat of General Burrows. This plan has been prepared for the Journal of the United Service Institution, to which we are indebted for permission to make use of it. Major-General Sir M. Biddulph's original Sketches, with which he has kindly favoured us, furnished our Views of the Helmund, the ford and ferry at Abbaza, the Castle of Girishk, the British position in that neighbourhood, and that of the country looking northward from Sungbur.

SCENE OF THE BATTLE AT KHUSHK-I-NAKHUD.

We are now further indebted to Major-General Sir M. Biddulph for a sketch of the place where the brigade of troops commanded by General Burrows was defeated with great loss by Ayoub Khan, on Tuesday, the 27th ult. The following descriptive notes accompany this sketch of Khushk-i-Nakhud:—"The plain consists partly of old cultivated land, and partly of waste land without grass. The view is taken looking due east, towards the Argandab at Atta Kurez. In mid distance is the Ziaret, or Mohammedan shrine, with three cypress-trees about it; there were seven in Ferrier's time; the others are fruit-trees. On the bank to the left is a walled garden, with round towers. The ziaret always gave shelter to fanatics and evil-disposed people. The ground rises to a plateau above, with a step-like formation, and some little way above, though unseen in this view, are two or three villages, the people of which were more friendly to us. Here is the opening to the Kakree valley. On the rising ground are seen, like specks, the vedettes who watch over the camp. This higher ground is continued towards the limb of the mountain commanding the low ground to the south. Beyond the garden to the left and beyond the vedettes rises the terminal spur which bounds Khushk-i-Nakhud on the north, and gives this position its importance by reducing the plain to a width of eight miles only, from the mountain to the desert. To the right of the ziaret is seen the ruined fort, which in old time commanded this position. Beyond the fort was the camp of General Sir Michael Biddulph, which is shown in the sketch; behind the site of that camp, and to the south of it, is the inclosure made use of by General Burrows, as it had been made use of by Malcolmson, putting his baggage and tents there for the night, after the attack which he repulsed. It is to be feared that this inclosure rather tied General Burrows to the place. Other villages are situated to the right hand of the view—that is, to the south, which must have favoured an attack on General Burrows' left. These villages, indeed, are not shown in the sketch, as they are hidden by the undulating ground. It is a mile or so from the spot at which the sketch was taken to the old fort, and another mile from the old fort to the line of the farthest tent, and to the walled inclosure. The fight between Ayoub Khan and General Burrows took place principally within these spaces of two miles. The retreat of General Burrows was over the steppe or glacis seen faintly in the horizon. On this tract of country, and the ten miles to the Argandab, now lie most of the poor fellows who died on the 27th. Let us hope that ere long their mortal remains will be collected for burial by kindly hands, when the enemy shall have been chastised and driven off. Those cypresses, however, in time past have often looked down on scenes of fierce conflict, and many a brave soldier has found his last resting-place on this plain of Khushk-i-Nakhud."

The name of this place means "Diamond of the Desert," and it is thus described by the late General Augustus Abbott, who commanded the Artillery of General Sale's column in May, 1839, when that officer, during the first Afghan War, advanced from Candahar to Girishk:—

"Our last two marches have brought us into Khushk-i-Nakhud, along an excellent road for twelve miles, when it quite cleared the valley of the Argandab, and enters upon rough ground and deep sandhills. We found the distance to be sixteen miles. Coming here, we encamped near an ancient city, built, according to the native account, by the Infidels, long before the Mohammedans had power in the land. The fortifications and houses are still standing, the dry climate having preserved them in a remarkable manner. The waters of a small river, which used to run past this town, have been diverted from their natural channel, and now run through six or seven canals, which considerably impeded the troops in marching. We soon, however, got upon dry, stony soil, and at the end of nine miles came amongst sandhills, which we threaded for another mile to camp. The little grove and its streams at which we are encamped are quite worthy to confer upon the spot the title of the Diamond of the Desert. This is the first water the traveller from Girishk sees after crossing the Helmund, when twenty-four miles of arid sand intervene."

THE KHOJAK PASS.

The route from Quetta northward to Candahar, a distance of 142 miles, by which reinforcements and relief must be sent to General Primrose, passes over the summit of a mountain range, 7380 ft. high, called the Khojak Khotul; this word Khotul means the highest part of a lofty pass. It is described by Major Le Mesurier, R.E., in his book entitled "Kandahar in 1879," just published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. A valley destitute of water leads by a slight descent from Quetta to Kila Abdulla, at the foot of the Khojak Pass. The descent from the level of Quetta to Hykalzai, the lowest station on the southern side of the Pass, is 647 feet in 33¼ miles. From this point the road rises again very slightly to Arambi and Kila Abdulla, distant from Quetta fifty-three miles and a quarter and 5138 feet above the sea-level. The next ten miles form the severest part of the march. From Kila Abdulla there is an ascent to the Khotul of 2242 feet, distributed over ten miles of roadway at varying gradients. For the first nine miles from Kila Abdulla to the Khojak Post the rate is 1 in 26, but between the Post and the Khotal, one mile only, the rate is 1 in 11. This is the Khojak ridge which caused such terrible confusion in the first Afghan expedition in April, 1839. We are told how the troops, camels, guns, and baggage became literally jammed together, and each gun, tumbril, and waggon had to be separately handed down by manual labour. It is said that forty Europeans could scarcely keep a nine-pounder with wheels locked from running wildly down the hill. Many thousand rounds of ammunition and an immense quantity of baggage were lost. Here, again, in November, 1839, Nott crossed with but a nominal loss, and in May, 1842, General England crossed on his second advance from Quetta. This awkward pass is now traversed by the road made by Ghilzai labour, under Wells, and called the "Wells Road." It turns and winds and zigzags round about the hill till it reaches the Khotul, now the most practicable route over the range of hills shown in the maps as the Khwajah Amram. This is apparently divided into three districts—Spintaza to the south; Khwajah Amram, in which is the Roghani and the Khojak; and Tobah, which includes the table-lands on the north. This climb once compassed, there is a sharp descent of four miles to Chaman, at the rate of 1 in 12. Beyond Chaman the descent towards Candahar is far more gradual, and such devices as gun-slides are no longer necessary. For the first ten miles the rate is 1 in 46, and a gradual slope of seven miles more will bring General Phayre to Gatai, 4050 feet above the sea, and fifty-eight miles from Candahar.

THE LATER NEWS.

Our intelligence from India, received up to Wednesday evening last, is to the effect that Ayoub Khan's army, now increased to 20,000, has advanced to within five or six miles of Candahar, and is encamped at a place called Kokaran; but it appears quite unlikely that this Afghan force should be able to capture the citadel, where the preparations for defence are now complete, with provisions, except forage, to last thirty-five days. The Wali Shere Ali, of Candahar, with his family, remains in that city, and co-operates with the British Commander; but all the Afghan population has been expelled from the town, which is surrounded by large numbers of hostile tribesmen, and is, in short, closely beleaguered. The latest positive news of the safety of Candahar referred to the end of last week. Its communications with Khelat-i-Ghilzai, on the one hand, and with Chaman and Quetta on the other, now seem to be quite cut off.

The loss of General Burrows' brigade, in its defeat on the 27th ult., at Khushk-i-Nakhud, is now stated at not more than 1000 men, "killed and missing," of whom 400 are Europeans, and twenty-one officers.

Rumours are brought to the British authorities that there is great dissension in Ayoub Khan's camp between the Herat and the Cabul Afghan soldiery, and that Ayoub had to interfere to prevent their fighting with each other, and was himself accidentally wounded.

The forces which are to relieve the British garrison of Candahar, and to repulse Ayoub Khan, are those of General Sir Frederick Roberts, from Cabul, and of General Phayre, from Quetta; the former marching southward, a distance of 385 miles, by Ghuzni and Khelat-i-Ghilzai; the latter marching 142 miles northward, through the Pishin valley and over the Khojak Pass, at the foot of which is the fort of Chaman.

It seems the intention of the tribes between Chaman and Candahar to rise and contest General Phayre's advance. But as his force will consist of four cavalry and eight infantry regiments, with three batteries of artillery, their opposition will be easily put aside, unless Ayoub places his whole army on the line of advance, in which case a hard fight may be looked for. The force is considered ample for the purpose, but plenty of work is cut out for it.

Sir Frederick Roberts, on Monday last, set forth with a force of ten thousand fighting men from Cabul to relieve Candahar. His force consists of two thousand eight hundred and thirty-six Europeans, and seven thousand one hundred and fifty-one Native troops, eight thousand followers, two thousand horses, seven hundred and fifty Artillery mules, and one thousand two hundred and twenty-five transport animals. The force has with it food for five days only. This is to be used only on an emergency, to eke out the supplies obtainable in the country. There will be no communication with this force during some days. The following troops compose Roberts's column:—

The First Brigade: The 92nd Highlanders, 2nd Goorkhas, 23rd Pioneers, and 24th N.I.

The Second Brigade: The 72nd Highlanders, 5th Goorkhas, 2nd Sikhs, and 3rd Sikhs.

The Third Brigade: The 60th Rifles, 15th Sikhs, 4th Goorkhas, 25th N.I.

The Cavalry Brigade: The 9th Lancers, 3rd Punjaub Cavalry, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, the Central India Horse, fifty Volunteers of the 1st and 2nd Punjaub Cavalry.

Artillery: The 6-8 R.A., 11-9 R.A., and No. 2 Mountain Battery.

General Ross commands the Infantry, General Hugh Gough the Cavalry, and Colonel C. A. Johnson the Artillery.

Staff: Lieutenant-Colonel Chapman accompanies the force as Deputy Quartermaster-General, Major G. Del Morton as Assistant Adjutant-General, Major R. Kennedy as Assistant Quartermaster-General, Major B. Combe as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General.

We learn that the hill tribes on the frontier near Sibi, where the newly-constructed railway from the Punjaub in the direction of Quetta and Candahar at present stops, have assumed the offensive. The last convoy for Sibi, consisting of a large number of carts and some treasure, with a small escort of Sepoys, chiefly sick, was attacked by Pathan and Murri robbers. The treasure was plundered and most of the escort killed.

It is announced that the 77th Regiment, for Afghanistan, will embark at Portsmouth, in the Himalaya, on Saturday next; the 23rd Regiment, in the Malabar, on Monday (the 16th); and the first battalion Rifle Brigade, in the Jumna, on the 21st. The Prince of Wales will present new colours to the 23rd before their departure.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

A meeting of this institution was held at its house, John-street, Adelphi, on Thursday week. Rewards were granted to the crews of different life-boats for recent services. The Walmer life-boat went to the assistance of the ship Colombo, of Greenock, 1199 tons, bound from Bassein to Bremen, with a cargo of rice, which had gone on the Goodwin Sands. With the help of the life-boat and other boats, the vessel, after she had been lightened of part of her cargo, was extricated from her perilous position and safely moored in the Downs. The Palling, Winterton, and Sutton life-boats have respectively been the means of assisting the distressed steamer Red Rose, of Cardiff, and yawl Wave of Goole, both which vessels, with their crews, were saved from positions of much danger. Rewards were granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coast; and payments amounting to £3600 were made on life-boat establishments.

Amongst the contributions recently received were £1000 from Mr. Townend, through the Manchester branch of the institution, to defray the cost of the Charles and Ann new life-boat for Saltburn; and £100 from the Ancient Order of Foresters, being their annual subscription in aid of the support of their two life-boats—the Forester, at Tynemouth, and the Foresters' Pride, at West Hartlepool. The late W. Forbes, Esq., of Glasgow, had left the institution a legacy of £20; and the late John Tomlinson, Esq., of Lincoln, £15.

Edward Birkbeck, M.P., V.P., was elected a trustee of the institution, in succession to the late Sir Stephen Cave, G.C.B.

During the heavy gale which sprang up last Saturday evening on the west coast, the life-boats of this institution rendered good service. The Burnham life-boat saved the crew of seven men from the rigging of the schooner Brune, of Bridgewater, which was wrecked near Highbridge. The Porthdinllaen life-boat was launched to the aid of four distressed vessels. One of them, the schooner Thetis, of Pwllheli, bound from Poole to Glasgow, had struck the ground and was in a leaky state, there being four feet of water in her hold. Two of the life-boat's crew went on board to assist in keeping her afloat. She then proceeded to the flat James, of Nefyn, which required assistance to enable her to come to the quay; then to the Jane Eliza, also belonging to Nefyn, which did not then require any help; and, finally, to the schooner Sarah Jane, of Chester, from which last-named vessel the master's wife was taken and brought safely ashore. The Padstow life-boat proceeded to the wreck of the schooner Marie, of Bordeaux, but the crew were saved by the rocket apparatus before her arrival. The Newquay life-boat saved the crew of two men belonging to the smack Harriette, of Barnstaple, which was wrecked at East Pentire Point.

REWARDS FOR SAVING LIFE FROM FIRE.

The annual general meeting of the subscribers to the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire was recently held at the offices, 66, Ludgate-hill, when the following rewards were presented for services in saving life:—

A testimonial to Jane Shaw, of King-street, Lambeth-walk, with two guineas, for praiseworthy services rendered by her in the preservation of life at a fire at 10, East-street, Lambeth, on May 22, 1879. The fire was discovered by the girl, who had been left in charge of three children. Taking them in her arms, she carried them to the landing, but on descending the staircase the dense smoke almost overpowered her. With the assistance of a constable, she and her three little charges escaped.

A testimonial and £5 to Daniel Dinan, who, on hearing of a fire at 52, Bermondsey New-road, at 11.30 p.m., on July 9, 1879, climbed to the top of the shop-front and found Mrs. Leech and her sister quite helpless. After considerable exertions he succeeded in rescuing both.

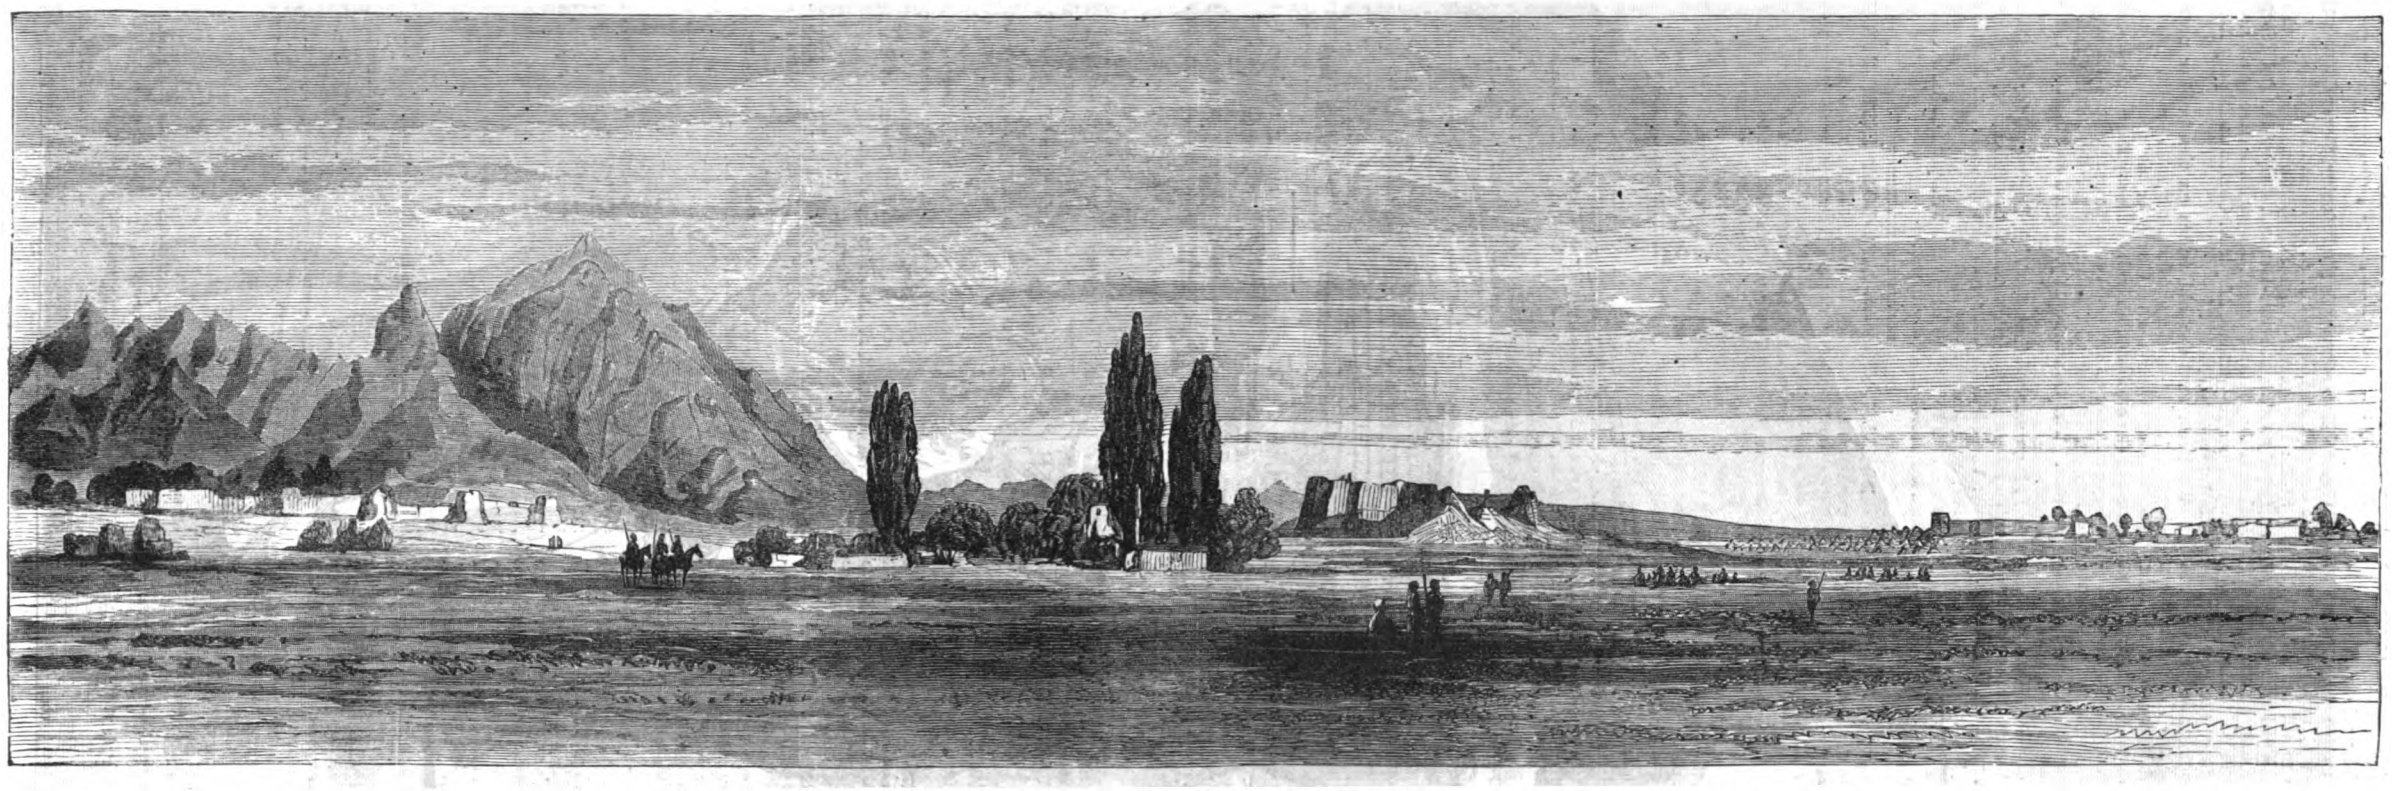
A testimonial and £3 to James Collinette, 460 X, for praiseworthy exertions displayed by him in saving the life of Miss Curtice, at 28, Lauzlewood-crescent, Kensal New Town, on Aug. 18, 1879. He discovered Miss Curtice in an unconscious state, and saved her with great difficulty.

A testimonial, with £2, to Mr. Thomas Wilcox, of 38, Upper-marsh, Lambeth, for saving the lives of three inmates of the house 41, Upper-marsh, on the morning of Nov. 7, 1879. Mr. Wilcox endeavoured, without success, likewise to save an aged woman, who died from suffocation.

A testimonial and two guineas to Mr. Geo. Fresh, head gardener in the service of Sir Hugh Hume Campbell, Bart., for services rendered by him in the preservation of the lives of two servants at a fire which broke out on Nov. 16, 1879, at the High Grove House, Ruislip.

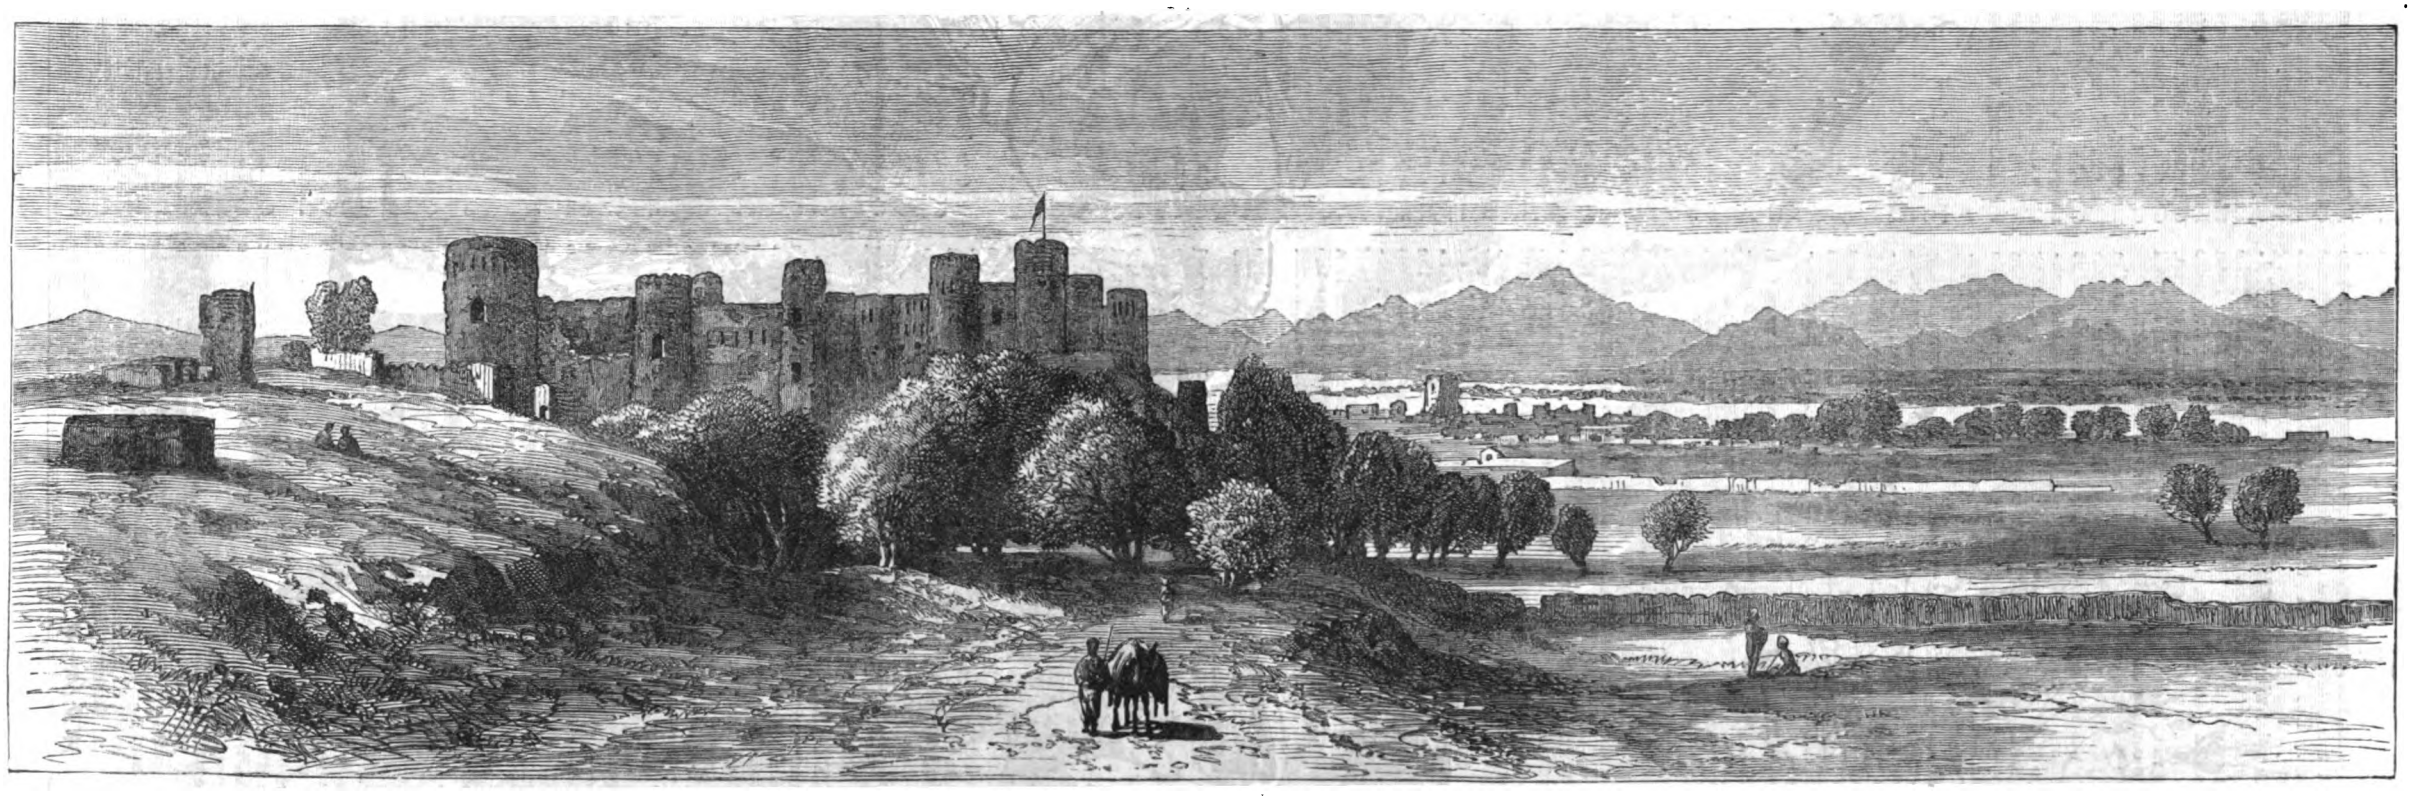
The Society's silver medal was awarded to Mr. Geo. Chas. Toghill, of the Blandford Arms, Dorset-place, for rescuing at much risk Mary Hamilton, aged fifty-four, from a fire which broke out at 82, Boston-place, Marylebone, on Dec. 24 last.

Mr. Alfred Waller, of 10, Annette-road, Holloway, was awarded, in addition to a previous reward given him by the Society, the Society's medal for intrepid conduct at a fire at 83, Jackson's-road, Holloway, last February. Waller sustained personal injuries by catching three females after they had jumped from the second-floor window.



Mr. Joseph Clark received a testimonial, with £5, for the prompt and efficient services rendered by him in the preservation of life at a fire which occurred shortly before 9 p.m. on Feb. 22, 1880, on the Old Green, Newport, Monmouthshire.

Bryan Leavy and Thomas Dickson, of the Royal Irish Constabulary, were presented with testimonials and three guineas each for the prompt and efficient services rendered by them in the preservation of life on the occasion of a fire on the Ship Quay, Londonderry, at 3.30 a.m. on Feb. 1, 1880.



The contractors for the new Kensington Townhall were Messrs. Braid and Co. A bust of Major-General Boileau, the sculptor of which is Mr. Brock, will be placed in the Council Chamber.

Mr. Francis George Heath's illustrated edition of Gilpin's "Forest Scenery" is about to be republished by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Co., in a series of two-shilling monthly parts, the first of which will be issued immediately.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

I started a weekly periodical some years ago, called "London," which in a brief space of time came to grief. I was a little in advance of the age, else my weekly venture might have become a "property," yielding an annual income of from five to ten thousand pounds. For mine, albeit there was no scandal in it, was a "Society" journal. Well, I engaged a dramatic critic who was to know everything about what was going on before and behind the Curtain, and was to be bland, passionate, pathetic, humorous, a little cynical, but unfailingly "spicy," for a salary of two pounds a week. Poor Gentleman! It was on the eve of Christmas that my first number was to see the light, and I was especially anxious to have an exhaustive résumé in advance of the plots and characters of all the pantomimes and spectacles which were to be produced on Boxing Night.

My critic's "copy" arrived very late; and, if I remember aright, it ran somewhat in this fashion:—Theatre Royal Drury-Lane. Of the Christmas entertainments provided at "Old Drury" we have been unable to obtain any definite information, but we believe that we are right in stating that the pantomime will be preceded by Lillo's tragedy of "George Barnwell," and that in the course of the evening Mr. Tom Matthews will sing either "Tippitywitchet" or "Hot Codlings." Theatre Royal Covent-Garden. Owing to the singular discourtesy shown by the management of this house, we are precluded from giving any details as to the Boxing Night bill-of-fare. Theatre Royal Olympic. This house is closed. It was formerly under the management of the famous Robert Elliston (here followed about half a column of "Ellistoniana," mainly quoted—without inverted commas—from Charles Lamb. "Theatre Royal Lyceum. No report. Royal Surrey Theatre. No report. Royal Princess's Theatre. Want of space prevents us from noticing the programme—one of singular novelty and variety—promised at this justly favourite establishment." There was not any more. I think, even, that my critic ended abruptly with "favourite," and that I had to surmise the word "establishment." He did not write any more dramatic criticisms for me. I think that he went to the Cape and was eaten by an ostrich, or died from eating ostrich, or in some manner collapsed in connection with that extensive bird. Poor gentleman!

I need a little commiseration myself this week; for there is little or nothing to be said concerning the Play Houses. "The spider has woven his web in the Imperial palace; and the owl hath sung her watch-song on the towers of Afrasiab;"—that is to say, the Lyceum is closed; Miss Ellen Terry, Q.C., is enjoying the Long Vacation, and Mr. Henry Irving is as "content" in a temporary villeggiatura as his own Shylock was. I have always thought that the inner geist and significance of that exclamation, "I am content," has not yet been fully mastered by the critics. May it not have meant, "I am content to become a Christian, and to surrender my hardly-earned ducats. But I see my way before me very clearly. It is my intent to repair to the thriving city of Genoa, and there to insert in the Gazzetta Genovese advertisements offering immediate monetary accommodation on easy terms to the nobility and gentry and members of the Two Services. As a Jew, I was content to charge sixty per cent interest for such accommodation. As a Christian, I shall charge one hundred and twenty. Yes; I am content:—very content indeed."

Also has the spider woven his web, and the owl sung in the Imperial Theatre, which is to be merged, I hear, into the Royal Aquarium; at least both Aquarium and Theatre will be "run" by the same management; separate charges of admission to the two entertainments being made. I went to the Royal Aquarium a few nights ago with a powerful magnifying glass to look at some of the etchings of George Cruikshank in that wonderful collection of his works in the South Gallery, a collection which certainly should be the property of the nation. When my business was over, I had a look around me. I found everything conducted with the most scrupulous decorum; yet, over all was a prevailing impression of dulness, and I became depressed, almost unto tears. On the stage there was a person in the costume of a clown who appeared to be doing something to a dog; but his proceedings failed to raise my spirits. I noticed some placards referring to the performance of Zulus, French Hussars, and Fleas, but I had no heart for their enjoyment. The Royal Aquarium, I take it, wants "'livening up." I should counsel the directors, as a first step, to get rid of the fishes. Pisciculture in combination with popular entertainments is becoming as "played out" as the skating rink mania. The Westminster Aquarium stands in a splendid situation. It is admirably managed by Captain Hobson; and the only thing it wants is a little more picturesqueness and liveliness. Zulus and Fleas are only lively in a disagreeable sense.

Mr. Wybrow Robertson has become the lessee, I am told, of a theatre at Glasgow. Meanwhile, that charming actress Miss Marie Litton, with her Comedy Troupe, after a brilliant campaign at Drury Lane, has been delighting crowded audiences at the theatre of the Alexandra Palace. As I mentioned "in another place," it was on Saturday last that I witnessed the performance of Miss Litton as Miss Hardcastle in "She Stoops to Conquer." Mr. William Farren was Young Marlowe, and Mr. Lionel Brough Tony Lumpkin; so you may imagine what a treat I had. "The Rivals" and "As You Like It" have also been played by Miss Litton and Company. I am au désespoir not to have seen her in Rosalind. In "She Stoops to Conquer" she was simply delightful. She has everything in her favour—comeliness, vivacity, grace, the most winning of smiles, the most silvery of voices; and, moreover, she is constantly and steadily improving. Her Comedy Company continue a fortnight longer at the Alexandra.

The Gaiety Company are back at the Gaiety. Pardon the tautology; but it is the truth. Mr. Hollingshead has produced the "Waterman" and "High Life Below Stairs," and other familiar friends that will never grow old; and, in the burlesque of "Rip Van Winkle," Miss Nellie Farren and Miss Connie Gilchrist are once more making Crutch and Toothpick the captives of their bow and spear and winning the hearts of the "Jeunesse Stagedoory."

I have not been to Drury Lane since the first night of "The World;" but I hear with great pleasure that the dashing melodrama is drawing very good houses, and that what managers so delight in and bankers so dread, "a run," promises to continue at Old Drury for a long time to come. And I read in the Era that Mr. Augustus Harris, who plays the Baronet's Wicked Brother, is greeted every night with a storm of hisses and shakings of fists (principally feminine), not because he is a bad actor (he exhibits many symptoms of becoming a very good one), but because the audience execrate him so for conspiring against his brother and ill-treating that poor, dear, handsome wife of his. If I were Mrs. Huntingford (nee Miss Helen Barry) I would certainly "go for" that abandoned Baronet's brother, even as "Truthful James," in Mr. Bret Harte's ballad, went for the "Heathen Chinee."

The rebuilding of the Princess's progresses satisfactorily, and may be expected to reopen, under the management of Mr. Walter Gooch, before Christmas. Mr. E. Garcia takes the management of the Canterbury Hall, whither I mean to go this week: it is a most diverting and well-conducted place, Mr. Villiers devoting himself exclusively to the management of the London Pavilion. Messrs. Moore and Burgess have returned from Liverpool to their old quarters at St. James's Hall; "they write from Brighton," as the old Gazettes and Intelligencers used to say, that Mr. Burnand's "Betsy" is being played to crowded audiences at Mrs. Nye Chart's handsome little Theatre; and, at Her Majesty's Theatre, Haymarket, Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels are doing wonders. I wish that they would change their name. I fail to see any connection, save an alliterative one, between mastodon and minstrelsy. Why do not Mr. Haverly's talented artistes boldly announce themselves as the "American Opera Troupe." They are really representative of a typical and original opera peculiar to the States; and on that head I shall have something special to say next week.

MUSIC.

A series of interesting Saturday evening promenade concerts at the Crystal Palace began last week, when an orchestra of nearly one hundred performers (including the regular Crystal Palace band and the company's military band)—conducted by Mr. Manns—contributed a varied instrumental selection, the programme of the evening having also comprised vocal performances by Madame Crewe-Reichelmann and Madame Ash-Bernhardt, each of whom was very favourably received, the first-named lady having appeared for the first time in England, the other artist for the first time at the Crystal Palace.

Messrs. Gatti's Promenade Concerts at Covent-Garden Theatre are continuing their successful career, and drawing large audiences. A constant change of programme, and the appearance of many of the most eminent solo artists, give a continued interest and variety to the performances.

The afternoon concert given by Messrs. Brinsmead at St. James's Hall last week—for the display of their patent sostenente and other pianos intended for the forthcoming exhibition at Melbourne—was followed by an evening concert of special interest. In this the progress of the instrument from its earlier development was exemplified by performances of music of analogous periods on virginals, a harpsichord, the old square pianoforte on which Gluck is said to have composed his "Armida," and the grand piano used by Chopin. The Chevalier Antoine de Kontski was the pianist and Miss Helen d'Alton the vocalist in the afternoon; Miss Bessie Richards, Mrs. Bucknall Eyre, and M. Bonavitz having played in the evening on the keyed instruments specified; vocal pieces of various dates having been contributed by Miss Elliott, Mr. J. Sauvage, and Mr. Hutchinson. At the afternoon concert Miss Brousil and Mr. J. Brousil assisted in the instrumental performances, Mr. W. Ganz having been the conductor on both occasions.

The termination of the Sacred Harmonic Society's occupancy of Exeter Hall will not involve the cessation of the concerts of the institution which have for so many years been special features in London music. According to an announcement made by the secretary of the society, "arrangements have already been made to give the concerts of the season, 1880-1, in St. James's Hall, with a picked band and chorus, one of the preliminary measures being a re-trial of all the present voices, and the committee are also contemplating the performance of several works, which have either been laid aside for many years, or which have not been previously performed by the society." Sir Michael Costa still holds the post of conductor, which he has occupied for so long a period.

Tuesday's London Gazette contains an Order in Council approving of a scheme relative to the efficiency of the Volunteers, in substitution for the schemes which have been in force during the past six years.

On Tuesday the foundation-stone was laid of a memorial which the City Corporation has resolved to erect to mark the site of Temple Bar, and the limit of the City jurisdiction.

The Lord Mayor has remitted to the trustees of the Duchess of Marlborough's Fund at Dublin a final sum of £164, as the balance of the Mansion House Fund, which is now closed. In all £34,164 has been sent from the Lord Mayor's Fund towards the relief of the distress in Ireland.

On Tuesday morning, the train known as the "Flying Scotchman," on its way from Edinburgh to London ran off the line a few miles north of Berwick. The carriages were, for the most part, completely wrecked, and the driver, fireman, and a guard were killed; but, by wonderful good fortune, nearly the whole of the passengers escaped without grave injury.

The Irish Registrar-General has issued his annual return, showing the acreage under crops and the number and description of live stock in 1880, from which it appears that the total acreage under all crops this year was 5,081,244 acres, whilst last year it was 5,121,833. The returns of live stock for the year show a decrease in all descriptions as compared with last year. The condition of the peasantry throughout the country is unsettled, and illegal drilling is being carried on by night. The statement is further made that several Fenian emissaries are at the head of the movement.

The Long Vacation began on Tuesday, and terminates on Oct. 23. Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and Baron Pollock are the Vacation Judges, and the latter will attend during the first half of the time. Baron Pollock sat at Chambers on Wednesday and Thursday. But in every subsequent week during the vacation one of these Judges will be at Chambers every Tuesday and Thursday from eleven o'clock; and on every Wednesday will hold a sitting in the Court of Vice-Chancellor Malins, at Lincoln's Inn, at eleven o'clock, beginning on Wednesday, the 18th inst., for the purpose of hearing such applications only as may be of an urgent character. One of the masters of the Common Law Division will also be in attendance at Chambers daily during the Long Vacation.

The forty-first anniversary meeting of the Royal Botanic Society was held in the museum in the gardens, Regent's Park, on Tuesday; Mr. J. P. Gassiot, vice-president, in the chair. The Duke of Teck was by ballot re-elected president, and Mr. Hugh Lindsay Antrobus treasurer for the ensuing year, and the following eight Fellows of the Society were elected into the council of management—viz., the Earl of Derby, Lord Calthorpe, Lord Londesborough, Sir Philip Duncombe, Sir Richard Wallace, Mr. J. Beresford-Hope, the Hon. L. W. H. Powys, and Dr. Henry Alfred Pitman. The annual reports of the council, auditors, and secretary were read, and from these it appears that the progress of the society during the year just closing has been eminently successful. Free tickets of admission, for terms of from one to six months, had been issued to 702 applicants, a number never before exceeded in any one year, and 31,453 specimens had been given to lecturers and students at the several medical schools and schools of art of the metropolis. Merchants, manufacturers, travellers, and others had, as usual, resorted to the gardens for information respecting commercial products or special plants.

THE COURT.

The past week's residence of the Queen at the Isle of Wight has been enlivened by the regattas of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, which concludes the Ryde and Cowes marine matches for the season.

An interchange of hospitalities was made at the end of last week between the Royal family at Osborne and the Prince and Princess of Wales on board their yacht Osborne; the Princess of Wales dining with her Majesty, when Miss Knollys and General Meredith Read (United States Army) joined the Royal dinner circle; and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught dined with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board the Osborne after their return from Aldershott, where they had been for the day expressly to take leave of the 1st Battalion of the Rifle Brigade upon its departure for India.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice drove out after dinner to see the fireworks upon the occasion of the display from the Royal and other yachts off West Cowes.

The Duke of Edinburgh attained his thirty-sixth year yesterday week. The Queen and Princess Beatrice drove through Newport and West Cowes. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught were present, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, at the Regatta at West Cowes. Her Majesty's dinner party included the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, Lady Waterpark, the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph, and Captain and Mrs. Edwards. The ladies and gentlemen in waiting, the Hon. Lady Ponsonby and the Misses Ponsonby, Lady and Miss Minna Biddulph, and Lady Cowell were invited in the evening. The band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry played during and after dinner, under the direction of Mr. C. Kruger.

The Earl and Countess of Lytton arrived at Osborne last Saturday upon their return from India, and had an interview with the Queen. The Royal dinner circle included the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, Lady Waterpark, the Countess of Dudley, Lord and Lady Colville, and Sir William Jenner.

The Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. Arthur Peile, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Ventnor. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their daughters and the Duke of Cambridge, visited her Majesty in the afternoon.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught took leave of the Queen on Monday, upon their departure for Germany.

Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales lunched with her Majesty on Tuesday, and remained the afternoon. At Osborne, Major-General Sir Michael and Lady Biddulph, and Colonel Drew, C.B., commanding the 14th (Buckinghamshire, Prince of Wales's Own) Regiment at Parkhurst, dined with the Queen.

Her Majesty, with Princess Beatrice, has taken daily drives in the neighbourhood of Osborne.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have given various hospitalities on board the Osborne during the Isle of Wight Regattas.

Their Royal Highnesses, with their family, accompanied by the Duke of Connaught, witnessed the sports of the Cowes Town Regatta yesterday week from their steam-launch, which was moored off the committee's barge.

The Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, visited Portsmouth last Saturday. The Princess, with the Duke and Duchess, paid a visit to Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the Countess Dornberg. The Prince and Princess, with their daughters, are still afloat in the Osborne.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, with their eldest two children, left Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Park, on Monday, for Switzerland and Germany.

Princess Louise of Lorne and Prince Leopold arrived in the Mersey on Monday from Canada on board the steamer Polynesian, from which their Royal Highnesses embarked on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert. The Prince and Princess of Wales, on board the Osborne, went out into the Channel to meet their Royal Highnesses on their passage to the Solent from Liverpool, and accompanied them to Osborne.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz has left St. James's Palace for Homburg.

The Duchess of Westminster is much better. A later bulletin states that "it is hoped her Grace may be able to embark on board Mrs. Gerard Leigh's yacht, the Chazalie, on Saturday" (to-day).

The Premier was sufficiently recovered on Monday to be able to travel to Windsor, where he has been the guest of the Hon. and Rev. G. Wellesley, at the Deanery, during the week. Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone are expected to go the seat of the Hon. Frederick Leveson-Gower, in Surrey, to-day (Saturday).

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Mr. Martin Le Marchant Hadsley Gosselin, of Blakesware, Herts, Second Secretary in her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburg, and the Hon. Katherine Frances Gerard, youngest daughter of Lord and Lady Gerard, were married on Tuesday at the Church of the Assumption, Warwick-street. Mr. Gosselin was attended by two groomsmen, Lord Francis Hervey and Mr. H. Gosselin, his brother. The bridesmaids were Miss Blanche Petre, Miss and Miss Geraldine Gosselin (sisters of the bridegroom), Miss Milner, and the Misses Murrieta. The bride's dress was of cream satin duchesse trimmed with festoons of Brussels point lace and sprays of orange-flowers, and over a diadem of five diamond stars (her father's gift), fastened with clusters of orange-flowers, a Brussels point lace veil. Pearl earrings (Lord Stafford's gift), a diamond necklace (her mother's gift), and a single-stone diamond bracelet (a present from the Marchioness de Santurce) were also worn. The bridesmaids' dresses were composed of peacock and old gold Surat silk, with plain satin kilting of each colour and cream lace, and bonnets to match. Each carried a bouquet of pale roses and carnations, and wore a diamond arrow brooch with a pearl in the centre, the gift of the bridegroom. The marriage was performed by the Hon. and Rev. Monsignor Gilbert C., Canon Talbot, the bride being given away by her father. The marriage ceremony was followed by the nuptial mass. The bridal gifts were of great value.

The marriage of Mr. R. Garnett Head, eldest son of Sir Francis Head, with Miss Florence Pollock, granddaughter of the late Chief Baron Pollock, was celebrated yesterday week in the Savoy.

The marriage of Lord Alexander Paget, brother of the Marquis of Anglesey, and the Hon. Hester Stapleton Cotton, youngest daughter of Viscount Combermere, is fixed for Thursday, the 26th inst. The marriage will be solemnised by the Archbishop of Canterbury in the chapel at Lambeth Palace.

The marriage of Mr. H. Montagu Spencer, son of the Hon. and Rev. L. F. D. Spencer, Vicar of Sutton, Isle of Ely, and Ethel, daughter of the late General Marcus Beresford, is fixed to take place in the first week in September.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Twelfth has passed, and Parliament is still sitting; but many noble Lords, following the example of the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Marquis of Salisbury, Earl Cairns, and Lord Cranbrook, have not waited for the prorogation ere seeking the fresh woods and pastures new which tired legislators need when London is at its hottest. The Earl of Redesdale has given his usual cue for the close of the Session by hospitably entertaining the officers of the Upper House at the Trafalgar. Still, there are no signs of the Queen's Speech being read by the Lord Chancellor anywhere near Aug. 15, the date at which Parliament rose last year.

Earl Granville remains true to his post; and Lord Selborne, the Earl of Fife, and the Earl of Cork are at hand, ready at any moment to assume the cumbrous robes and hats of state, in order to signify Royal Assent by Commission to the measures that have passed the ordeal of both Houses. Their Lordships earned the gratitude of the country by performing this function yesterday week, when her Majesty gave assent through them to the Epping Forest, Metropolitan Improvement Scheme Modification, Great Northern and Great Western Bills, among others.

To Earl Beauchamp were the reporters indebted the same day, not only for a gracious concession, but also for the expression by their Lordships of much consideration for the difficult task the representatives of the daily press ably perform in "taking down" the speeches of noble Lords. On the motion of Earl Beauchamp, the House agreed that the central seats of the side galleries should be given up to the reporters to facilitate their arduous work; but a proposal to accord Hansard a table on the floor of the House did not find favour. Perhaps, a little attention to the art of elocution would most effectually solve the difficulty, after all.

Earl Granville on Monday read the latest telegrams from Afghanistan for the enlightenment of the Duke of Somerset; and informed Lord Stanley of Alderley of the position of the Eastern Question. The Foreign Secretary roundly told the noble Lord that it was the opinion of the leading statesmen of Europe, including Lord Salisbury, that if Turkey did not avail herself of the present opportunity of settling difficulties with her neighbours, then "there was very nearly an end to the existing state of things in Turkey." Her Majesty's Government were endeavouring to avert this danger by promoting the prompt settlement of "the international frontier questions." With this view England had joined the other European Powers—"the united concert" of which was maintained—in addressing identic and collective notes to the Porte calling on Turkey to carry out the decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding the Greek and Montenegrin frontier (cession of the Dulcigno district to Montenegro being recommended); and the dilatoriness of the Porte in acting on this advice was now being considered by the Great Powers. The noble Earl, furthermore, congratulated Mr. Goschen warmly on the "judgment, firmness, and conciliation" he had shown at Constantinople, where the representatives of the Powers had nearly agreed upon the demands Europe would be justified in making for reforms in Asia Minor. Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice had sent home similarly encouraging news respecting the work of the International Commission in Roumelia. As for the inquiry of Lord Stanley of Alderley regarding any contemplated naval action in Turkish waters, "notwithstanding the general state of affairs in India and China," Earl Granville replied that her Majesty's Government have come to the conclusion that it is impossible Turkey would "resist united Europe;" but, irrespective of any check our forces had sustained from underrating the strength of uncivilised troops, they were determined not to shrink from the responsibility of common action with the other Powers if it should be necessary. After this weighty declaration on the part of the Foreign Secretary, plainly intended for other ears besides those of the questioner, the Earl of Dunraven recurred to Ireland and its distress, but his recommendation of State-aided emigration was not accepted by the Earl of Kimberley as a practicable panacea.

The melting heat of Tuesday did not prevent their Lordships from sitting close upon an hour, and this in spite of an ebullition of political warmth. The Exchequer Bonds Bill having been read the third time and passed, Lord Dorchester's query as to who appointed General Burrows to his command led to a prompt remonstrance from the Duke of Somerset and the Earl of Morley, who dwelt on the unfairness and ungenerous nature of the question, seeing that the General's explanation of the disaster in Afghanistan had not yet arrived. The Under-Secretary for War added that Brigadier-General Burrows had been nominated by the General Commanding-in-Chief in Bombay, the Governor of which had approved the appointment. Lord Dorchester then denied that he had made any charge against General Burrows, in whose defence the Earl of Northbrook then spoke a few words. Lord Strathnairn afterwards informed the Duke of Somerset that he still kept in pickle the rod for Lord Chelmsford, apropos of his conduct of the Zulu War.

COMMONS.

The convalescence of Mr. Gladstone has clearly put the Prime Minister's colleagues more at ease. Encouraged by the knowledge that the right hon. gentleman was regaining health and strength in the verdant glades of Windsor, the Marquis of Hartington, Mr. Bright, and Sir William Harcourt have put on a bolder front than usual, and faced the Opposition with a determination and vigour that have delighted Radical members below the gangway.

As Leader of the House, the Secretary for India on Monday made important statements regarding the conduct of Ministerial measures, and the state of affairs in Afghanistan. The noble Marquis informed Mr. Stanhope and other hon. members that, notwithstanding the unfortunate event that had occurred near Candahar, it was the intention of the Government to carry out a resolve formed some time ago, and at once to withdraw our troops from Cabul to Gundamuck, with the exception of the force which General Roberts was leading to Candahar. This step was approved by General Sir Donald Stewart, who had telegraphed to the Viceroy:—"Nothing remains to be done but to hand over Cabul to the Ameer, who is naturally anxious to establish himself in his capital, and bring his Government into working order." Lord Hartington read this further message from the Marquis of Ripon:—"Major White having joined his regiment in Roberts' division, reports: magnificent force; could go anywhere"; and the noble Lord answered Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett by admitting that Abdurrahman had been a prisoner of Russia, and by drily adding that it was true a small Russian force was advancing through the Turcoman country, "and no doubt towards Herat and Afghanistan, in the same way that General Roberts may be said to be marching towards the Persian or the Russian frontier." Laughter greeted this adroit turning of the sentence; and Ministerial cheers indorsed the declaration that—"A British army is not, in my opinion, retreating from an enemy's country in the face of the severe defeat, as General Roberts and General Phayre are both advancing to meet the enemy."

The Marquis of Hartington subsequently said, with regard to public business, that the Employers' Liability Bill would be proceeded with, likewise the Hares and Rabbits Bill (to which some amendments would be proposed by the Home Secretary), and the Burials Bill. It was also necessary to pass the Census Bill and Expiring Laws Continuance Bill; and it was desirable that the Grain Cargoes Bill, Savings Bank and Money Orders Bills, should be passed. The Vaccination Bill would be dropped. The Indian Budget would be unfolded next Tuesday; and before the close of the Session the Commissioners to inquire into the bribery prevalent in certain boroughs would have to be moved. A desultory conversation on the Ministerial programme was followed by the passing in Committee of Supply of the British Museum votes and a few others.

A pregnant remark on the Greek question was made by Sir Charles Dilke on Monday. Replying to Sir H. Drummond Wolff, the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs said her Majesty's Government had at length drawn their objections to the mobilisation of the Greek Army, the other Great Powers having done the same.

The Afghan difficulty led to a smart impromptu debate on Tuesday. Sir W. Palliser, regretting Lord Hartington did not see with him the advisability of retaining a British force at Sherpur to serve as a base for General Roberts, moved the adjournment in order to justify his suggestion, which received the sanction of another military authority in the person of Sir W. Barttelot. But Lord Hartington declined to disturb the arrangements of the military authorities responsible for the Afghan movements, and retorted that if it was necessary for General Roberts to have a base of operations, that base would be better furnished by General Watson in the Khurrum Valley than by General Stewart's force.

This motion for adjournment having been withdrawn, a second motion of the same kind was made by Mr Chaplin in order that he might carp at the large bill-of-fare Lord Hartington had set before the House at the previous sitting. The Marquis of Hartington, in reply, was not wholly unsuccessful in emulating the light, bantering vein which Lord Palmerston used to employ with such good effect on unreasonable critics; and, in the end, Mr. Chaplin found himself supported by only 23 votes against 236. The motion for adjournment was thus decisively rejected.

The Opposition consoled themselves by loudly cheering the new member for Liverpool, Lord Claud Hamilton, upon his entrance with his two colleagues, Lord Sandon and Mr. Whitley.

The Hares and Rabbits Bill was got into Committee a few minutes after midnight on Tuesday. But this step was not reached before an animated discussion on many points had been raised, the salient features of the debate being Mr. Henry Labouchere's lively speech in vainly moving an amendment to extend the provisions to all sorts of game, Sir William Harcourt's ridicule of Mr. Hicks's amendment implying that hares and rabbits might lay eggs, Mr. Bright's crushing answer to Mr. Chaplin and vigorous defence of the bill, and Sir Stafford Northcote's galvanic retort.

The Lords rejection of the Compensation Bill led Mr Forster, on the 5th inst., to make a pertinent appeal to Irish members to assist in preserving the peace in Ireland, and at the same time to state that the Government were fully prepared to maintain order. The Secretary for Ireland later in the day had to oppose Mr. Justin M'Carthy's motion to reconstitute the Royal Commission on the Irish Land Act, so as to secure the representation of tenant farmers; and the motion was negatived by 123 to 49 votes. The following evening Mr. Forster was called upon to calm the fears of Mr. O'Connor Power with regard to the reinforcements ordered to Ireland.

Mr. Arthur Arnold's motion, adverse to the compulsory slaughter at Liverpool of cattle from America, was negatived on the 6th inst., by 194 to 20 votes.

The incapacity or unwillingness of certain members of the Opposition to comprehend the Marquis of Hartington's plain and straightforward statement of the course of Ministerial business occasioned a lively episode on Wednesday. Lord Eustace Cecil exhibited great anxiety to know what would be done on the morrow, and Sir William Harcourt was induced to send for Lord Hartington to answer the question. Obviously important as were the duties detaining the noble Lord at the India Office, the Secretary for India was summoned to repeat what he had explicitly stated early in the week. Lord E. Cecil was in a manner rebuked by the Chairman of Committees for interrupting the consideration of the Hares and Rabbits Bill ere Lord Hartington rose to gratify his curiosity, and reiterate that it would be convenient to adhere to the previous contingent arrangement, and take the Burials Bill on Thursday and the Employers' Liability Bill on Friday. A few more shots were exchanged. Then fresh volleys were fired at the devoted Hares and Rabbits Bill, Mr. Bright defending it with the reasonable remark that it would be inadvisable to vex the tenant with too many restrictions, to which Lord John Manners replied, with more acidity than dignity, that the right hon. gentleman ought to be muzzled.

A meeting of French residents in London was held last Saturday in the auction-rooms of the Baltic, for the purpose of establishing a national society in the metropolis, M. Ralli presiding. Professor Cassel read an address which it was resolved should be presented to the French Ambassador. It was resolved to found a Société Nationale Française in London, with the object of giving more cohesion to the large number of resident Frenchmen.

A quarterly court of the governors of the Brompton, Hospital for Consumption was held on the 5th inst. After the usual preliminary business the secretary read the report of the committee of management, from which it appeared that Dr. Reginald Thompson (late senior assistant physician) had been elected physician, and Dr. J. Kingston Fowler had been elected sixth assistant physician. Dr. Ewart had been appointed pathologist. In view of the great need of help for the maintenance and extension of the hospital, the committee has applied to several of the City companies for their assistance. Up to that time the committee were enabled to acknowledge the receipt of the following grants:—The Mercers' Company, £105; the Merchant Taylors' Company, £105; the Clockworkers' Company, £105; the Grocers' Company, £100; the Goldsmiths' Company, £100. The following bequests had been announced since the last court:—Viscountess Jocelyn, certain trust funds (contingent and remote); John E. Chalmers, £500, duty free; Miss Astbury, £50, duty free. The number of in-patients admitted since May 27 was 184; discharged, many greatly benefited, 157; died, 15; new out-patient cases, 2184.

Nearly 500 Roman Catholics from Manchester and Salford started on Monday for Knock, in Ireland, where apparitions are reported to have been seen. Among the pilgrims were a large number of cripples and other deformed persons.

The Liverpool City Council has resolved to proceed with the first section of a new water supply from Vyrnwy. The scheme is expected to be completed in five years, and will secure an additional supply of 13,000,000 gallons of water per day to Liverpool. The cost of the scheme will be £3,000,000.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who, during the present month, were to have laid a memorial-stone of the new buildings of the North London Hospital for Consumption, at Hampstead, have been compelled to postpone their visit until Oct. 23. To complete the erection £5000 is required.

Carlisle Bridge, Dublin, which has been recently rebuilt, was yesterday week re-named the O'Connell Bridge, by the Lord Mayor, in the presence of a vast crowd. The allusions made to O'Connell were received with loud cheering. Many of the public buildings were hung with flags and banners.

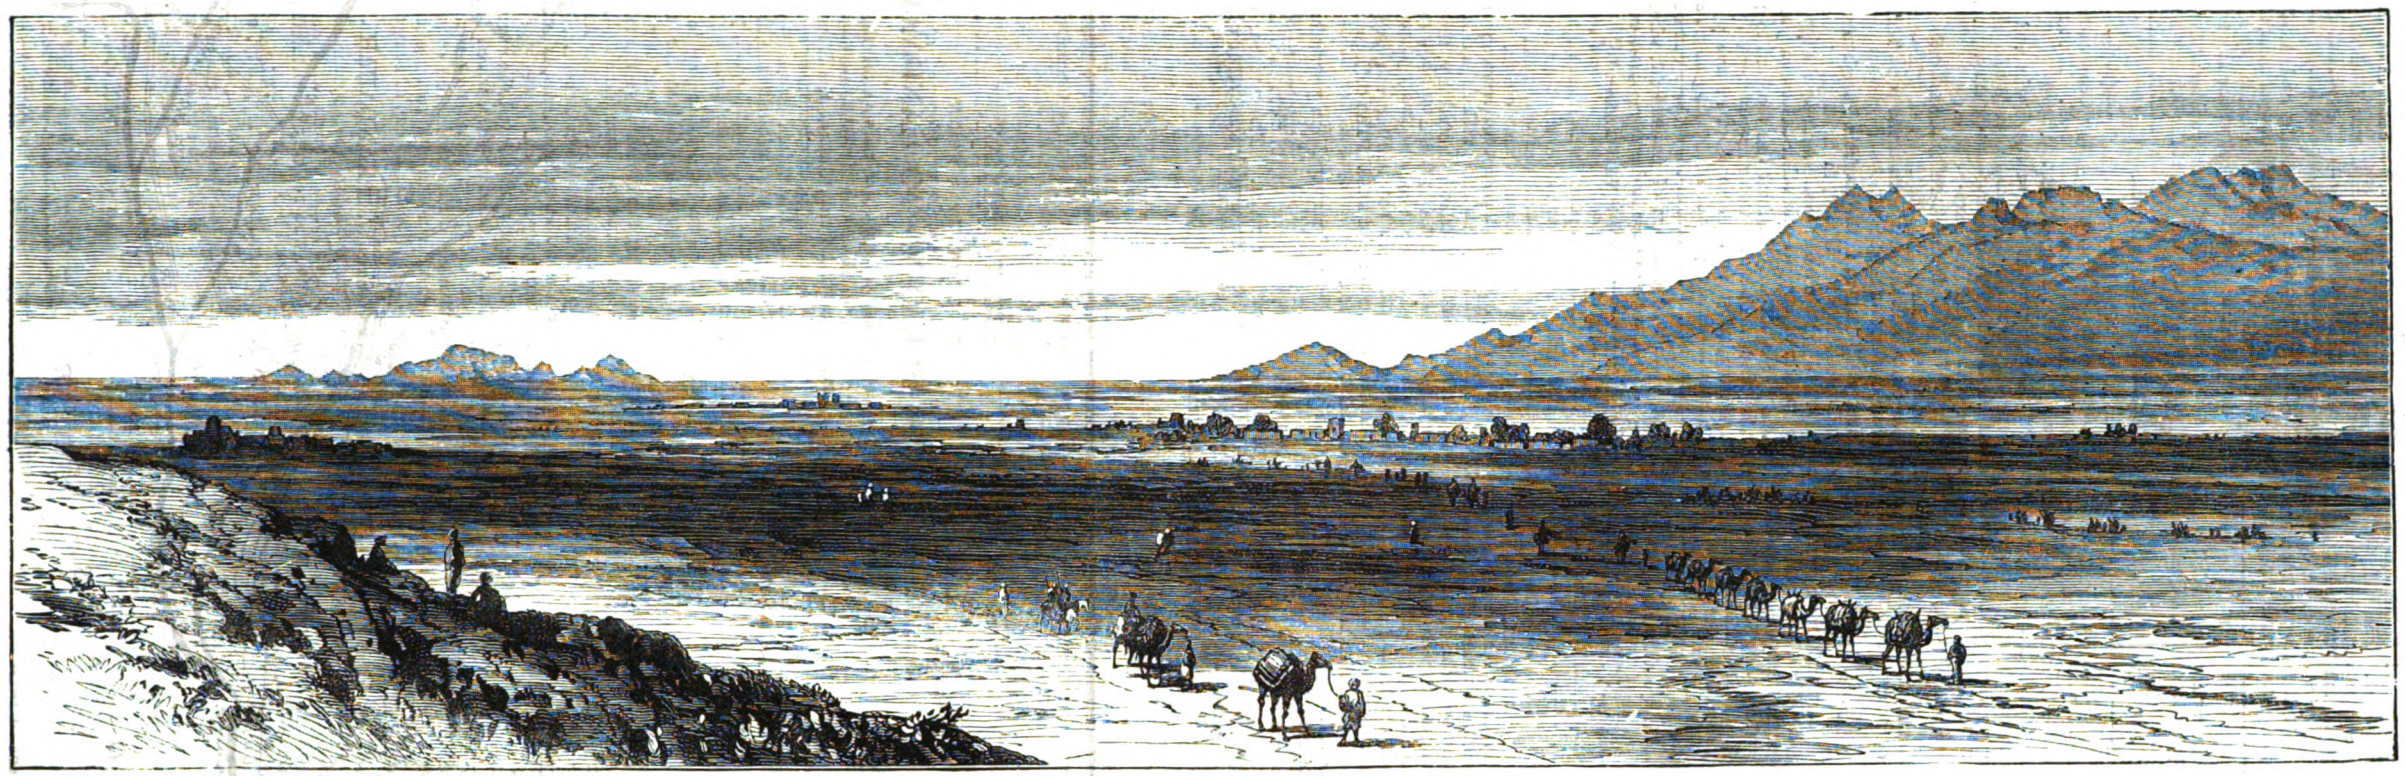
It is stated that Hales Place, Canterbury, the residence for many years of Miss Barbara Hales, a Roman Catholic lady, has been purchased by the Jesuits for the purposes of a college. The sum of 24,000 is to be paid for the property, which includes fifty-seven acres of land. The college is to accommodate 150 students.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the fifth week in July was 82,780, of whom 46,127 were in workhouses, and 36,653 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 875, of whom 654 were men, 184 women, and 37 children under sixteen.

At the last examination of the King's and Queen's College of Physicians, Ireland, Miss Fanny Butter passed her final examination. She has taken the whole of her curriculum at the London School of Medicine for Women and the Royal Free Hospital, and will shortly leave for India to pursue her work as a medical missionary in connection with the Zenana Mission.

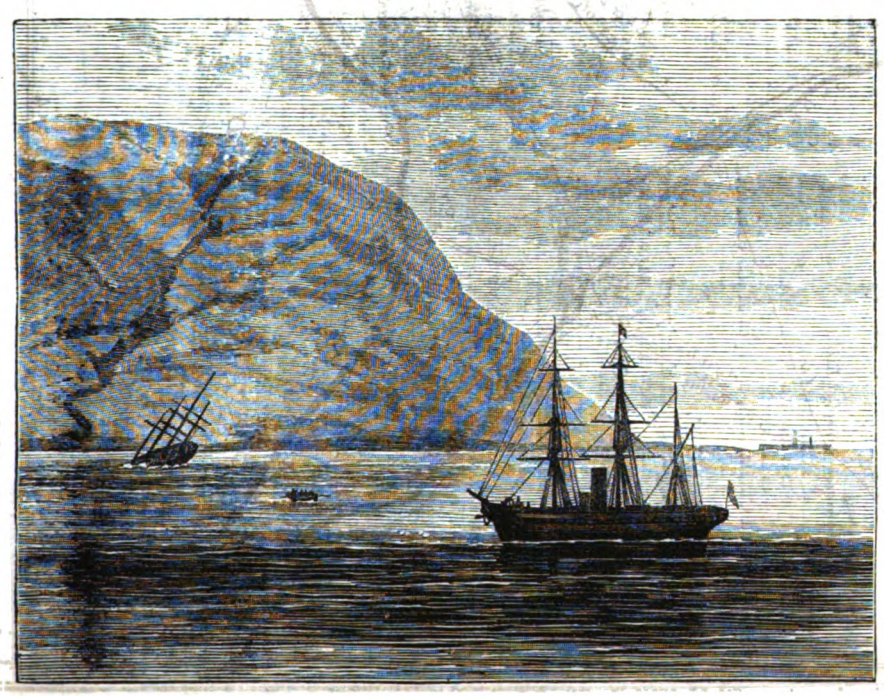
The members of the City Guilds Commission met on Monday at Lord Derby's house, in St. James's-square. They first proceeded to take into consideration the best methods to pursue in conducting the inquiry intrusted to them, and afterwards went into the receipts and expenditure of a few of the largest City Guilds.

Three new Board schools were opened at Sheffield on Monday, increasing the number now provided by the Board to twenty-five, and the accommodation to 17,000. It was stated that 47,509 scholars are on the rolls of all the elementary schools in Sheffield, but that the average attendance is 33,416.



The eleventh annual Convention of the Home-Rule Confederation of Great Britain opened on Monday morning in the hall of the Irish Literary Institute, Newcastle-on-Tyne. A greater number of delegates were present than at any former convention in recent years. Mr. Parnell, M.P., presided, and other Irish members of Parliament attended.

The Albert Victor steam-ship, belonging to the South-Eastern Railway Company, and destined for the Channel service from Folkestone to Boulogne, made her trial passage last Saturday, performing the distance, in the face of a head wind and with a fresh sea, in an hour and a half, the return passage occupying five minutes less time. The Albert Victor, which was built by Messrs. Samuda Brothers, the engines being supplied by Messrs. Penn and Sons, is constructed of steel, and is 250 feet long by 29 broad.



Lady Penrhyn on Monday distributed the annual prizes in connection with the Clio training-ship, which is moored in the Menai Straits, off Bangor, and has now nearly 300 boys on board. The Duke of Westminster, the chairman of the executive committee, with whom the movement originated, presided; and Lord Penrhyn, the Bishop of Bangor, the High Sheriff of Anglesey (Major Platt), Sir Richard Bulkeley, and the Hon. W. E. Sackville West took part in the proceedings. It was stated by Captain Moger, the superintendent of the ship, that the Prince of Wales expressed his pleasure at the appearance of the boys, who recently constituted a guard of honour at Conway, and had become a patron.

Mr. T. Boyd, Crown solicitor for Tipperary, and his two sons, have been fired at by persons wearing black masks. He has received a severe wound in the arm; one of his sons was shot through the lungs, and is not expected to recover, and the other has been slightly wounded in the leg. Mr. H. Isley, of Clenbulloque, King's County, has had a narrow escape of being fired at. His life has been threatened, and on Saturday last a man with a cloak and a crape mask was discovered on the estate. Mr. Isley's servant gave chase to him, but he presented a gun and escaped.—The Royal Marines under orders for Ireland left Chatham last Saturday. After being inspected on their parade-ground, the men were marched to the dockyard, where they embarked on the Humber troop-ship, under the supervision of Staff-Captain Batt, Queen's harbour master. The Assistance troop-ship arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday, and on Monday embarked marines for Ireland, sailing the same day for Devonport, to receive another contingent.

KENSINGTON NEW TOWNHALL.

On Saturday the new Townhall of Kensington, adjoining what has been hitherto the Kensington Vestry-Hall, and nearly opposite the Metropolitan District Railway station in High-street, was opened by Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, and the Duke of Teck. A guard of honour, consisting of a detachment of the 2nd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers, under Captain M'Minn, were drawn up outside the entrance. The Royal party was received by the Rev. E. Carr Glyn, Vicar, and the building committee, with Major-General Boileau at its head. Among those present were Lord Kensington (who laid the foundation-stone of the hall); Sir Charles Dilke, M.P., Mr. Firth, M.P., the Hon. E. C. Curzon, Lieutenant-Colonel Sir James M'Garel Hogg, Bart., M.P. (Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works), Sir Joseph Bazalgette, Lieutenant-Colonel Henderson, Professor Gladstone, the members of the Kensington Vestry, the chairmen of several district boards, and others. Her Royal Highness was conducted by the grand staircase to the entrance of the large hall, where the key of the door was presented by the Vicar, on behalf of the vestry, and the Duchess and visitors entered the large hall. The Rev. E. Carr Glyn having offered up a suitable prayer, her Royal Highness declared the hall open, and the Duke of Teck expressed the satisfaction it had given the Duchess and himself to be present. The new Townhall, which is constructed of Portland stone, has been erected from the designs and under the supervision of Mr. Robert Walker, architect. It has a stately front of mixed Renaissance style, with square windows and doorway to the ground-floor, but round-arched windows above, relieved by Corinthian columns and pilasters; over these are a Grecian frieze and pediment, surmounted by a mansard roof. CAPTAIN G. F. HARRIS, 3RD BUFFS, DECORATED AT WIMBLEDON BY THE PRINCESS OF WALES FOR SAVING LIFE.

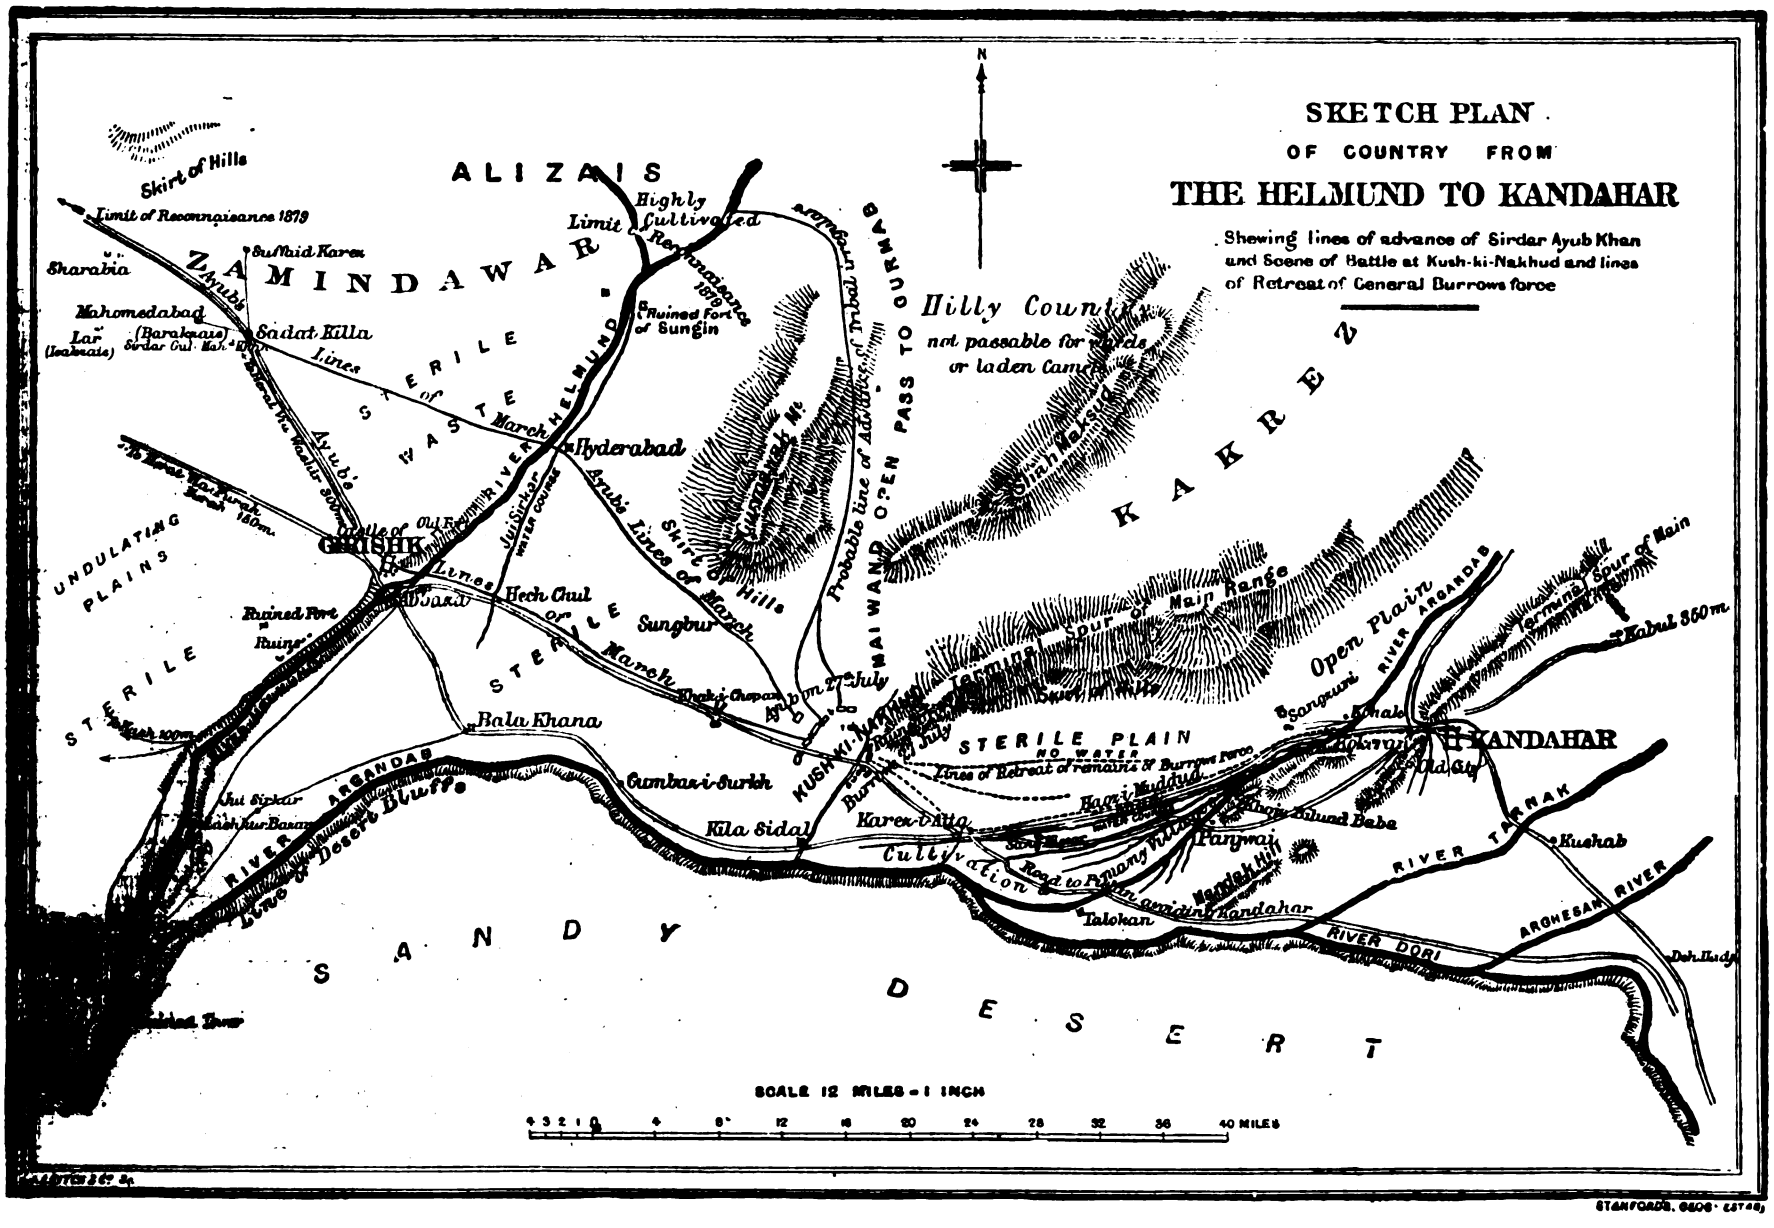
THE LATE LIEUTENANT W. N. JUSTICE, 17TH REGIMENT, KILLED IN THE ACTION AT KHUSHK-I-NAKHUD.

building contains, besides all the accommodation necessary for the vestry and the other offices of the parish, a large hall 91 ft. long by 46 ft. wide, which may be used for meetings, or concerts, or other entertainments. The windows of this hall are ornamented with medallion portraits in stained-glass of celebrated persons historically connected with old and new Kensington, among them being likenesses of the Queen, of Lord Holland, of Fox, Addison, and Thackeray.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT JUSTICE.



Lieutenant William Napier Justice, of the 17th (Leicestershire) Regiment, was killed in the recent action at Khushk-i-Nakhud, near Candahar, while officiating as Quartermaster of the 30th Bombay Native Infantry (Jacob's Rifles). He was the only son of Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Annesley, Justice of the Madras Staff Corps. He was born on Jan. 6, 1857, and was educated at the Cheltenham College. He obtained a direct commission in the 17th Regiment by competition, and in 1876 accompanied the second battalion to India. In 1879 he was appointed a probationer for the Bombay Staff Corps, and, after serving a short time with the 21st Marine Battalion, was transferred to Jacob's Rifles.

Mr. Chesterman is the present Master Cutler of Sheffield. His name was misspelt in our last issue.

HONOURS FOR SAVING LIFE.

At the conclusion of the last Wimbledon Rifle Meeting, just before the distribution of prizes, on Saturday, the 24th ult., the Princess of Wales was graciously pleased to pin to the breast of Captain G. Fred. Harris the order of St. John of Jerusalem, of which she is the patroness in England, awarded to him for saving five lives at a fire in Dublin, which was mentioned in our account of the ceremonial that day. Captain Harris is the only member of the services in possession of this distinction. Permission to wear it has been granted by his Royal Highness Commanding in Chief. This officer was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, from which he received his commission in 1858, at the age of sixteen. He was appointed to the 2nd battalion of the 20th Regiment, then in course of formation at Clonmel. Having obtained a certificate of the highest class from the School of Musketry, he became Regimental Instructor of Musketry, and performed the duties during a long tour of foreign service. He was in India, China, and Japan (the 20th being the first English regiment ever landed there); again in China, Natal, the Mauritius, and British Caffraria. Having obtained the necessary certificate he was appointed Superintendent of Gymnasia to the Dublin, Belfast, and Curragh districts, which post he held from 1872 to 1874. He was transferred to the Buffs last July, and holds a certificate from the School of Military Equitation at Canterbury. His services have been already recognised by the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire. At a chapter of the sixth or English "Langue" of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, held at the Chancery, St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell, on June 23, the following resolution was entered on the records:—"That the silver medal of the order be awarded to Captain G. F. Harris, 3rd Foot (the Buffs), in recognition of conspicuous gallantry shown by him on the night of Sept. 19, 1877, in saving, at imminent personal danger, the lives of five persons from a fire in Charlemont-street, Dublin, and in subsequently removing, alone and unaided, at still further risk, a quantity of paraffin oil from the premises, and so preventing the fire spreading to the adjacent house, a female orphanage."

The Portrait of Captain Harris is from a photograph by W. and A. H. Fry, of Brighton.

A WRECK IN THE RED SEA.

A sketch by Mr. J. C. Long, third officer of the Peninsular and Oriental steam-ship Australian, has been sent us from Aden, which represents the wreck of the steamer Duke of Lancaster, near Mocha, on the Arabian coast of the Red Sea. This disaster occurred on the night of the 12th ult., when the vessel got ashore on the north end of Jebel Sukhur, a small mountainous island there. Having gone full speed astern after she struck the ground, she immediately swung round, and went stern on to a rock, on which she hung, with her fore part up to the main hatchway in deep water. The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Australia, passing on her way to Calcutta, took all the passengers and crew of the ship-wrecked vessel, except the chief officer and five men, who stayed to take charge of the wreck. Most of the passengers came on board in a very pitiable condition, some of them in their night-dresses, having lost the whole of their effects, and having been out on the rocks all night. But no lives were lost by this disaster.

The Bishop of London has discontinued his attendance at London House on Mondays till further notice.

A memorial window, by Mr. Kempe, to John Kettlewell, the Non-juror and well-known divine, has been dedicated in Brompton church, near Northallerton, his native place.

On the 4th inst. the members of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Society were entertained by Lord Ebury at Moor Park.

The new choir-stalls in the nave of Rochester Cathedral, in memory of the late Mr. Philip Cazenove, have been completed, and add greatly to the appearance of that portion of the old cathedral.

The Archbishop of York has addressed a letter to the archdeacons of the diocese desiring them to request the clergy to read the prayer for fine weather next Sunday morning and evening, and to exhort their congregations to increased piety.

The Rev. W. J. Thompson, Curate of Hornsey, has received from the Vicar and parishioners of St. Bartholomew, Cambridge-road, a handsome pocket communion service, as a parting token of their esteem and goodwill.

The Church of St. George, Camberwell, was reopened on Sunday with special services, after having undergone a thorough repair, by the Rev. W. G. Martin, M.A., who took for his text the fourth verse of the 122nd Psalm, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord."

The Rev. J. H. Barber has been licensed by the Bishop to the Curacy of St. Olave, Hart-street, with All Hallows, Staining, in the City of London. On resigning his previous appointment, Mr. Barber received an address with a purse of 200 guineas, at a public meeting of the parishioners and friends of St. Barnabas, South Lambeth, where he had acted as Curate in charge for about six years.

General Higginson, C.B., and the officers of the brigade of Guards have made a handsome presentation to the Rev. R. C. Halpin, their chaplain for seventeen years, on his resigning that position. It consists of an address, accompanied by a silver salver, with inscription. Miss Halpin, his daughter, was also presented with a silver tea service in recognition of her zeal in founding, and for several years carrying on, the volunteer chapel choir. To these tokens of regard is added a purse of £100.

The Bishop of Manchester preached on Sunday at the evening service of the 4th battalion Staffordshire Volunteers, now in camp at Oxley. He referred to the necessity of soldiers being trained to discipline and endurance, and said that the whole of English society needed a little discipline to make it orderly and sound. There were great chasms in it and disorganisation everywhere, and what was wanted was greater national unity amongst us, founded upon the high idea of patriotism.

Lady Louisa Mills laid the foundation-stone of a mission church in the St. Stephen's district of Lewisham on Saturday last. The additional accommodation has been rendered necessary by the extensive building operations recently carried on in the neighbourhood. The site was purchased for £1039, and the church, which is to accommodate 600 worshippers, is estimated to cost £6000 when completed. A sum of £183 was placed on the foundation-stone in purses and other forms towards the erection of the church. Sir Charles Mills, M.P., at a subsequent luncheon, remarked that at no time in our history had it been more important to make a united effort to extend the usefulness of the Church.

At St. George's, Hanover-square, on Sunday week, the Rev. E. Capel Cure, the Rector, commended to the sympathy of his congregation the Consumption Hospital at Brompton, which had done a most excellent work, though hindered by want of sufficient accommodation. The committee were, however, entirely expending Miss Read's legacy in building a new wing, which would give 137 more beds for in-patients. This new extension would entail an additional expenditure of £10,000 a year; and towards meeting this the Rector made an earnest appeal, especially asking for fresh annual subscriptions. The collections amounted to £54 14s. 8d.

At Lancing College the following have been elected to open exhibitions:—Seniors.—A. E. Russell, G. S. Fowler; highly commended, J. Sankey. Juniors.—G. F. Wallace, C. R. Pagden.

The Charity Commissioners have prepared a new draught scheme for dealing with Christ's Hospital, the principal clauses of which (says the Globe) are as follows:—The schools of the foundation shall be hospital and boarding schools for boys and girls respectively, and such schools respectively shall be maintained in the present school buildings of the foundation in London and at Hertford, until other suitable buildings shall be provided as hereinafter directed. The boys' schools shall be called respectively the Upper or Grecian School, the Middle School, and the Lower School; and the girls' schools shall be called respectively the Upper School and the Lower School.

The Midsummer prize distribution in connection with King's School, Peterborough, took place on the 3rd inst., the Rev. Professor Westcott, D.D., presiding.

Colonel Stanley, M.P., presented the prizes to the successful pupils at the Lancaster Royal Grammar School, on Tuesday, the 3rd inst. In doing so he referred to the benefits of a classical education, and remarked that it was not unbecoming in him, as his father's son, to tell the boys that when his father filled the highest place which a subject could fill in this country, and even in the moments when his limbs were racked by disease and pain, he found it a source of pleasure to labour at translating one of the standard classics, and in turn to produce a work which he (Colonel Stanley) hoped had become one of the standard classics of this country. He was glad to remind them also that they had at the present time at the head of affairs one who was distinguished as a profound classical scholar and as an author, and who was able to testify to the fullest extent to the enjoyment that an acquaintance with the classics would afford to a man of mature years and of a fully-occupied public life.

IN THE HOLIDAYS.

Now for a while thy feet have stayed their roaming,
Amid God's fairest works to find a rest,
Where calm-eyed Peace comes to thee in the gloaming,
And Contemplation soothes thine anxious breast.

The crush and turmoil of the world have taught thee
The priceless value of these days serene,
And all the burdens that the Past hath brought thee
Seem now like shadows in the distance seen.

Amongst the grass the starry flowers are shining,
And low winds whisper through the trembling trees,—
Weak heart, thou hast no reason for repining
While Earth is bright with beauties such as these!

Forget awhile Life's labours and its losses,
And bid thine earthward hopes and cravings cease,
Then, though thy soul were worn with daily crosses,
These tranquil hours shall bring thee perfect peace.

And when our rest, like some sweet dream, hath ended,
And we resume the crowding tasks of life,
We shall not feel so weak and unbefriended,
Alone contending in a hopeless strife.

For He who spreads these scenes of quiet beauty
Appoints each soul its cross and its reward;
And, while we tread the rugged path of Duty,
We follow in the footsteps of our Lord.

EMILY MOORHOUSE SPEIGHT.

The Queen has appointed the Earl of Bessborough, Baron Dowse, the O'Conor Don, Mr. Arthur MacMorrough Kavanagh, and Mr. William Shaw, Commissioners to inquire and report upon the working and operation of the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act 1870, and the Acts amending the same, and whether any and what further amendments of the law are necessary or expedient, with a view (firstly) to improve the relation of landlord and tenant in Ireland, and (secondly) to facilitate the purchase by tenants of their holdings. Sir George Young, Bart., is the Secretary.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS AT SHOEBURYNESS.

The whole of the seventy-seven detachments of the Volunteer Artillery, forming the First Division of the camp at Shoeburyness for 1880, arrived at their destination before evening on Sunday, the 1st inst. Most of them were in camp on Saturday, and were ready for church parade on Sunday morning. The prizes for the week amounted to £600.

The official list places the prize-winners on Monday, the 2nd inst., in the following order:—£45, given by the Prince of Wales, won by Sergeant Hewitt's detachment, 4th East York; £20, by National Artillery Association, Sergeant McEwen's detachment, 1st Midlothian; £15, by National Artillery Association, to 7th Detachment 1st London; £10, by Captain Fawcus, 4th Durham; to the Gillingham Detachment, 1st Kent; £5, by the National Artillery Association, 12th Detachment 3rd Middlesex. Certificates were awarded to the 1st detachment 1st Surrey and the Norwich Detachment 1st Norfolk, each having obtained the score to twelve within the allotted time.

On Tuesday, the 3rd inst., prizes of the aggregate value of £80 were competed for with the 40-pounder Armstrong gun, at 1600 and 2000 yards, sea ranges. The 4th East York detachment, which carried off the Prince of Wales's prize on Monday, fired four rounds under five minutes, and scored two direct hits. The first and second prizes in the repository competition fell to the 2nd Middlesex and 1st Sussex detachments.

The 2nd Middlesex on Wednesday, the 4th inst., won the Lords and Commons prize for the best practice with the 40-pounder Armstrong, making three direct hits in five minutes fifty-five seconds. Colonel Keate, R.A., reviewed the volunteers.

On Thursday, the 5th inst., the competition with the 10-inch muzzle-loading gun and a repository competition brought the work of the first division to a successful close. The Corporation of London and the City Companies' Challenge Cup was won by the first and second detachments of 3rd Middlesex. The 1st Northumberland and the 1st Sussex carried off both the Association prizes, and the 2nd Middlesex, 1st Sussex, and 3rd Middlesex took the three repository prizes. The men were inspected by Colonel Hastings, Commandant of the Garrison, who complimented them on their work.

The detachment forming the first division marched out of the camp at Shoeburyness yesterday week. Colonel Keate issued a camp order, expressing his approbation of the manner in which all ranks had performed their duties.

The second contingent arrived in camp during Saturday and Sunday last. As was the case last week, the command is divided into four brigades; the first being commanded by Major Grayson, of the 1st Lancashire. It is composed of sixteen detachments from Lancashire, three from Kent, and three from Devon. Major Urquhart has charge of the second brigade. Seven of his detachments come from Essex, thirteen from Kent, and three from Forfar. Major M'Kenzie, of the 2nd Durham, commands the third brigade, which, with the exception of one detachment, is made up of twenty detachments from Durham. The fourth brigade has for its chief Major Strandring, of the 7th Lancashire. It is formed up of three detachments of Cheshire men, three from the Cinque Ports, five of the 2nd Lancashire, four from Gloucester, one from Norfolk, three from Edinburgh, and two from East York. The report of this week's doings is unavoidably deferred.

Two provisional battalions of volunteers, composed of members of metropolitan regiments, went to Aldershott last Saturday for a week's drill in the Camp of Exercise, taking the places in the 1st and 3rd Brigades at Cox-hill and Rushmore, respectively, that were vacated by the 1st Provisional Battalion and Artists' Rifles. The 4th Provisional Battalion, which paraded in the afternoon at Somerset House, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Du Plat Taylor, was formed principally of members of the 49th Middlesex (Post Office) Corps, the full strength of the battalion being brought up by 139 of the 26th Middlesex (Customs and Docks) Rifles and a few men of the Civil Service Corps. The 5th Provisional Battalion, though larger, was of a more heterogenous character, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Farrell, of the 4th Kent, consisting of his own regiment, of the 2nd London, of the 3rd Middlesex, of the 2nd Surrey, of the 6th Surrey, and of the 1st Tower Hamlets. Both battalions left Waterloo by special train, and on arriving at their destination at once took up their duties with the regular brigades to which they are attached until Saturday (to-day). The four battalions of volunteers who were in camp at Aldershott for the past week returned to their homes, after passing satisfactory inspections at the hands of the general officers under whose command they have temporarily been.

The official inspection of the 2nd (late 9th) Kent Artillery Brigade took place last Saturday at Plumstead, where the regiment has its head-quarters and guns.

The prize-meeting of the B, D, and F companies of the London Scottish was held at Wimbledon, when the following were the chief winners:—The first prize in B Company went to Quartermaster-Sergeant Michie; the Rob Roy Challenge Cup of F Company was won by Private W. D. Little; and the Waterloo Challenge Cup and £3 10s. was carried off by Private A. Little. The leading score for the D Company was made by Private Wright.

The Nursery Prizes of the South Middlesex were competed for at the Wormwood-scrubbs, Corporal Holman and Private Challens making the two best scores.

A match was fired last week at Hythe between teams of twelve men each from the Scots Guards and the London Rifle Brigade, when the former were successful by seven points.

At the meeting of the Yorkshire Association last week on Strensell-common, Sergeant Thirlway (Ripon) and Private Denley (York) won the West Riding Bronze Medals of the National Rifle Association, Private Mackereth (Scarborough) won that for the North Riding, and Staff Sergeant Kirk (Hull) the East Riding Medal.

The 37th Middlesex, who were encamped at Hampstead during the past week, brought their work to close on Saturday afternoon by a series of athletic sports.

At the Lincoln 2nd Battalion competition at Sleaford yesterday week the firing was exceptionally good. Corporal Tinkler, of Stamford, won the Lord Lieutenant's Cup, value twenty guineas.

The third annual Army rifle meeting was concluded on Saturday at the camp ranges, Aldershott. Prizes to the value of 475 were offered for competition. In the match for the regimental trophy, the Royal Engineer train were the victors. The 4th Hussars were the first in the cavalry mounted competition. In the match, Army v. Volunteers, the latter defeated the regulars. Major Rook, 53rd Regiment, won the championship.

About 6000 regulars and volunteers had a field-day on Tuesday, in the Long Valley, under the direction of General Sir Daniel Lysons.

A torpedo sham battle took place on Tuesday off Fort Monckton, near Portsmouth.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The second half of the Sussex fortnight began very auspiciously at Brighton, where there was an immense attendance; and, for a wonder, the weather was all that could be desired. Of course, Goodwood carried off the palm as far as the class of animals engaged in the various stakes were concerned; but, descending to quantity, Brighton was well to the fore, as almost every race brought out a capital field. Despite the fact that Parole (8 st. 12 lb.) has made nearly a dozen unsuccessful essays this season, he was once more backed very heavily by the public for the Brighton Stakes, and started with the call of everything. However, as we remarked last week, the old horse is fairly "played out;" and the same thing may be said of Advance (8st. 8 lb.), who is always at it, either on the flat or over hurdles. Bay Archer (8 st. 9 lb.) ran well; but the Tupgill stable is in irresistible form at present, and Humbert (7 ft. 4 lb.), proving to be just "i' the vein," disposed of his field very easily indeed. After King of Scotland's capital form with Lady Chelmsford at Sandown Park it was strange that his chance for the Corporation Stakes should be almost entirely overlooked, and backers who accepted 6 to 4 about Voluptuary and Thurio had the mortification of seeing Mr. Ellam's grandly-bred colt win in a canter. For some unaccountable reason the Brighton Cup secured only a very poor entry, and it was found impossible to fulfil one of the conditions—that four horses, the property of different owners, should start for it. Still the lessees, rather than allow the race to fall through, waived this clause, and Mr. Crawfurd's pair—Bay Archer and Edelweiss—were opposed by the irrepressible Advance and Solver, as was the case at Goodwood, a declaration to win with Bay Archer was made, and when Edelweiss had completely settled the other pair he was pulled up to allow his stable companion to pass the post first. Of course, this was strictly justifiable, still, Mr. Crawfurd's policy is very mysterious, as, though he has only won one insignificant race this season, Edelweiss has been completely exposed, and has earned fully a stone more than he would otherwise have had in the Cesarewitch. After the form he showed on the previous day, King of Scotland was greatly fancied for the Rottingdean Plate, but he ran ungenerously at the finish, and succumbed to Fortissimo. Notwithstanding this defeat, he was pulled out again on the Friday, and, with odds of 3 to 1 on him, was well beaten by the Favonius—Bawbee filly, who, being in the same stable, was scarcely backed for a shilling. One of the most interesting races of the week was the contest between Charibert and Valentino in the Rous Stakes, and, as Mr. Rothschild's very speedy colt was in receipt of no less than 25 lb. for the year, it is not surprising that the bookmakers fielded strongly; however, Lord Falmouth's cast-off appears invincible this season, and added another to his long and unbroken roll of victories.

In spite of all the reverses that they sustained at Brighton, backers turned up in great force at Lewes, where fortune is generally kind to them. Matters fared a little better with them than on the previous days of the week, and they must have wound up with a heavy balance on the wrong side. The first day's racing will be ever memorable for the extraordinary finish in the Astley Stakes. Scobell, Wandering Nun, and Mazurka finished a dead-heat, and only a head behind them came Cumberland and Thora, who were also exactly level as they passed the judge's chair. Very properly, such a punishing race was not run over again, and Scobell walked over, the stake being divided between the three. The Lewes Plate fell to the unlucky Montrose, who seemed doomed to constantly finish "a good second." A capital day's sport on Saturday was ruined by the awful weather, the rain descending in such torrents that fielders and backers alike devoted their best energies to sheltering themselves from the downpour. The Priory Stakes went to Althotas, who seemed wonderfully freshened up by his short rest, and proved far too good for Mazurka. The class of animals engaged in the County Cup was by no means up to the sample of many former years, and the useful Essayez had little difficulty in disposing of Preciosa, Discount, and four others. Luckily, there was little betting on the Lewes Handicap before the numbers went up, or the withdrawal of Exeter and Discord would have cost backers a good deal of money. Even then they were not happy in their efforts to find the winner, as Mr. Dodd (6 st. 12 lb.) was not much fancied, his 7 lb. penalty frightening many who might otherwise have supported him.

We may safely pass over Kempton Park for the present, but the Redcar meeting calls for a line or two, as some of the Leger horses ran in the Great National Breeders' Foal Stakes. Apollo and Jenny Howlett both performed very moderately, and as Experiment, who had very little pull in the weights with either of them, was good enough to win, the road seems clearer than ever for the placed horses in the Derby to repeat their performance at Doncaster.

The Canterbury cricket week was fairly fortunate with regard to weather, and some very fine play was exhibited. A most exciting finish between Eleven of England and Thirteen of Kent resulted in favour of the county by three wickets, a victory mainly due to the splendid batting of the Hon. Ivo Bligh (not out, 69). Mr. F. Penn (56 and 16) also did good service. On the other side, the Hon. A. Lyttelton (not out, 74) played a grand innings, and the bowling of Morley and Shaw was as effective as it invariably is. Gentlemen of England v. Gentlemen of Kent ended in a draw, the scoring being very heavy on both sides. The Hon. Ivo Bligh (23 and 73), Lord Harris (74), and Mr. F. Penn (74), were all in great form; and, for England, the Hon. A. Lyttelton (120) and Mr. R. A. H. Mitchell (65) were the principal contributors to a fine score of 363. Lancashire has beaten Derbyshire by 65 runs; and Lancashire v. Yorkshire ended in a draw, greatly in favour of the latter. The Australians, who defeated Gloucestershire cleverly last week, after the game seemed all against them, are still pursuing their victorious career all over the country, and it will be a thousand pities if a really representative team cannot be got together to play them at the Oval before the close of the season.

PATENT FOR SALE.—Intending to sell the Patents granted for my TRAVELLING-ETUI, called the Universal Case, I am, in quest of purchasers for the said Patents, or contractors for the right of manufacturing, either some States or for all Countries together. The manufacturing arrangements for Germany have been made. Concerning this case, I beg to remark that it contains all the principal articles, thirty-six different ones, for travelling or field use, in a small elegant Etui that can be carried in the breast pocket of the coat. Every article is of practical size and easy to handle. The Universal Case contains a complete dining set, all necessary toilet articles, a pocket dressing-case, medicine chest for travelling, complete writing material, sewing implements, tinder-box, almanack, and compass. The most favourable opinions, and acknowledgments by the press, in civil and military circles, have been passed upon it, especially in its present perfect and elegant make-up. Among others, accounts appeared in "Die Dresdener Gewerbevereins Zeitung," "Die Wiener Niederoesterreichische Gewerbevereinswochenschrift," "Die Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung," "Dingler's Polytechnisches Journal," "Die Wochenschrift des Vereins Deutscher Ingenieure," and several political journals.
In order to prevent impositions, as have occurred before, I would respectfully request that proposals be made to me verbally by intending purchasers, either in person or through duly-authorised parties.
